According to advices from Valladolid, Spain, a dangerous lunatic, who was about to be confined to an asylum, succeeded the other day in eluding the vigilance of his friends and rushed into the street. Here he fell upon a policeman, and wresting his sword from him, killed him with it. The lunatic then took possession of the man's revolver, and continued upon his wild career through the city, firing right and left as he ran. A number of police and gendarmes started in pursuit, emptying their rifles and revolvers at the maniac, who was eventually shot down, but not until he had seriously wounded three persons. The noise of the firing caused a panic, and the doors of houses and shops were hastily shut. The excitement did not subside for some hours.

What He Saved.

A prominent Democratic politician, who lived at Allentown, was appointed to the position of naval officer at Philadelphia during the second Cleveland administration. While in the city he made a host of friends and all of his waking hours, when he was not engaged in official duties, were spent with these gentlemen, attending various interesting and costly entertainments. At the expiration of his term of office he returned home, and his good mother, who was an old-fashioned German woman, said to him, curiously:

"John, what did you save during the four years you were in office?"

"Mother," he said, with a smile lighting up his countenance, "I accomplished wonders—I saved my life."

At the Museum.

"On this platform, ladies and gents," said the lecturer, "you see Sig. Pankey, the legless wonder, or human stump, who was reduced to the condition in which you behold him by a shark in the Indian ocean 14 years ago. Sig. Pankey, as you see, has no legs whatever, and his principal and only occupation nowadays, ladies and gents, is eating his head off. Proceeding to the next platform, I call your attention to the Egyptian mummy, supposed to be that of Rameses the Great."

There Are Others.

"Bings is afraid that he may be prosecuted for polygamy."

"Why, he is married to only one person, ain't he?"

"That is what he thought for a while, but now it appears that he married her whole family, and there are seven of them."

WARM WAS THE WEATHER HAPPY WAS THE HOUR

Beauty reigned supreme at Mark street lawn social last evening.

The grounds of the parsonage were illuminated by electric lights for the occasion, and table and chairs sufficient for the accommodation of all were arranged throughout the grounds.

The attendance was extremely encouraging to the Ladies' Aid Society of the church, under whose auspices the affair was conducted.

Two refreshment tables were provided, in charge of Mrs. Cheverill and Mrs. Westlake. They did a good business.

Mr. Callandar gave several enjoyable selections on his phonograph, and the Peterborough Orchestra supplied the rest of the music for the evening.

The Ladies' Aid of the church, of which Mrs. C. H. Coon is president, are to be congratulated on the success of the evening.

WEDDED IN THE WEST

A wedding of much local interest was solemnized in Paris on Thursday at the home of the bride's mother, 54 Banfield street, the contracting parties being Miss Lena A. Kent and R. J. Kidd, of Peterborough.

The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Dr. Griffin, of Toronto, cousin of the bride. The huge drawing room was a bower of beauty, decorated with ferns, palms and orange blossoms.

Leaning on the arm of her brother S. Way Kent, the bride entered the room to the strains of the wedding march, played by the London Harpers.

There were two hundred guests. The groom is manager of R. Neill's boot and shoe store, Peterborough, and very well known and popular in Peterborough.

Because of an epidemic of smallpox New Ferry, on the Mersey, has been quarantined.

King George has assumed the presidency of the Marlborough Club in succession to his late father.

FROM BEHIND THE LATTICED DOORS

One disorderly of last night was assessed $5.75 at the police court this morning, but a pal was discharged. The fine is to be paid in ten days.

They were mixed up in an impromptu programme of monologues and step dancing on Aylmer street in the vicinity of the fire hall.

MADE A MISTAKE.

Another thirsty one who made the entrance to Talbot's delicatessen for a bed was charged the usual $2.

SIX MONTHS.

An old hand at the vag business, by name, Oakley, was sent to jail for six months.

When told that his appearance did not tend to add to the attractions of the city, Oakley replied that he guessed "he wasn't the only one."

THEFT IS CHARGED

Young Man is Said to Have Stolen $56.00 Last Saturday

Charged with stealing the sum of $56 on Saturday last, Percy Breault elected to a summary trial and pleaded not guilty at the police court this morning.

The amount, it is alleged, was stolen from a Mrs. Bird.

The case was enlarged till Saturday the accused being remanded to jail from where he can get his release on furnishing $200.

THE FIELD OF BATTLE

Camp Petawawa,
26th June, 1910.

The 24th Battery arrived here on Friday morning, bright and early, horses and men in good condition after their long train journey. They immediately unloaded, and proceeded to their quarters, where they spent no time in unlimbering and tethering the horses. Forage was soon afterwards issued and the advance party had already provided for food for the men. The camp is all artillery, and we understand that we are the last corps to arrive at this camp with the exception of some of the western artillery corps, who will come here for the annual firing.

We have the best lot of horses in camp outside of the permanent corps, and they can be counted upon to give a good showing. The men are behaving themselves splendidly, although there is a strong feeling amongst a number of them that it is local option here.

Our sister corps, the 14th, is looking pretty well, too.

Major T. W. H. Young, of ours, is Acting O.C. of the Brigade, Capt. Leary is Acting Major of the 24th in his stead.

We have had only two slight mishaps. Our trumpeter had his arm sprained and one of the gunners received a kick from a horse, both being in the hospital, but are doing well, nothing serious and will be out at work in a day or so.

Taking everything all around, it looks as if we are going to bring credit to Peterborough.

The weather is very warm, but all are greatly pleased that so far those blamed pests, black flies, have not bothered us yet.

To-morrow we fire 40 rounds of blank, which will be the first test of how our horses will stand. There is no doubt, however, that they will get all right.

The [illegible] sickness [illegible] speaks well for the sanitary arrangements.

A number of the boys have not been able to write to their friends as they are not thoroughly settled down, having been kept pretty busy, but through the medium of your paper their parents and mates will be glad to know that they are all right.

More anon.

TO DEFEND THE SUIT

Legal Committee Instructed City Solicitor to Contest a Claim for $52.00 Damages

The Legal Committee of the City Council held a meeting this morning at which the City Solicitor was instructed to defend a suit for damages taken against the city by Edwards Bros. The amount of damages asked for is $52, and the action is brought about through the claim that a sewer connection on London street refused to work as it should.

The City Clerk was instructed to readjust the polling divisions so that eight more will be added. The present number is fourteen and the readjustment is made necessary by law and directly through the increase in the population of the city.

TEMPLARS TO MEET TO-NIGHT

Second Council May be Organized in the South End of This City

Rev. W. P. Fletcher, of Drayton, Ont., Grand Councillor of the Royal Templars, accompanied by Provincial Organizer Henry Allen, of Villa Nova, is in the city to-day in the interests of that very prosperous and and useful organization.

They are looking over the ground, in company with the local Select Councillor, Rev. C. H. Coon, of East City, and not only are they here to give instruction to the existing Council in its good work, but may also take steps towards organizing a second council in the southern part of the city.

To-night at 8 o'clock a meeting open to the public will be held in the Foresters' Hall, over the "Crystal," first door north of that popular place of amusement. Addresses will be given by Messrs. Fletcher and Allen, and should prove to be of considerable interest to temperance workers in general, as well as to the members of the order.

Strawberry Social

At the strawberry festival at the Temple last night, the band under the leadership of William Perrier, gave several splendid selections. The young people's band, with Bandmaster Ford, also pleased. The songsters sang, and twelve juniors gave a spirited chorus. There was a good crowd and the League of Mercy has something to the good in consequence.

IS GOULDTHRITE DEAD? SUICIDE MAY BE "PLANT"

Hat, Coat and Letters to Mrs. Gouldthrite Are Found on Detroit River Steamer, and Note to Effect That Missing Official Has Taken His Own Life.

Detroit, Mich., June 29.—The finding on the main deck of the steamer Eastern States, from Buffalo, of a straw hat, with what is supposed to be a death message written on the inside, led officials of the D. and C. to believe that F. Gouldthrite, aged about 40, of Rockliffe Park, Ottawa, ended his life in the Detroit River yesterday morning. That belief is not so certain to-day, and it is now considered likely that it was a "plant" to assist in his escape from the police.

The discovery of the hat was not made until after the boat had docked at 8 o'clock. "Look for my body in the Detroit River," the message written in the inside of the hat with lead pencil said. "Letters in overcoat. Send letters to my wife."

Gouldthrite occupied the lower berth of stateroom No. 28, and in this room the overcoat he mentioned and a suit case were found. One of the two letters in the overcoat was addressed to Mrs. Avaleene Gouldthrite, Rockliffe Park, Ottawa, Can., while the other bore only the name, "Avaleene Gouldthrite."

In the suit case was found a derby hat, and a shirt and collar, the latter bloodstained. From appearances an effort had been made to wash the bloodstains out of the shirt and collar. A safety razor was also found in the suit case, but there were no stains on it.

The last seen of Gouldthrite was at 11 o'clock Monday night, when he asked the boy in charge of the newsstand on the boat for some stamps. None of the passengers who have been located remember the man. The occupant of the upper berth in stateroom 28 has not been located. Gouldthrite had taken the boat at Buffalo, registering as J. Noa.

In support of the theory disregarding the evidences of suicide, it is pointed out that a cap was probably carried in the suit case, doing away with the necessity for the straw hat. The overcoat also is a heavy one and unnecessary for this weather. At the same time, in the inside overcoat pocket was found a pair of green socks with the garters attached, indicating that possibly Gouldthrite intended to try to swim to shore. If Gouldthrite jumped into the river near Detroit, as he said he would, it would have been between 7 and 8 o'clock, as the Eastern States enters the river at about the former hour. At that time it would seem that he would have been seen.

However, the leap, if made, was apparently from the lower deck, about a 10 foot drop, into the churning wake. It is not believed that any man could live in this.

Not Taken Seriously.

Ottawa, June 28.—Despatches from Detroit, conveying the information that F. S. Gouldthrite, fugitive superintendent of the stationery department of the Government Printing Bureau, had drowned himself in the Detroit River, are not regarded seriously here. It is generally believed that it is simply part of a preconceived plan to throw the police of the continent off his track. Whether this theory is correct, of course, may never be known.

At the same time it develops that on the day before he left Ottawa he was seen hovering on the bridge at Chaudiere Falls, but if he intended to end his life his nerve must have deserted him. He was a nervous wreck in the few days before he departed.

Mrs. Gouldthrite stayed a night at Ogdensburg, N.Y., after getting over the border, and is then stated to have gone west.

GOLD DISCOVERIES AT STEWART, B.C.

Causes Great Excitement in England—Outsiders Have Overestimated Discoveries.

London, June 29.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—The discovery of gold at Stewart, B.C., has caused considerable excitement here. Headlines in the press comprise: "Miles of Gold, British Eldorado of Fabulous Wealth, Mammoth Reefs." The agent for B. C. has had a hundred enquirers, to whom he states he has no official confirmation of the reported discovery, but a rush from London has already started.

A Cape Town despatch states that the majority of the newspapers there devote leaders to the reported discovery. The Cape Argus says: "If the find is as rich as has been stated, the world's growing hunger for gold will permit its absorption without causing any serious disturbance in prices, or preventing the profitable exploitation of the new-grade ore, which is so important to South Africa." The news has not affected the general market for gold shares.

Gold Discoveries Overestimated.

Vancouver, B. C., June 29.—While there is no authoritative announcement yet from Stewart, it is understood here that outsiders have overestimated the recent gold discovery. Some samples of alleged free milling ore turned out on assay to be only smelting ore.

NO TRUSTS FOR NEW ZEALAND

Wellington, N.Z., June 29.—Sir Joseph G. Ward, the Premier, in a speech yesterday foreshadowing the Government's anti-trust legislation, says that it possessed clear evidence that a powerful American company was exercising a restrictive and prejudicial influence in New Zealand. He added that it had created a monopoly of the worst kind, which must be stopped. The Premier did not name the company.

Hurled Bomb In Theatre.

Buenos Ayres, June 29.—Twenty persons were injured, six of them mortally, by the explosion of a bomb hurled from the gallery in the Theatre Colon during a performance. Among the injured are members of some of the most prominent families in the Argentine capital.

PASSENGERS ARE BUMPED

Winnipeg, June 29.—Passengers traveling in the observation car Mount Bonney, attached to No. 96, eastbound, had a severe shaking up on Monday near Rennie, Man., when that car and the sleeper ahead were derailed. The sleeper remained on the track, but the observation car ran over a low embankment, and thirty or forty people aboard were badly jolted.

Six Firemen Injured.

Paterson, N.J., June 29.—Three firemen were badly hurt, and $750,000 worth of property was destroyed, by a fire which started here at midnight in the Van Dyke Furniture Co.'s store. Three more firemen were injured by a falling wall yesterday.

TANK BURSTS; MANY HURT

Allentown, Pa., June 29.—Sixteen men were injured or scalded and thousands of dollars' damage was done yesterday when a ten thousand gallon water-tank above the roof of the National Silk Dyeing Co.'s plant burst, flooding the building.

The tank tore a hole in the roof, dropping timbers on the men beneath and breaking steampipes.

Some of the men were scalded by escaping steam, and others sustained broken arms or legs.

H. McCULLOCH NEARING END

Galt, June 29.—Infirmities of age has been telling heavily of late against Hugh McCulloch, sr., of the widely-known Goldie & McCulloch firm. He is now confined to his bed unconscious, and it is understood the end is very near. He has no specific ailment, but is succumbing to the weight of his 84 years.

The founder of a great industry, a man of large views, public-spirited, of philanthropic bent and genial, kindly personality, this aged citizen enjoys universal respect, and the news of his fast approaching demise will be learned with profound regret.

A Battle In Morocco.

Casablanca, Morocco, June 29.—The French punitive expedition in the Chaouia region has routed the partisans of Sheik Maelainin, a fanatical priest, who for several years has stirred up great agitation. The loss was heavy on both sides, the French losing thirteen killed and 71 wounded, mostly native troops.

Heat Hurts the Wheat.

Winnipeg, June 29.—Temperatures around 100 were recorded at a number of Manitoba points Monday and yesterday. This excessive heat is generally accompanied by strong drying winds. Alarming reports of damage to spring wheat, no doubt many of them greatly exaggerated, were received.

An Odd Cause for Strike.

Martin's Ferry, Ohio, June 29.—The Laughlin Sheet Mill of Whittaker Glessener & Co., employing 1,200 men, was closed yesterday by a strike of a large majority of the men refusing to work with others who refused to pay a ten per cent. assessment for strikers.

REPORTED CAPTURES INCORRECT

San Juan Del Sur, Nicaragua, June 29.—Great Corn Island and the whole Atlantic coast of Nicaragua, with the exception of the town of Bluefields, are in the hands of the Government.

Acoyapa has not been captured by the revolutionists, as was erroneously reported Monday.

It is also untrue that Estrada's men have captured the port of San Ubaldo, Nicaragua.

Developments yesterday do not bear out the reports of revolutionary successes reported here on Monday and transmitted to the United States.

ADVERTISE IN THE REVIEW.

ALTERATION IN THE OATH INTRODUCED IN COMMONS

First Reading Passes by a Majority of 341—Premier Says King Edward Had a Particular Dislike for the Formula—London Papers all Commend the Change—Other Statutes Protect the Protestant Succession.

London, June 29.—Premier Asquith introduced in the House of Commons the promised bill altering the form of the religious declaration required of the sovereign upon his coronation.

In the proposed text the doctrine of the Roman Catholic Church is not singled out for repudiation, but it is simply affirmed that the sovereign is a faithful Protestant. The paragraph is made to read thus:

"I do solemnly and sincerely in the presence of God, profess, testify and declare that I am a faithful member of the Protestant church, as by law established in England, and I shall, according to the true intent of the enactments which secured Protestant succession to the throne of my realm, uphold and maintain the said enactments to the best of my powers and according to law."

After a brief debate, the declaration measure passed its first reading by a vote of 383 to 42.

Premier Asquith introduced the bill in a crisp, lucid style, briefly surveying the history of the declaration. He pointed out that, curiously enough, at its inception in 1678 and for years afterwards it had nothing whatever to do with the accession to the throne and the sovereign was not required to take it, but the declaration was taken by all members of both Houses and those described as sworn subjects of sovereigns. In 1700 the declaration, originally framed for different purposes and for an entirely different class of persons, was introduced to protect the crown. The declaration was framed in a time of great popular excitement, under the belief that a great conspiracy had been hatched to murder the sovereign and to subvert the Protestant religion and to destroy the liberty of the people.

No candid persons would deny that the circumstances, in all material respects, had vitally changed since then. Moreover, the Roman Catholic subjects of the crown had grown enormously in number and strength. No one now doubted their loyalty or supposed their loyalty required to be hedged around by a special safeguard.

He pointed out the offensiveness of the declaration to the sovereign himself. It was known that the late King had found it a most repugnant duty to have to utter this preposterous formula, directed against so many of his loyal subjects. There were other statutes existing for safeguarding the Protestant faith and the Protestant succession to the throne.

Commenting on the accession declaration, The Mail says Asquith could not have chosen a more favorable moment for the bill. Sensible men of all parties will welcome the new declaration.

The Chronicle says the bill seems likely to be so far non-controversial, in that the opposition, as such, will not be against it. The Government's policy is logical and meets a real grievance fully, and therefore contains promise of a finality.

The Daily Graphic congratulates the Government on its courage in attempting to deal with a thorny subject, and says the comparatively small minority voting against the bill gives inaccurate impression opposition, but it is to be hoped that this opposition will be concentrated not on the principle of the bill, but the wording.

The News says the new declaration is preferable to the older formula. The Leader says there is no guarantee in the old form declaration withal. Its offensiveness to Catholics, which is not to be found in the new.

UP IN THE AIR, WHERE THE AIR IS RARE AND THE VISION GLORIOUS

Montreal, June 29.—Before an attendance fully equal to the opening day, and in weather conditions as perfect as could be, in the ordinary sense of the word, the third day of the Montreal aviation meet was concluded in sensational style.

The proceedings of the afternoon were delayed by a thirty-mile a minute wind, which kept up until half-past five, but the two and a half hours which followed were full of excitement.

Walter Brookins of the Wright team was the hero of the day, and accomplished two performances which place him absolutely in the front rank.

In the first, he started with the utmost daring before the heavy wind had gone down and, remaining up nine minutes and fifty seconds, under most trying wind and sun conditions, descended after covering seven miles, cutting a tremendous downward path before pulling his machine to a slant and alighting.

His performance has only been equalled under similar circumstances by Orville Wright and Paulhan, with whom he can now claim equality.

In a second ascent he mounted to an altitude of approximately 4,000 feet, the record being 4,164 feet, and was in the air 20 minutes 30 seconds. He met with an enthusiastic reception on reaching the ground. During this flight he attained such height that the airship appeared as if at a standstill.

Count de Lesseps made two exhibition ascents, at the conclusion of one of which his mechanics, waiting for the descent, had to jump into a ditch to escape injury. The time was 3 minutes 35 seconds. On his second flight he ascended higher than he has yet done in Canada, and in both descended in his accustomed graceful style.

Harmon's Feat.

New York, June 29.—Clifford B. Harmon, in a Farman biplane, sailed 31 times around the course at Mineola, L.I., last night, remaining aloft one hour and five minutes, covering approximately 45 miles and establishing what is believed to be a new amateur record for duration. Harmon is wealthy and has never competed for prize money.

Dirigible Wrecked.

Manchester, N.H., June 29.—Crashing into a roller coaster structure in Pine Island Park, near here, late yesterday, E. J. Parker of Rochester, N.Y., operating a dirigible balloon, had a narrow escape from death, when his airship was wrecked. Parker had just left the ground when he lost control of his machine and saved his life by clinging to the coaster structure.

TENDING TO COMPROMISE

Montreal, June 29.—It is evident from the situation last evening that neither the railways nor the men want a strike, and reading between the lines, utterances of Vice-President McNicholl and General Manager Fitzhugh appear more pacific than a few days ago.

The conference between union leaders and the two railwaymen lasted the better part of the day. Although the men demanded from both companies the same standard of wages east of Chicago, they also appear to have put a little water in their wine, and if both the men and the companies continue in the same amicable frame of mind, it can be said that a compromise agreement is in sight.

HORSE THIEF ARRESTED

The origin of the fire is unknown, but an investigation will be held into all allegation of threats from discharged employees.

CHILD FALLS INTO LAKE AT TORONTO

Toronto, June 29.—Owing to the total absence of any life saving appliances, the efforts of those who tried to save 11-year-old Russell Burkhardt, 18 Waterloo avenue, who fell from the old Dufferin street wharf, were fruitless. He had been playing with three other lads, and was drowned in 15 feet of water.

The little fellow with William and Alfred Clark, 16 Waterloo avenue, aged 10 and 15 years, and William Potter, 14 Waterloo avenue, aged 10 years, were running along the piles, when he fell in.

ZEPPELIN'S PASSENGER LINER WRECKED AMONG THE TREES

While Making an Excursion With Thirty-Three Persons on Board the Deutschland Finds Wind Blowing Too Hard to Make a Landing and Drifts Over Forest—Passengers Escaped.

Dusseldorf, Germany, June 29.—Count Zeppelin's passenger airship Deutschland, the highest developed of all the famous aeronaut's models, lies on top Touloburger forest, pierced with pine tree stems, a mass of deflated silk and twisted aluminum.

The thirty-three persons on board, after a wild contest with a storm, escaped uninjured, climbing down a rope ladder from the wreck on the pinetops.

Herr Colesmann, general manager of the new airship company; Chief Engineer Durr of the Zeppelin Company and Capt. Kansenberg, who personally had charge of the crew of ten, and twenty newspaper men sailed from Dusseldorf at 8.30 o'clock yesterday morning for a three hours' excursion. The objective point was Dertmund, about 35 miles from Dusseldorf, but at Niga head winds prevailed and an effort was made to reach Munster, a garrison town, so that a landing might be made on the parade ground by the aid of the soldiers, as it was realized that it would require a large number of them to hold the vast airship against the wind.

It was dangerous to attempt a landing in an open field, because of the storm, as the metal was likely to pound to pieces. In the high wind one of the motors refused to work and the other two were not powerful enough to make progress in the gale.

The airship drifted, swaying in the gale and violent gusts and sometimes leaning to an angle of 40 degrees, and all the while the enginemen were at work repairing the disabled motor. When this was done, all four screws were driven at their full power, under normal conditions the airship was capable of attaining a speed of forty miles an hour. But the helmsman was unable to keep his course and the great craft was swung about at the mercy of the wind.

Colesmann did not dare to turn the ship around for fear of overturning, and so decided to drift in the gale, which was now blowing at the rate of fifty miles an hour, toward Osnabruck, which is also a garrison station. If he missed that he could proceed to Zonn.

Suddenly he perceived a whirlwind coming, and ascended to a height of nearly 4,000 feet to avoid the worst of it. With the whirlwind came an avalanche of rain. After half an hour the Deutschland came down to permit of observations and it was seen that the Teutoburger forest lay below.

The forward motor again stopped, and Colesmann sent five of the correspondents to the aft gondola to ballast the vessels. The Deutschland sank rapidly, having lost much gas in the high altitudes, and dragged along the top of the dense forest. A heavy branch of a tree broke through the floor of the cabin amidships, throwing two of the guests to the floor. Other branches ripped through the gas compartments, and the whole great structure settled down 30 or 40 feet from the ground.

"It is not the fault of the Zeppelin system," exclaimed Herr Colesmann, "that is all right. That is our fault that the benzine ran out."

The airship, for which the Herr Colesmann Co. had just paid $137,500, looked like a wreck. The frames were broken, but the motors were not damaged. The silk was ripped and had fallen in a torn mass on the tops of the trees.

A rope ladder was swung down, and everyone was mustered below uninjured except for a bruise or two. The natives identified the spot as near to Wellendorf, eastward of Osnabruck. Many persons of the countryside must have seen the descent, and reports of disaster, explosion and death were widely spread. A party of officers and surgeons came by automobile from Hourg. The district governor and his wife with first aid to the injured arrived at the scene within half an hour by special train. A company of infantry was sent from Osnabruck and picketed the wreckage.

The disaster occurred at 5.30 in the evening. The early part of the flight was delightful, much like automobiling without the jarring. The airship maintained an altitude of about 500 feet, and during the first hour or two the passengers felt quite a contempt for the trains rumbling below, and spoke of automobiles as out of date. This was when the airship was sweeping gently across the country, but during the height of the storm the consciences of those aboard were not so easy.

YOUTH GIVEN A CHANCE; MUST RETURN MONEY TAKEN

Ross McCall has a chance to make good.

This morning when the enlarged hearing of the charge against the young lad, that of stealing $20 from Robert Beach, of Parker's Dye Works, was proceeded with, Mr. Gordon, who appeared for the accused, asked that on account of the youth's age he be given a chance to do better, with the understanding that the amount stolen be returned.

County Crown Attorney Wood was favorable to this being done and his Worship allowed the prisoner to go on suspended sentence, but ordered that he report to the Chief of Police once a month for the next year.

While a number of witnesses were called only two identified the prisoner as being the person to whom they paid accounts. Several had paid their bills through a second party on the delivery of the goods to their home.

McCall's explanation of his conduct was that he had lost the $20 from a hip pocket. The amount was his receipts for two days. On the morning that he did not put in an appearance at the works, he was sick. He, however, went to see Mr. Beach in the afternoon.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 29, 1910.

CANADA

In the year 1665 we were 3251 souls. In 1867 we had grown to 3,530,000. To-day we are about 8,000,000 strong. No one can dream our future. No one can deny but that in the not too dim far away Canada will be one of the foremost granaries of the world. We are not a gouty race, we have no special respect for a man just because he is a lord's son or his father is rich. We value men in Canada for what they are more than for what their fathers were. We are not bothered by custom or class. If a fellow is a good digger and ditcher, lives an honest, upright life, he is worthy of, and will receive as much respect as the great one. Some day when this pen is dead, when this paper is moulded, when this ink is unreadable, when time, by its irresistible hand, has placed all in the quiet of the grave, above us will be the throbbing of a mighty empire, 'tis regrettable, indeed, that one can not live to see that hour.

SQUASH HIM

Once more we would call the attention of our readers to the fly, that may be, at this moment, swimming for life in the milk pitcher, or is stuck in the butter on the table. Perhaps he is eating the cake or decorating the bread. The deeper the investigation of this nuisance the more it is found that the fly is not only a nuisance but a danger. There it is, squash him. He just came in from the manure pile or the garbage pail to share his supper with you. Kill him.

WHO CAN THROW THE STONE

Gouldthrite's name has been much before the public. He had nearly a million dollars a year to spend and in comparison his salary was a beggarly one. He had a family to support and has had years of sickness in his home. He fell a fugutive from justice and may be proved an embezzler of Government funds?

We are honest, many of us, because we never had a real good chance. Thousands are innocent rather than virtuous. We are what we are, very largely not so much because we willed otherwise, but because we were born that way. Many who are condemning this man as a thief would be thieves themselves if they were placed in his position.

WOMEN

The women's press club and their female friends didn't like it very well when J. S. Willison, editor-in-chief of the Toronto News, told them that in a few years, in his opinion, not only would the women have a right to vote, but would be found generally imitating the men in their smoking habits. And why not? Why have one set of morals and manners for a woman and another for a man? Why shouldn't a young woman smoke if she wants to? And what law is there against a woman going out for a [illegible] husband smokes. He also goes out on jollifications. He attends the club, gambles and sits up late. Is there any real reason why his wife hasn't got an equal right to be a dead game sport as well. This two sets or morals, one for man and another for women is all wrong.

A MAMMOTH EDITION

The Dayton Daily News is on the table, many colored dealing with every thing over the sun, around the sun and in the sun, on the earth in the earth, on land and sea, it weighs four pounds, has 210 pages, and is the largest newspaper ever published. This special and mammoth edition is published to draw attention to the fact that the paper's new building is completed. From the standpoint of size it is a success, for its many colors it is a winner, and for putting under a carpet it is just the thing. The mammoth paper is a joke. Few look through it all. It is a fad of the times and people will gradually come back to the real reason why a newspaper is published—to give the news.

AN INCIDENT

In another column of the Review is a brief news notice of a strange scene that took place at the Grand Trunk station when two Arabians at sunrise prostrated themselves in worship of God calling aloud in the name of their prophet. The men were followers of Mahomet, of which there are many millions scattered throughout the east.

These people are not ashamed of their religion like the Christians of the west. They prostrate themselves no matter where they are when their hour of prayer arrives. Many of us are ashamed to be seen in church and wouldn't walk down town with a Bible under our arm for a five spot. We are Christians. They are heathens.

THE POINT OF VIEW

THEIR DESTINY.

It appears that Nat Goodwin has married most everybody but Lillian Russel', and Lillian has married 'most everybody but Nat Goodwin. Why should they struggle longer to escape the inevitable?

REV. E. A. PEARSON.

Hamilton Spectator.

Rev. E. A. Pearson, the new pastor of the Central Methodist church, is a bowler, and on the occasion of his departure from Peterborough was was presented with a set of bowls by the Peterborough Club, of which he was a member. This sounds as if Rev. Mr. Pearson would make a popular pastor from the Hamilton viewpoint. It gives one the impression that there is something human about the man.

WHAT THINK YOU?

Pastor Preacher.

Except a man's ministry be momentous, he himself is trivial. If a body kept a lighthouse on a bleak coast, shut up of storms and prisoner of dangers, could his manual toil ever become bitter or commonplace, if so be that the keeper knew that on his fidelity to keep the lamp lit depended the safety of fleets of ships? The days might be wintry, dark, monotonous, the coast might be one barren, dreary stretch of sand, the lighthouse might shiver to the waves' onset crash on crash, the icefloe might cinch round slow and ruthless, but these would only clamp his lips a little firmer for his resolute task, to keep brave ships safe from grim catastrophe. The value of his deed makes his whole life one epic achievement. What think you, preacher, is your task sublime?

AN ABHORRED PEOPLE

THE RODIYAS OF CEYLON ARE DESPISED BY OTHER CASTES.

They Have No Intercourse With the Rest of the Island People—Contact With Them Is Regarded as Contaminating by the Higher Classes—Their Origin Is Veiled In Mystery—Shameless and Brutalized.

Abhorred and degraded as is no other community of people under the sun, with the possible exception of the Indian pariahs, are the Rodiyas, of Ceylon. Dwelling in their own separate villages, writes an Englishman, they are remote from other habitations and have no intercourse with the rest of the island folk. They are forbidden by immemorial custom to hold a single rod of land as private property; they are not permitted to follow any recognized trade or occupation; they may not cross a ferry or draw water from a well; if they meet another native on the road, they must cower away to one side lest their proximity should pollute him.

They must not wear any garment other than a scanty cloth tied around the waist and reaching only to the knees, male and female alike; they must keep the upper part of the body bare, and if they are covered when they meet another native they must strip off their covering, for not to do so would be a deadly insult. They gain their livelihood, if they labor at all, by the most degrading of work, making ropes from the hides of cattle, an occupation abhorred from its ancient association with the hangman.

They also prepare the skins of monkeys for use in making the native drum or tomtom. They are paid for these in kind. They deposit their handiwork outside the houses of likely purchasers; if the ropes and skins are needed, they are taken in and boiled rice is left in their place.

Naturally this people, living for centuries under a system so insulting, is in every way shameless and brutalized. Most of them live as itinerant beggars. They creep warily to the back of a house, and standing at the lawful distance, call monotonously for alms. So deeply ingrained is the sense of the degradation of these people and the contamination of their contact that not even the lowest servant will go near to turn them away. It is told of a Cingalese police officer that when ordered to arrest a Rodiya murderer, he replied: "Impossible, but I can go near his hamlet and shoot him."

The Rodiya beggars attend all places of festival, and especially the harvest home, and never fail to extort a contribution by their shameless importunity. The men are often well made and not ill-favored, sometimes tall and of a pleasant, light brown complexion. The women are many of them among the finest specimens of womanhood in the east. They wander about the countryside giving displays of dancing and juggling. Their moral code is very low.

Of late years, under the British Government, this unhappy tribe has made some advance in material things, though the social stigma remains. Many of them have reclaimed pieces of waste land, raised grain and vegetables, and by selling their produce in the larger bazaars where European civilization has blunted the edge of old time prejudices have made enough money to buy a piece of good land from the crown—from the crown, be it noted, for no private person would degrade himself by having money transactions with these folks; nay, there has been much difficulty in many villages where the Rodiyas have bought land even from the crown, for the villagers have thought it an insult that a Rodiya should be a property owner among them and have harassed him in every way in the occupation and development of his purchase.

Fortunately in the courts of law the Rodiyas can gain an impartial hearing, though here too they are handicapped by the difficulty of obtaining witnesses to give evidence on their behalf. As regards education their condition is deplorable. They could not be tolerated in schools along with other children; their presence would be an abomination. Nor have they had any schools of their own until recent years, when a mission has started work among them. Under these circumstances they have had no chance of improvement; they have sunk lower generation after generation.

The origin of the Rodiyas is lost in obscurity. Popular tradition among the Cingalese says that they are the descendants of royal huntsmen who were banished and degraded for an abominable crime; they served up human flesh before the King on a day when they had been unsuccessful in the chase. There is no reason to think that this story is anything more than a myth having its source in a natural tendency to assume a terrible cause for so terrible an effect.

Brahminical influences must not be lost sight of. Among Orientals in whose philosophy life was all misery and death a happy escape, the extreme form of punishment would not be death, but a continuance of life under conditions which should add to its misery by every conceivable means. So the Rodiyas would be the descendants of people condemned for various crimes to this form of punishment, and their ranks would be added to from time to time. There are, moreover, authentic records of cases where offenders guilty of high treason and similar crimes were cast out by the Kings of Kandy to join the Rodiyas, their wives and families being cast out with them.

This would explain the fine physique of this people and the good looks of their women, for some of the best blood of Ceylon must flow in their veins, recruited as they have been from the ranks of treasonable nobles and fair but frail princesses.

Lord Gladstone's Nickname.

The curious nickname—"Tuppence"—by which Lord Gladstone was known at Eton arose through his father taking twopence off the income-tax. Occasionally the name was varied to "Hoodee." Another name by which Lord Gladstone was known at school was "The Pocket Hercules," bestowed upon him by Lord Randolph Churchill, on account of his partiality for games, particularly football. Lord Gladstone first stood as a Parliamentary candidate for a division of Middlesex. This was in 1880, and everybody thought he would win. So did Lord Gladstone himself, and while driving with his sister on the day of the declaration of the poll he said, quite as a joke, "I say, Mary, if I'm beaten shall you faint?" And when they reached the counting-room he was beaten by 6,000.

An Old-Time Encyclopedia.

An ancient encyclopedia was that compiled by a Chinese. In 1403 an emperor of the Ming dynasty ordered that such a work should be undertaken, and in 1410 the 100 volumes were ready for block printing. This process in ancient China was accomplished by pasting written copy on blocks of wood and cutting the letters in relief. The work of printing the encyclopedia seemed so arduous that it was abandoned, and the work remained in manuscript. The books of the encyclopedia were one foot and eight inches in length and half an inch thick and were bound in yellow silk. They were stored in Peking and were burned during the siege of that city by the allied forces in 1901.—Harper's Weekly.

The Mystery of The Yellow Room

By GASTON LEROUX

COPYRIGHT, 1908, By BRENTANO'S.

CHAPTER XVII.

MLLE. STANGERSON APPEARED [illegible] THE THRESHOLD OF HER AN[illegible] ROOM.

"'Did you see him distinctly?' he asked.

"'Who?'

"'The man.'

"'Saw him! Why, he had a big red beard and red hair.'

"'That's how he appeared to me,' I said.

"'And to me,' said Larsan.

"The great Fred and I were alone in his chamber now to talk over this thing. We talked for an hour, turning the matter over and viewing it from every side. From the questions put by him, from the explanation which he gives me, it is clear to me that in spite of all our senses he is persuaded the man disappeared by some secret passage in the chateau known to him alone.

"'He knows the chateau,' he said to me; 'he knows it well.'

"'He is a rather tall man, well built,' I suggested.

"'He is as tall as he wants to be,' murmured Fred.

"'I understand,' I said. 'But how do you account for his red hair and beard?'

"'Too much beard, too much hair—false,' says Fred.

"'That's easily said. You are always thinking of Robert Darzac. You can't get rid of that idea! I am certain that he is innocent.'

"'So much the better. I hope so, but everything condemns him. Did you notice the marks on the carpet? Come and look at them.'

"'I have seen them. They are the marks of the neat boots the same as those we saw on the border of the lake.'

"'Can you deny that they belong to Robert Darzac?'

"'Of course one may be mistaken.'

"'Have you noticed that those footprints only go in one direction, that there are no return marks? When the man came from the chamber, pursued by all of us, his footsteps left no traces behind them.'

"'He had perhaps been in the chamber for hours. The mud from his boots had dried, and he moved with such rapidity on the points of his toes. We saw him running, but we did not hear his steps.'

"I suddenly put an end to this idle chatter, void of any logic, and made a sign to Larsan to listen.

"'There, below, some one is shutting a door.'

"I rise. Larsan follows me. We descend to the ground floor of the chateau. I lead him to the little semicircular room under the terrace beneath the window of the 'off turning' gallery. I point to the door, now closed, open a short time before, under which a shaft of light is visible.

"'The forest keeper!' says Fred.

"'Come on!' I whisper.

"Prepared, I know not why, to believe that the keeper is the guilty man I go to the door and rap smartly on it.

"Some might think that we were rather late in thinking of the keeper, since our first business, after having found that the murderer had escaped us in the gallery, ought to have been to search everywhere else—around the chateau, in the park—

"Had this criticism been made at the time we could only have answered that the assassin had disappeared from the gallery in such a way that we thought he was no longer anywhere! He had eluded us when we all had our hands stretched out ready to seize him—when we were almost touching him. We had no longer any ground for hoping that we could clear up the mystery of that night.

"As soon as I rapped at the door it was opened, and the keeper asked us quietly what we wanted. He was undressed and preparing to go to bed. The bed had not yet been disturbed.

"We entered and I affected surprise.

"'Not gone to bed yet?'

"'No,' he replied roughly. 'I have been making a round of the park and in the woods. I am only just back—and sleepy. Good night!'

"'Listen,' I said. 'An hour ago there was a ladder close by your window.'

"'What ladder? I did not see any ladder. Good night!'

"And he simply put us out of the room. When we were outside I looked at Larsan. His face was impenetrable."

CHAPTER XVIII.

Rouletabille Has Drawn a Circle Between the Two Bumps on His Forehead.

"WE separated on the thresholds of our rooms with a melancholy shake of the hands. Larsan's was an original brain, very intelligent, but without method. I did not go to bed. I awaited the coming of daylight and then went down to the front of the chateau and made a detour, examining every trace of footsteps coming toward it or going from it. These, however, were so mixed and confusing that I could make nothing of them. Here I may make a remark—I am not accustomed to attach an exaggerated importance to exterior signs left in the track of a crime.

"The method which traces the criminal by means of the tracks of his footsteps is altogether primitive. So many footprints are identical. However, in the disturbed state of my mind I did go into the deserted court and did look at all the footprints I could find there, seeking for some indication as a basis for reasoning.

"If I could but find a right starting point! In despair I seated myself on a stone. For over an hour I busied myself with the common, ordinary work of a policeman. Like the least intelligent of detectives I went on blindly over the traces of footprints which told me just no more than they could.

"I came to the conclusion that I was a fool, lower in the scale of intelligence than even the police of the modern romancer. Novelists build mountains of stupidity out of a footprint on the sand or from an impression of a hand on the wall. That's the way innocent men are brought to prison. It might convince an examining magistrate or the head of a detective department, but it's not proof. You writers forget that what the senses furnish is not proof. If I am taking cognizance of what is offered me by my senses I do so but to bring the results within the circle of my reason. That circle may be the most circumscribed, but, if it is, it has this advantage—it holds nothing but the truth! Yes, I swear that I have never used the evidence of the senses but as servants to my reason. I have never permitted them to become my master. They have not made of me that monstrous thing—worse than a blind man—a man who sees falsely. And that is why I can triumph over your error and your merely animal intelligence, Frederic Larsan.

"Be of good courage, then, Friend Rouletabille. It is impossible that the incident of the inexplicable gallery should be outside the circle of your reason. You know that! Then have faith and take thought with yourself and forget not that you took hold of the right end when you drew that circle in your brain within which to unravel this mysterious play of circumstance.

"To it, once again! Go back to the gallery. Take your stand on your reason and rest there as Frederic Larsan rests on his cane. You will then soon prove that the great Fred is nothing but a fool.—30th October. Noon.

"JOSEPH ROULETABILLE."

"I acted as I planned. With head on fire, I retraced my way to the gallery, and without having found anything more than I had seen on the previous night, the right hold I had taken of my reason drew me to something so important that I was obliged to cling to it to save myself from falling.

"Now for the strength and patience to find sensible traces to fit in with my thinking—and these must come within the circle I have drawn between the two bumps on my forehead.—30th October. Midnight.

"JOSEPH ROULETABILLE."

CHAPTER XIX.

Rouletabille Invites Me to Breakfast at the Donjon Inn.

IT was not until later that Rouletabille sent me the notebook in which he had written at length the story of the phenomenon of the inexplicable gallery. On the day I arrived at the Glandier and joined him in his room he recounted to me, with the greatest detail, all that I have related, telling me also how he had spent several hours in Paris, where he had learned nothing that could be of any help to him.

The event of the inexplicable gallery had occurred on the night between the 29th and 30th of October—that is to say, three days before my return to the chateau. It was on the 2d of November, then, that I went back to the Glandier, summoned there by my friend's telegram and taking the revolvers with me.

I am now in Rouletabille's room, and he has finished his recital.

While he had been telling me the story I noticed him continually rubbing the glass of the eyeglasses he had found on the side table. From the evident pleasure he was taking in handling them I felt they must be one of those sensible evidences destined to enter what he had called the circle of the right end of his reason.

When he had finished his recital he asked me what I thought of it. I replied that I was much puzzled by his question. Then he begged me to try, in my turn, to take my reason in hand "by the right end."

"Very well," I said. "It seems to me that the point of departure of my reason would be this—there can be no doubt that the murderer you pursued was in the gallery." I paused.

"After making so good a start, you ought not to stop so soon," he exclaimed. "Come, make another effort."

"I'll try. Since he disappeared from the gallery without passing through any door or window, he must have escaped by some other opening."

Rouletabille looked at me pityingly, smiled carelessly and remarked that I was reasoning like a postman or—like Frederic Larsan.

Rouletabille had alternate fits of admiration and disdain for the great Fred. It all depended as to whether Larsan's discoveries tallied with Rouletabille's reasoning or not. When they did he would exclaim, "He is really great!" When they did not, he would grunt and mutter, "What an ass!" It was a petty side of the noble character of this strange youth.

We had risen, and he led me into the park. When we reached the court and were making toward the gate, the sound of blinds thrown back against the wall made us turn our heads, and we saw at a window on the first floor of the chateau the ruddy and clean shaven face of a person I did not recognize.

"Hello!" muttered Rouletabille. "Arthur Rance!" He lowered his head, quickened his pace, and I heard him ask himself between his teeth: "Was he in the chateau that night? What is he doing here?"

We had gone some distance from the chateau when I asked him who this Arthur Rance was and how he had come to know him. He referred to his story of that morning, and I remembered that Mr. Arthur W. Rance was the American from Philadelphia with whom he had had so many drinks at the Elysee reception.

"But was he not to have left France almost immediately?" I asked.

"No doubt; that's why I am surprised to find him here still and not only in France, but above all, at the Glandier. He did not arrive this morning, and he did not get here last night. He must have got here before dinner, then. Why didn't the concierges tell me?"

I reminded my friend, apropos of the concierges, that he had not yet told me what had led him to get them set at liberty.

We were close to their lodge. M. and Mme. Bernier saw us coming. A frank smile lit up their happy faces. They seemed to harbor no ill feeling because of their detention. My young friend asked them at what hour Mr. Arthur Rance had arrived. They answered that they did not know he was at the chateau. He must have come during the evening of the previous night, but they had not had to open the gate for him, because, being a great walker and not wishing that a carriage should be sent to meet him, he was accustomed to get off at the little hamlet of Saint Michel, from which he came to the chateau by way of the forest. He reached the park by the grotto of Sainte Genevieve, over the little gate of which, giving on to the park, he climbed.

As the concierges spoke I saw Rouletabille's face cloud over and exhibit disappointment—a disappointment, no doubt, with himself. Evidently he was a little vexed, after having worked so much on the spot, with so minute a study of the people and events at the Glandier, that he had to learn now that Arthur Rance was accustomed to visit the chateau.

"You say that M. Arthur Rance is accustomed to come to the chateau. When did he come here last?"

"We can't tell you exactly," replied Mme. Bernier. "We couldn't know while they were keeping us in prison. Besides, as the gentleman comes to the chateau without passing through our gate he goes away by the way he comes."

"Do you know when he came the first time?"

"Oh, yes, monsieur! Nine years ago."

"He was in France nine years ago, then," said Rouletabille, "and since that time, as far as you know, how many times has he been at the Glandier?"

"Three times."

"When did he come the last time, as far as you know?"

"A week before the attempt in the yellow room."

Rouletabille put another question, this time addressing himself particularly to the woman:

"In the grove of the parquet?"

"In the grove of the parquet," she replied.

"Thanks!" said Rouletabille. "Be ready for me this evening."

He spoke the last words with a finger on his lips as if to command silence and discretion.

We left the park and took the way to the Donjon inn.

"Do you often eat here?"

"Sometimes."

"But you also take your meals at the chateau?"

"Yes, Larsan and I are sometimes served in one of our rooms."

"Hasn't M. Stangerson ever invited you to his own table?"

"Never."

"Does your presence at the chateau displease him?"

"I don't know; but, in any case, he does not make us feel that we are in his way."

"Doesn't he question you?"

"Never. He is in the same state of mind as he was in at the door of the yellow room when his daughter was being murdered and when he broke open the door and did not find the murderer. He is persuaded since he could discover nothing that there's no reason why we should be able to discover more than he did. But he has made it his duty since Larsan expressed his theory not to oppose us."

Rouletabille buried himself in thought again for some time. He aroused himself later to tell me of how he came to set the two concierges free.

"I went lately to see M. Stangerson and took with me a piece of paper on which was written, 'I promise, whatever others may say, to keep in my service my two faithful servants, Bernier and his wife.' I explained to him that by signing that document he would enable me to compel those two people to speak out, and I declared my own assurance of their innocence of any part in the crime. That was also his opinion. The examining magistrate after it was signed presented the document to the Berniers, who then did speak. They said what I was certain they would say as soon as they were sure they would not lose their places.

"They confessed to poaching on M. Stangerson's estates, and it was while they were poaching, on the night of the crime, that they were found not far from the pavilion at the moment when the outrage was being committed. Some rabbits they caught in that way were sold by them to the landlord of the Donjon inn, who served them to his customers or sent them to Paris. That was the truth, as I had guessed from the first. Do you remember what I said on entering the Donjon inn? 'We shall have to eat red meat—now!' I had heard the words on the same morning when we arrived at the park gate. You heard them also, but you did not attach any importance to them. You recollect when we reached the park gate that we stopped to look at a man who was running by the side of the wall, looking every minute at his watch. That was Larsan. Well, behind us the landlord of the Donjon inn, standing on his doorstep, said to some one inside, 'We shall have to eat red meat—now!'

"Why that 'now'? When you are, as I am, in search of some hidden secret, you can't afford to have anything escape you. You've got to know the meaning of everything. We had come into a rather out of the way part of the country which had been turned topsy turvy by a crime, and my reason led me to suspect every phrase that could bear upon the event of the day. 'Now,' I took to mean, 'since the outrage.' In the course of my inquiry, therefore, I sought to find a relation between that phrase and the tragedy. We went to the Donjon inn for breakfast. I repeated the phrase and saw by the surprise and trouble on Daddy Mathieu's face that I had not exaggerated its importance so far as he was concerned.

"I had just learned that the concierges had been arrested. Daddy Mathieu spoke of them as of dear friends—people for whom one is sorry. That was a reckless conjunction of ideas, I said to myself. 'Now,' that the concierges are arrested, 'we shall have to eat red meat.' No more concierges, no more game! The hatred expressed by Daddy Mathieu for M. Stangerson's forest keeper—a hatred he pretended was shared by the concierges—led me easily to think of poaching. Now, as all the evidence showed the concierges had not been in bed at the time of the tragedy, why were they abroad that night? As participants in the crime? I was not disposed to think so. I had already arrived at the conclusion, by steps of which I will tell you later—that the assassin had had no accomplice and that the tragedy held a mystery between Mlle. Stangerson and the murderer, a mystery with which the concierges had nothing to do.

WHEN YOU ARE SICK

It doesn't take a good doctor to tell that — most any one could do that much, but to tell exactly the nature of the disease sometimes calls for the utmost skill of the Physician. Most anybody by a few simple tests could tell that your eyesight was defective and that you needed glasses of some kind, but to diagnose the exact trouble and fit the right glasses calls for more than ordinary skill.

We have made that one thing a study for years, and we are in business to bring wrong eyes and right glasses together. Satisfaction Guaranteed.

NEW CHIEF OF POLICE TO BE HERE ON FRIDAY

Woodstock Sentinel-Review:—

Thursday, June 30th, will be the last day in which Chief Thompson will occupy his official position in Woodstock, and on that night he leaves for Peterborough. No new chief has been appointed or advertised for as yet, but it is understood that arrangements have been made for carrying on the work. An action taken by the police commissioners at their last meeting is illustrative of the kind of economy which is being practiced; Chief Thompson, having worked six months of the year, asked that he might be allowed the last week of June free of duty, so that he might get ready for departure and have a few days holidays, as he did not expect to get any in Peterborough this year. The chief is entitled to two weeks' holidays in the year, with full pay, so he was, apparently, only asking what was his due. The reply to this request was that he might have the holiday, but his pay for the week would be substracted from his salary, so he decided to work and take his full pay. This seems very small to the ordinary mind, and by no means a fitting recompense for Chief Thompson's good work in the department.

THE MIGHTY HAAG'S SHOWS PERFORMANCE OF QUALITY

Quality is always superior to quantity. This seems to be the motto of Haag's shows.

The performance is just as long as a bigger circus, and the spectator loses nothing of what goes on. There is always something of interest transpiring and the programme is presented without confusion, and the entertainment is really more satisfactory than in the case of a circus with a bewildering jumble of acts of various kinds, of which one is able only to catch an occasional glimpse, if he tries to follow them all.

One of the outstanding features of Haag's shows is the work of the surprisingly clever troupe of Japanese balancers and jugglers, who are called upon to contribute generously to the programme. Thunders of applause greeted their marvellous performances, and they quite surpass any artists of their kind ever seen here.

The acrobatic work in general is very skilful and interesting, the horsemanship of the bareback riders is of a high order, the trained elephants display almost human intelligence, and the clowns cause no end of real amusement.

A well balanced band of twenty pieces, which plays a medley of popular selections in sympathy with the various phases of the circus, assists with fine effect.

GOSSIP FROM CAVANVILLE

Special to the Review.

Cavanville, June 29.—A highly successful garden party was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Chris. Sisson on Monday evening. A baseball match was to have been pulled off between Cavanville and the Anglican team at Millbrook, but owing to a disagreement between the contending parties the game was cancelled. The entertainment consisted of a number of songs sung by Miss Jessie Allan, of Millbrook, and Miss Elgin Lough, of Ida. A play was also given entitled "Who's Who, or All in a Muddle," which was very amusing. Mr. Charles McNeil played the leading role. The performers were as follows:—Miss J. McNeil, Miss E. Lough, Jean Touchburn and Arthur Vance. The proceeds totalled $82.

PERCY BALL BUSY.

Mr. Percy Ball held a bee on Friday at the grist mill, where the work of putting in a new flume and re-arranging the power is in progress. A large number of people took part in the work and rapid progress was made. It will be about two weeks before the mill will be in operation.

A RUNAWAY.

An exciting runaway occurred on Tuesday, when a spirited team of horses belonging to Sandy Braithwaite ran away. After running for a considerable distance one of the horses fell while turning a sharp corner, dragging its mate down with it and tangling themselves up so bad that the harness had to be cut before they could be freed. The damage done was slight.

Mr Harry Staples has purchased a two-year-old stallion from Richardson Bros, which, judging by appearance, should prove a winner.

Mrs. Dick Morton, of Omemee, is visiting at the home of her brother-in-law, George Morton, 10th line of Cavan.

Jim Hilton, of Toronto, the contractor for the digging of the long swamp drain, is down here superintending the taking apart of the dredge used in the above work, preparatory to shipping it to Beaverton, where it has been loaned to a company there for ditching purposes.

Joe Staples, breeder of high class class horses, had tha misfortune to lose a fine registered mare last week, due to an attack of colic.

Jim Lamb, of Penetang, who has been visiting his brother, Mr. Sep. Lamb, of Cavan, left for home on Friday.

HENDERSON A FOOTBALLER.

Robert Henderson, the young man who was hung in Peterborough jail on Thursday last, was a familiar figure around here this time last year, he having figured prominently on the Cavan football team. One of his last requests a few days before his execution, was that he might be permitted to see his old employer, Mr. Lou Winslow, of Cavan, also a couple of friends, Jim Foster and Nelson Fisher. This request was accordingly granted, and on the Tuesday previous to his death, the above trio drove into town and held a few minutes' conversation with the prisoner, with the exception of Nelson Fisher, who was barried from seeing him on account of being under age.

Mr. Matt. Hutchinson and wife are home from the Coast. Mr. Hutchinson is staying at the home of his parents. He speaks well of the country out there, and it evidently agrees with him, judging by appearances.

A COMING EVENT.

A garden party will be held in Cavanville on July 6th. A baseball match will be pulled off between Mt. Pleasant and Cavanville-on-the-lake. The services of the Welcome brass band have been secured for that date.

The anniversary services were held in Cavanville Methodist church, on Sunday. The pulpit was occuiped both morning and evening by the Rev. Mr. McKenzie, of Bailieboro. A large crowd attended the services.

Miss Elva Elliott, of Ida, leaves on Tuesday for Calgary, where she intends to make a protracted visit.

A highly successful excursion was held on Friday, June 24th, under the auspices of the Farmers' Institute of West Durham. The party went down the river, stopping at the various points along the way. Dancing was also indulged in.

NARROW ESCAPE.

What might have proved a fatality was narrowly averted by the horses breaking away from the horse rake, which they were running away with. Norman Cootes, a hired man, working for Harry Staples, was out raking hay on Saturday morning, when the the tongue of the hay rake fell down, the shock throwing Norman under the rake. The horses immediately started to run, dragging the unfortunate man voer the rough ground. Fortunately the bolt of the whiffletree broke, thereby releasing the victim from his dangerous position. It was some time before the young man recovered from the shock sufficiently to enable his rescurers to learn the extent of his injuries, which were found to be slight.

The Rev. Frank Farwell, recording secretary of the Sabbath School Association, addressed the congregation of Cavanville Methodist church on Sunday last. There was a large attendance.

HARD LUCK.

Tom Hutchinson has had a streak of hard luck this spring, having lost three foals and a full grown horse, which would represent quite a sum of money at the present day prices of horseflesh.

Called to Montreal

Under the above heading the Montreal Witness says in part:

The Rev. James G. Potter, B.A., of St. Andrew's church, Peterborough, who has been unanimously called to McVicar Memorial Presbyterian church, is the son of Mr. James S. Potter, superintendent of the Sailors' Mission, under the auspices of the Upper Canada Tract Society. While pastor in Toronto and Peterborough Mr. Potter's special forte has been among the boys and young men, and is in consequence deeply interested in Sunday school, Christian Endeavor, Brotherhood and Y.M.C.A. work. The moral and social reform work has laid claim to a large share of his time and efforts throughout the city and county of Peterbroough.

The Big Family Prize At the T.A.S. Picnic

Here's to the man who has the largest clan,
To call his own,
His worldly wealth will be increased
By many a precious stone;
When Cook will dream about his scheme
To reach the frozen pole,
With glowing grins he'll toast his shins—
He gets a ton of coal.

HEROIC TREATMENT.

The Chinese Doctor's Methods Were Severe, But Efficacious.

This is the Chinese medical treatment which a missionary underwent: Having been thrown from his horse and left fainting in the street, he was carried into a house, where a doctor soon visited him. "He made me sit up in bed, placing near me a large basin filled with water, in which he put a thick piece of ice to reduce it to freezing point. Then, stripping me to the waist, he made me stretch my neck over the basin while he continued to pour the water on my neck with a cup. The pain caused by those nerves which take their rise from the 'pia mater' was so great and insufferable that it seemed to me unequaled, but he said it would stanch the blood and restore me to my senses, which was actually the case, for in a short time my sight became clear and my mind resumed its powers. He next bound my head with a band drawn tight by two men, who held the ends while he struck the immediate parts vigorously with a piece of wood, which shook my head violently and gave me dreadful pain. This, he said, was to settle the brain, which he supposed had been displaced, and it is true that after the second operation my head felt more free.

"A third operation was now performed, during which he made me, still stripped to the waist, walk in the open air supported by two persons, and while thus walking he unexpectedly threw a basin of freezing cold water over my breast. As this caused me to draw my breath with great vehemence and as my chest had been injured by the fall, it may easily be imagined what were my sufferings under this affliction, but I was consoled by the information that if any rib had been dislocated this sudden and hard breathing would restore it to its natural position. The next proceeding was not less painful and extravagant. The operator made me sit on the ground and, assisted by two men, held a cloth upon my mouth and nose till I was almost suffocated. 'This,' said the Chinese Aesculapius, 'by causing a violent heaving of the chest will force back any rib that may have been dislocated.' The wound in my head not being deep, he healed it by stuffing it with burned cotton. He then ordered that I should continue to walk much, supported by two persons; that I should not sit long or be allowed to sleep till 10 o'clock at night, at which time I should eat a little thin rice soup. He assured me that these walks in the open air while fasting would prevent the blood from settling upon the chest, where it might corrupt. These remedies, though barbarous and excruciating, cured me so completely that in seven days I was able to resume my journey."—London Lancet.

Odd Use For a Piano Stool.

"We have requests for all kinds of odd pieces of furniture," said a dealer the other day, "but I was somewhat surprised when a customer asked for an odd piano stool. There was nothing particularly unusual in the request itself, but I was rather surprised to find that neither style, color nor kind of wood seemed to have much influence on the mind of the would be buyer.

"'What is your piano like?' I finally asked curiously. 'Oh, I haven't any piano!' was the reply. 'You see, I have just joined a swimming class, and we all have to have a piano stool to practice the different motions on. There is nothing so good to learn on, our teacher says, unless one can actually go into the water itself every day'."

Amazing Fencing.

Thirty-three years ago Lord Tankerville, who was then Lord Bennet, defeated left-handed the first and second prizemen with the single-sticks at the Artillery sports. Again, when he was fifty-one he threw a stone one hundred and thirteen yards. On one occasion he was challenged by a friend to single-stick contest, and, actually beat him blindfold; all he could see of his opponent was his feet, but that was quite enough.

FAREWELL RECEPTION TO REV. AND MRS. BASTOW

The Newtown Register, of Elmhurst, New York city, of Thursday, June 23rd, has an account of a farewell reception tendered by the congregation of the Woodside Baptist church, to Rev. and Mrs. Bastow, whose faithful and self-sacrificing work on their behalf has been instrumental in much good being done. Rev. Mr. Bastow was presented with a purse of gold amounting to $210 and the following address was read;

Dear Mr. Bastow,—Having listened with a great deal of pleasure and profit to your discourses during the past two and a quarter years, and having further enjoyed your fellowship in our homes, we, the members of the First Baptist Church of Woodside, desire on this occasion to express our appreciation of your labors in our midst.

Your resignation has caused us much regret and we should have hesitated to accept it, were it not for your insistence that retirement from active work made such a course desirable and imperative. The strong attachment that has grown up in our hearts towards you both is of the purest and warmest. for you have labored amongst us faithfully and self-sacrificingly.

Your preaching has been scriptural, affectionate, spiritual, simple and practical. In our home you have been a welcome visitor and have left a cheering and blessed influence not to be forgotten.

Mrs. Bastow has faithfully and efficiently led us as superintendent of the Sabbath school. You both have helped to bring us into close fellowship with our Lord and Master, and we shall always cherish a deep interest in your welfare.

In parting, we pray that you will soon regain your health and vigor, and that you may be spared to render many more years of valuable service for the Master. We pray God's blessings to follow you wherever your paths may lead.

Yours in Christ,
LILY BRYANT,
Church Clerk.

KIND WORDS FOR CLERGYMAN

The Brantford Courier says the following of Rev. E. A Taylor, B.A., son of Mr. and Mrs. Anthony Taylor, Westcott street, and a recently ordained clergyman of the Church of England;

Sunday marked a decided step forward in the parish of St. Jude's. For nearly 40 years it has been ministered to by clergymen single-handed, and a rector in Jude's parish always had an abundance of work on his hands the year round. It is due to every succeeding incumbent of the parish to say that he was a good and faithful man. Under the incumbency of the present rector, Rev. Rural Dean Wright, the work has gone beyond the power of any one man to perform alone The rector has secured a curate to assist him in this large field, Rev. A. E. Taylor, B.A., who began his duties on Sunday. Mr. Taylor is a young man well equipped for the work. He comes from Peterborough, his native city, where he received his early training at the Collegiate. Later he entered Toronto University, from which, after a most creditable course, he graduated. He is also a graduate of Wycliffe College, Toronto, which affords a most thorough theological training. On June 5th last, he was ordained at London by the Bishop of Huron. Mr. Taylor made a very favorable impression yesterday where he officiated in the parish.—Brantford Courier.

Sir,—In view of the restrictions imposed on the users of lawn services by the Peterborough Water Works, I would respectfully request that a reasonable pressure be given to the water. At the present time the service is almost worthless during the hours stated.

MORESTEAM.
Peterborough, June 29, 1910.

To the Editor of the Review.

Sir,—What came nearly being a disastrous fire in a back yard in a congested part of the city, was caused by setting fire to a heap of rubbish, principally loose paper. There is a by-law against such a nuisance, but no action has been taken by those in authority to enforce the law, although complaints have been made time and again. There is even more objection to it on account of the injurious effects of the smoke on health and the discomfort of breathing the same, than to the danger of the fire spreading. It seems strange that there should be a disposition not to enforce the law, lest it might incur the displeasure of the law-breakers.

Yours, etc.,
PURE AIR.
Peterborough, June 29, 1910.

The Foreigner

Two Arabian immigrants, kneeling on the Grand Trunk station platford, with their faces turned toward the morning sun, and praying earnestly, was the sight witnessed by passengers at the G.T.R. station early Monday morning.

The two men were swarthy, strong, typical looking natives of Arabia. It is the custom of the Arabian to pray three times a day regularly, and they are not ashamed to be seen doing so, oftentimes praying on the streets and in public places.

Mr. Abraham Low was able to converse with the two men, who arrived here on their way to Port Hope, in their own language.

The men expect to get employment in Port Hope, and left for there yesterday.

HAVELOCK HAPPENINGS

Special to the Review.

Havelock, June 29.—Everything is ready for Havelock's big celebration on July 1st. The committees in charge of the day's sports have worked hard and the result is a programme with something doing from early morning until far on in the night. A large attendance is expected from all points of the compass. The committees have arranged for a passenger coach to be attached to a west-bound train from Havelock about 8.30 p.m. for the convenience of those as far west as Peterborough. The horse races will be a good attraction this year. Purses of $100, and $60 having been hung up, so that some good speeding is expected on the local track that day.

MADOC TO PLAY HAVELOCK.

By Warsaw defaulting the game that was ordered by the executive to be played here on June 20th, the Havelock juniors win the semi-finals of the Midland junior series. They now play the winners of district three, Madoc, in the finals of the league, but as yet the date has not been settled.

The Havelock juniors have made a good showing so far this year, not having yet lost a game and having only one goal scored during the whole season. The Madoc eleven are a very husky bunch, but the locals are confident that they can put up a good stiff argument for the Midland league honors.

MAN HURT.

Mr. David McQuaig, of Blairton, returned on Saturday from Georgian Bay on an enforced holiday on account of a very badly lacerated hand. On Friday last while talking to a man in a saw mill he accidentally put his hand backwards on to a cutting table where a small saw was revolving and as a result had his hand very badly cut, requiring the services of a doctor and will keep him from work for some time.

Matriculation and junior teachers' examinations commenced at the school here on Monday. There are five pupils writing, two on the matriculation and three on the teacher's examination. These are the first examinations that have ever been held here as final examinations for High school work.

The Tree Moved.

M. Thouar during his explorations in South Africa had occasion to apprehend an attack from hostile natives. He kept his men on the watch for six days, though they were worn out with fatigue.

"Once a sentinel slept leaning on his gun," he wrote. "I woke him and warned him that one of the least dangers of such a sleep was that a Toba spy would fall on him and kill him with his own gun. While we talked I observed that a little tree which I had noticed earlier now occupied a different position. I fixed my attention on it and saw that it moved almost perceptibly. I had seen such a phenomenon before. The sentinel and I pretended to sleep. The tree continued to approach. Suddenly I raised my gun and fired. We rushed forward. There lay a Toba wounded in the leg and grasping the branch with which he had disguised himself as a tree."

A Memorable Ride.

The most memorable ride in English history was that of Sir Arthur Owen, which placed the Hanoverian dynasty on the throne of Great Britain. The act of settlement by which in 1701 Parliament elected the house of Hanover to the British throne was passed by only one vote, and this casting vote was given by Sir Arthur Owen, the member of Parliament for Pembrokeshire. He arrived at Westminster, dusty and travel worn, only just in time to record his vote, having ridden with furious haste from Wales for the purpose on relays of horses kept at all the posting houses along the route. To that ride Britain owes its Georgian era; hence its Queen Victoria and her descendants.

A gamekeeper going his rounds on Campsie estate on May 10th, discovered a pheasant's nest with 28 eggs.

A Burns Relic.

The old mahogany bureau desk used by Robert Burns at Ellisland and Dumfries and at which the poet wrote "Tam o' Shanter," "Auld Lang Syne," and many of his other famous lyrics, realized $3,000 at a sale in London the other day. Of unimpeachable pedigree, this relic aroused keen interest, the bidding opening with an offer of fifty guineas. From $500 the bidding was almost exclusively confined to Mr. Quaritch and the auctioneer's clerk, who apparently had a private commission, but at $3,000 Mr. Quaritch was left victor, having secured at by no means an exorbitant figure one of the most intimate momentoes of the great poet in existence.

Prince of Parodists.

Four years ago Mr. Owen Seaman, who declared at the Authors' Club recently that "humor was a great solvent against snobbishness, vulgarity, false rhetoric, hypocrisy, and shams," succeeded Sir Francis Burnand as editor of Punch. Long before that he had earned the title of "Prince of Parodists," and at Cambridge he bore off laurels both in the schools and on the river. Apparently, however, his tutor did not appreciate him, for report says that he wrote Mr. Seaman the following testimonial: "Mr. Seaman has been a member of Clare College for three years. During that period, so far as I am aware, he has been guilty of no serious moral delinquency."

Wonders In the Equine Foot.

The foot of a horse is one of the most ingenious and unexampled pieces of mechanism in the whole range of animal structure. The outside hoof is made up of a series of thin vertical laminae of horn, about 500 in number. Into this are fitted about 500 more thin laminae, which belong to the coffin bone, both sets being elastic and adherent. The edges of a quire of paper inserted leaf by leaf into another quire will furnish a good idea of the arrangement of the laminae in all the feet, amounting to about 4,000. These are distributed in the most secure manner and in a way that every spring is acted upon in an oblique direction. Verily there is a display of nature's wonder everywhere.

Central Asia.

The people living in the cotton belt of central Asia represents a conglomerate of all the races and nations that in ages past have inhabited these regions, from pure Aryans to full fledged Mongols. They all adhere to the Mohammedan faith and speak various dialects of the Tartar-Sart-Bokhara language except in the southwestern part, where the influence of the Persian language is felt.

WHITSUNTIDE CUSTOMS.

Remarkable Observances Are Found In Rural England.

It would be idle to inquire the origin of some of the extraordinary customs which still obtain at Whitsuntide, for the beginning of many of them is lost in obscurity.

All the history that can be gathered of them is that they have been observed from time immemorial, and that local sentiment will not permit them to die out.

Not the least remarkable is one that is dear to the hearts of the good people of Birdlip, a usually quiet village in the Cheltenham district. Down a hill which the neighborhood boasts a substantial round cheese is set rolling, with the younger and more active of the population in hot pursuit.

Before it can be captured many of the pursuers are rolling, too, but none so fast as the cheese, which generally falls to one of the crowd who is able to keep his feet. It would be interesting to know the why and wherefore of this cheese-rolling, but there is nothing to show this.

The County of Northampton has a Whitsuntide observance which is only kept up once in twenty years, the next year for it being 1923. It dates from the reign of "Good Queen Bess," and the scene of it is the village of Corby.

Its object is to commemorate a charter granted to the inhabitants by Queen Elizabeth which freed the knights of the shire from certain military duties, and other folk from serving on juries at Northampton.

In the small hours of Whit-Monday morning the roads and byways of the parish are stopped up, and toll is demanded of all who would pass thereby. Should this demand not be complied with the pedestrian is seized and hoisted on to a stout pole, upon which he is carried through the village, escorted by the jeering populace, whose lung-power is given full scope for the occasion.

Whitsuntide is essentially a religious season, and perhaps one of the most remarkable celebrations of it is that which takes place in Cornwall. It is held in what is known as the Gwennap Pit, and in commemoration of the years gone by when John Wesley conducted religious gatherings there.

The service is of a most impressive character, and on occasion it has attracted more than 10,000 devout Wesleyans to the spot. No distance is to great for them to travel, and some have been known to come from such distant parts of the country as Lancashire and Yorkshire.

The mention of Cornwall recalls the fact that in the year 1540 a church there was struck by lightning during the course of the service on Whit-Sunday morning. Many of the worshipers were injured, the storm being described as "awful" and as a "fearful judgment" upon the church.

Superstition is not quite so rife in these enlightened days, but there are still people in this country who get up unusually early on Whit-Sunday morning in order to see the sun rise.

They firmly believe that whatsoever is asked of the Almighty at the instant the sun rises on Whit-Sunday morning is sure to be granted. In years gone by this was a widely accepted superstition, in which there are still believers to be met with in the hills and valleys of Derbyshire and elsewhere. They declare, too, that their requests have been granted.

A veracious chronicler rejoicing in the appropriate name of "Arise Evans" has it on record that he "went up a hill to see the sun rise betimes on Whit-Sunday morning and saw it at its rising skip, play, dance, and turn about like a wheel."

In those days many marriages used to result from the mingling of the sexes in the various games and amusements peculiar to Whitsuntide. The young men and maidens came more together at that season than at any other of the year.

It was looked upon as the first "blush" of summer, and as lending itself to outdoor pastimes retarded by the cold winds of the earlier days of Eastertide and spring.

Did Not Trust Council.

Under a somewhat curious will left by Mr. Patrick Murphy, whose estate totalled $517,000, the town of Newry, County Down, Ireland, has been bequeathed a large portion of the property to pay off the local municipal debt. Mr. Murphy states in his will that as the bequest may be insufficient for the purpose, and "as I have no confidence either in the ability or good sense of the present urban councillors, it is my will that my residuary personal estate shall not be handed over to the board for a period of 21 years from the date of my death," the interest and dividends to be invested. Mr. Murphy directs that certain houses are not to be sold, but the rents are to be applied in perpetuity for the reduction of the rates.

"Spooks" Terrorize Family.

A curious story comes from Dunfermline. The recent occurrence of four fires in rapid suc[illegible] household of Thomas Watson, has had the effect of terrorizing the family. These outbreaks have each had their origin in a cause which is inscrutable to the occupants of the house, and Mrs. Watson, who hails from the Highlands, imagines that a supernatural agent has been at work. She, with others in the domicile, have lately been living in dread. Afraid to go to bed o' nights, members of the family have sat up to watch for further manifestations of the strange, uncanny, "unseen power."

Employs 30,000 Hands.

Sir Weetman Pearson, who has had much to do with the development of the oil-fields of Mexico, and is likely to be a principal figure in the forthcoming "oil war," is head of the great firm of contractors bearing his name, which employs something like 30,000 hands. Engineer, dock, tunnel, railway, and bridge builder, Sir Weetman has carried out some gigantic contracts. It was the construction of the Blackwell Tunnel that brought him his title, and other works standing to his credit are the Southampton Docks, the Milford Haven Docks, and the Pennsylvanian Railroad tunnels.

King George has assumed the presidency of the Marlborough Club in succession to his late father.

WORKMEN ARTISTS.

England Is Showing Some Quite Remarkable Work.

A short time ago the papers referred to a wonderful collection of pictures by German working men which had been collected by Dr. Adolf Levenstein, of Berlin. An article dealing with these pictures was published in The Strand Magazine, and the editor of that famous monthly invited working men of this country who had devoted their leisure to drawing and painting to send specimens of their work.

The result of the invitation was astonishing. Hundreds of paintings and drawings were forwarded by British working-men. Dozens of trades were represented, including such diverse occupations as gardener, house-painter, lighterman, paperhanger, compositor, railway porter, weaver, coal-miner, waiter, and many others.

A selection of these pictures is published in the May number of The Strand, and the general artistic merit is such as to cause one to marvel that so much talent lies hidden amongst men whose daily toil secures for them a wage averaging from $5 to $6 per week. The article published in The Strand commences with an initial picture-letter worthy of Walter Crane. It has been drawn by H. W. Ford, who for eight years worked as a bottle-washer to a firm of wine merchants, and whose weekly wage amounts to $5.50.

But this humble artist has higher thoughts than bottle-washing. "Whenever I discover a book like Burke's 'Sublime and Beautiful'," he says, "at the lending library, I reckon life's worth living. But you don't get much sympathy. Some people imagine that artistic cellarmen, bricklayers' laborers, etc., are simply wasting their time. Keeping pigeons or poultry, or canvassing for insurance companies in one's spare time, would, according to them, be much more sensible. But they are narrow-minded, that is all."

A shoemaker named Robert Mallett, earning $5.50 per week, has executed a beautiful landscape depicting the village of Costessey, near Norwich. He has never been taught painting. A sign-writer employed by the gas company at Beckton sent in a realistic study of a lion. "The Adoration of the Shepherds," a striking picture painted by Alfred Bonheur, a house painter of twenty-four, earning $7 a week, "deserves great praise," to quote the words of The Strand's art editor: "The composition and lighting show a sense of truth, as well as of the dramatic needs of the scene."

Kitchener Anecdotes.

During the South African War Lord Kitchener, who has returned to England after eight years' work abroad, entrusted a certain captain with an important commission. Unfortunately, the captain's horse cast a shoe. Hence a disastrous delay. "Very sorry," was the general's sarcastic comment, "but I cannot rest my plan of campaign on a horse's shoe or an officer's carelessness." Thus it is that "K. of K." impresses upon his officers the futility of excuses and the necessity of being prepared for anything and everything. No man, it is said, has a greater faculty of estimating a man's capabilities at a glance. But he made a mistake on one occasion.

It was during the Boer War, at Vredefort Road Station, that he started fitting out extempore mounted infantry columns. He determined to equip and send them into the field at once. He went to the waiting-room to look for officers, and found a single man in occupation. He was smart and well-dressed, and pleased Lord K.'s critical eye. "You will command a corps of mounted infantry I have just raised," said the general. "Very good, sir. What will my duties be?" "Don't you know your duties?" "My own—yes, sir." "Then don't argue. What is your regiment?" "Blankshires, sir." "What rank?" "Master tailor, sir." Kitchener hurriedly left.

Famous Miniatures Found.

A curious discovery of valuable miniatures has been made at West Haddon, near Rugby. For some years an elderly lady, Miss Fouquier, a descendant of a Huguenot family, had lived with a shepherd and his wife, and when she died a few weeks ago it was found she had bequeathed her belongings to the couple. The goods were not thought to be worth more than $100, but it is reported that when the cupboard of the ancient writing cabinet was opened a rare collection of miniatures was discovered, all of famous artists, as well as fine old prints and antique china pieces of rare value. They will bring in a decent fortune for the shepherd and his wife when they are put up for sale.

Wooed With Music.

Among the Yao Midos, one of the many Burmese-Tartar people, the young men woo their wives absolutely without words, but to the sound of music. On the first day of winter they have a great feast, at which all the marriageable girls gather and listen to the music made by the bachelors, who [illegible] the "desire tree," each [illegible] favorite instrument. As the maiden he loves passes him the youth plays louder and more feelingly. If the girl ignores him and passes on he knows that she will have none of him; if she steps up to him and lays a flower upon the instrument he jumps up, grasps her by the hand, taking care not to drop the flower, and they go away together.

Distilery In Bath Room.

Raiding premises in a crowded neighborhood of Belfast, Ireland, the other day, the police found an illicit still in the bath-room in full working order, together with a quantity of spirits, and a second still was found in another room. The front of the premises was fitted up as a grocer's shop. The gas used for the still was drawn direct from the main, and not through a meter. The amateur distillers were fined $500 each.

London Shop Clerks.

The London employer in hiring a shop clerk insists on an agreement that the latter shall not go into business for himself or enter the employ of another within a certain distance radius and within a certain time limit after leaving his employer.

R. B. Stack, out on $10,000 bail at his son, has forfeited his bail because of failure to appear in court.

THE FIRST WOMAN.

An Old Eastern Legend That Tells How She Was Created.

The last section "Of [illegible] Finger of the Moon Reddened by the Setting Sun" in the Sanskrit work called the "Surging of the Ocean of Time" contains a legend concerning woman's creation which is commonly credited throughout India and which runs somewhat as follows: At the beginning of time Twashtri, the Vulcan of Hindu mythology, created the world. But when he wished to create a woman he found he had employed all his materials in the creation of man. There did not remain one solid element. Then Twashtri, perplexed, fell into a profound meditation. He roused himself to do as follows: He took the lightness of the leaf and the glance of the fawn, the gayety of the sun's rays and tears of the mist, the inconstancy of the wind and the timidity of the hare, the vanity of the peacock and the softness of the down on the throat of the swallow, the harshness of the diamond, the sweet flavor of honey, the cruelty of the tiger, the warmth of fire, the chill of snow, the chatter of the jay and the cooing of the turtle dove. He melted all these and formed a woman. Then he made a present of her to man. Eight days later the man came to Twashtri and said:

"My lord, the creature you gave me poisons my existence. She chatters without rest, she takes all my time, she laments for nothing at all and is always ill." And Twashtri received the woman again. But eight days later the man came again to the god and said:

"My lord, my life is very solitary since I returned this creature. I remember she danced before my singing. I recall how she glanced at me from the corner of her eye, that she played with me, clung to me." And Twashtri returned the woman to him. Three days only passed, and Twashtri saw the man coming to him again.

"My lord," said he, "I do not understand exactly how, but I'm sure the woman causes me more annoyance than pleasure. I beg of you relieve me of her."

But Twashtri cried, "Go your way and do your best!"

And the man cried, "I cannot live with her!"

"Neither can you live without her," replied Twashtri.

And the man went sorrowfully away, murmuring: "Woe is me. I can neither live with her nor without her."

Tragedy of Errors.

A peculiar case of mistaken identification took place in connection with a drowning fatality at Limerick recently. The inquest had been postponed for the purpose of identification, and two women arrived at the workhouse where the victim lay, in quest of a missing relative. One of the women, having seen the body, emphatically declared that it was that of her son, and the declaration was corroborated by her companion, a sister-in-law. While the women were deploring their loss, the son in question appeared on the scene, to the great relief of his female relatives, and the huge surprise of everybody in general.

CHARMING DIVERSIAN FOR YOUNG GIRLS

GARDEN entertainments either for charity or for pleasure are becoming more and more popular every year, and as this sort of affair seems particularly suitable for young girls to give, those who wish to entertain their friends and at the same time raise money for a favorite charity should consider the possibilities of the garden before seeking some other form of entertainment.

It is natural that this sort of entertainment should have originated in England, whose lovely gardens afford so beautiful a setting for out of door diversions of all kinds. English girls begin early to do their part toward assisting the charities of the neighborhood in which they live, and they have found these outdoor entertainments extremely popular and more pleasing as a means of raising money for charity than any other. These entertainments are also interesting to those taking part, and they offer all sorts of opportunity for the exercise of taste and skill in decoration and costuming, as well as for the dramatic and musical talent available.

One of the most charming garden entertainments which can be given by young girls is the acting old English or French ballads in costume, with a background of natural trees and flowers and an accompaniment of quaint old-time airs especially appropriate to the ballads that are being given. Sometimes instead of choosing the garden proper for the stage a bit of woodland on the estate or the corner of a meadow is found to be more picturesquely situated for such a purpose. Usually it is best to choose a spot which has a group of trees or tall bushes at the back, so that the natural scenery affords a stage background, and no other need be provided. A most delightful open air play given last summer took place on the edge of a small, beautiful piece of woods next to a meadow. For the stage a corner of the woods in which there were only a few scattered birches and oaks not close together was chosen. The audience sat in the meadow, chairs and rugs being provided.

In selecting a spot in which to give the entertainments, however, it is important to take into consideration the ballads which are to be acted. A meadow may seem more appropriate than a garden, and again the garden setting may be required. Of course, not every one will be able to find a number of available spots where a large gathering of people can be seated, but where there are unlimited resources of this kind the nature of the out of door scene required should be carefully considered.

ARRANGING the costumes for such an affair is most interesting, and the girls who take part will find it most absorbing work to plan the costumes, even if they have not the time to do all the sewing. The help of some one who understands the art of costuming is most desirable if one is aiming to produce really beautiful stage pictures. Old prints and paintings of the period which is being used are of the greatest assistance to those planning the costumes. They will supply all the suggestions that are necessary and also give accurately the colors which are required to produce the old-time effect.

It has been found in costuming these plays that rich and expensive fabrics are rarely necessary for producing proper effects for out of door scenes, but that color is a most important item to be taken into consideration. An artist in dyeing fabrics is a most valuable addition to the forces that are arranging the ballad entertainments. The hues which are desired are not those which would probably be at the command of professional dyers unless a color guide were provided. Usually there is some one in a circle of acquaintances who is skilled in the mixing of colors and who will be able to get the effects required on small pieces of material, which can then be given to the professional dyers to follow. This is especially necessary where there are to be groups or choruses of dancers and singers all dressed alike or in the some color schemes.

The ballads are sung or recited to music by one or several girls, and there are others who act the scenes or who give tableaux to represent the story of the ballad. Sometimes the actors are also those who speak or sing the lines of the ballads. Then there are other arrangements where dancers and singers come in at the end of each stanza and join the principal performers.

It requires considerable dramatic talent and musical feeling as well as training to be able to arrange the ballads for acting and to select appropriate music, but this makes the performance all the more of an achievement, and after all so many persons are possessed of some ability of this sort that it is not usually found difficult to secure the required assistance in arranging and staging the ballads. Many girls now understand fancy dancing and folk dancing, while singing both in French and English is a part of every girl's education. With the help of an experienced musician airs which are suitable to the ballad and not too much known to have lost their interesting quality may readily be selected. These are performed by an orchestra usually, although charming effects have been obtained by using quaint and unusual instruments which accord better with the nature of the performance.

SOME of the most attractive of the old English ballads are so tragic that one would hesitate to produce them on such an occasion when the mildly sad romance of other days seems more in harmony with the idyllic scene than the genuinely tragic. There are also, many ballads which are much too warlike for such an occasion or which deal solely with masculine adventure. These, of course, would not be appropriate, for, while the girls may take certain sorts of masculine parts or call in their brothers to act them, the preponderance of sentiment in the selected ballads is usually feminine. Romance, mild romance, if such is to be found in ballad form, is the favorite subject for these entertainments.

Some of the most beautiful ballads which offer possibilities for garden acting are "The Friar in Orders Grey," "Barbara Allen's Cruelty," "Fair Margaret and Sweet William," "King Cophetua and the Beggar Maid," "Fair Rosamond" and "The Keys of Heaven." This last mentioned ballad is a great favorite with English girls who go in for this sort of thing. There are also a number of quaint old songs, not, strictly speaking, ballads, which are exquisite for this purpose. They do not carry out the story so definitely as a ballad, but they offer the most charming opportunity for the presentation of dances, tableaux and posing, as well as delightful songs and orchestral accompaniment. One of the most idyllic of these for an open air performance is the "Phillida and Corydon" of Nicholas Breton, in which there are opportunities for delightful stage pictures. "Jack and Joan," from Thomas Campion's "Two Books of Airs," is also attractive.

"Cupid in a Bed of Roses" is another charming song that might well be acted in a garden, and there is still another poem particularly suitable for a rose garden or a country place whose roses are an important feature, and this is the legend of the angel and the moss rose.

"The Nut Brown Maid" is a delightful ballad which might easily be adjusted to acting purposes, although in its original state it is too long. It has the advantage of being in dialogue, so that there need be no arrangement of this sort. Those who find that it is too difficult to arrange for acting out the ballads in detail may be sure that their entertainment will be quite as interesting if they simply illustrate the ballads and songs by detached scenes accompanying the singing or recitation.

French ballads may be beautifully acted in the manner described for the English ones. They have a different form from the English ballads and their style of construction, with a refrain, would make the bringing in of a chorus or group of dancers at the end of each stanza most attractive. One of the ballads which might be most effectively rendered and which would offer an opportunity for charming and unusual costuming is François Villon's "Ballad of Old Time Ladies," in which a succession of the famous and beautiful women of the past are recalled to mind by the poet. As he recalls such widely varying characters as to place and state as Helen of Troy," "Broad Foot Bertha" and "Joan the Maid," one may easily see the advantages in costuming which the ballad offers, while the refrain, "Where are the roses of yesteryear?" may be substituted for that of the ballad to make it particularly appropriate to a garden.

The chansons de France, which include the simplest songs of French little folk, are some of them also charming for acting and singing in a garden. These are suitable for younger girls, and the quaint little costumes which are appropriate make them desirable as a change from the English. Boutet de Monvel has illustrated a collection of these songs so beautifully that it is only necessary to look at the drawings for all the costume suggestions one needs. One of the best of these songs for acting out of doors is the "Chanson de la Mariee," which describes the greetings of friends to a newly wedded couple. In another song a quaint little girl dressed in an adorably simple peasant costume is making a visit to her garden and talking to a bird. There are other songs in the same book which would be charming when sung and acted out of doors.

ANOTHER form of garden entertainment is that of showing garden scenes from famous paintings. These may be arranged as tableaux behind a screen and back of a huge gilt picture frame which has been erected in the garden. This is a most effective way of showing them. It is not necessary to use only garden scenes; any paintings showing rural life are suitable for copying. The garden scenes may also be shown, not as tableaux, but merely as groups of correctly costumed persons.

There are many other garden entertainments besides the ballads which are successfully given by young girls. A floral fête in which there is a masque of the seasons or a masque of the hours is usually most attractive and a great deal of fun for the girls taking part.

At garden entertainments given for charity tea is served, sometimes for an additional charge and sometimes included in the price of admission. There may also be sandwiches and ices for sale at attractive booths, and flower souvenirs of various kinds.

Chintz Hangings for the Boudoir

THIS is to be distinctly a chintz summer. Not only are gowns trimmed with chintz, parasols made of chintz and even hats adorned with great chintz bows, but for the boudoir chintz is unquestionably the favorite hanging. Wall papers with chintz colored effects have to a certain extent given way to plainer two toned effects in stripes and moire, but there is always the relieving border and the curtains and furniture coverings to correspond carried out in gay flowered chintz.

With a plain wall paper and a plain colored carpet or rug all effect must depend upon the trimmings of the room, and these trimmings are now carried out all in chintz or cretonnes of one pattern. Curtains, furniture coverings, bed spread, table cover, lounge cover and its cushions, cover for the dressing table and even the scrap basket, work box, stocking bag and the hundred and one small boxes for ties, ribbons, &c., in which every properly orderly girl delights, all must be of the same bright, cheerful flowered chintz.

Any girl can work out her own chintz room with comparatively small cost. For the bed cover, the curtains and the covering for the upholstered chairs the actual material need be the only expense, and from the leftover pieces most of the small boxes can be fashioned. Fortunately chintzes can now be had at any price from 10 cents up to $3, $4 and perhaps more a yard, so that while the costly French and English chintzes are very beautiful in texture and coloring the cheapest materials are to be found extremely pretty in design, so that the possibilities of every purse can be satisfied.

To bring out the coloring and the design of a pretty piece of chintz more noticeably the curtain, table cover or whatever it may be should be bordered with a three to five inch bias band of plain material—silkoline, linen or something of the sort. When there is a flowered paper on the wall this combination is especially good, as the plain band makes a break in the mass of trellis work and flowers.

To make a cover for a dressing table the wooden top must first be carefully measured, and even if the cover must be a shaped piece two inches at least should be allowed on all sides for shrinking. Cretonne and chintz wash easily, but they are bound to shrink with even the most careful handling. A straight band of the silkoline can be used in the border if the top of the bureau is perfectly straight, but if curved a bias piece will be easier to work with. If the dressing table is at all a valuable piece of furniture it is worth while having a glass top fitted for it, to go on over the chintz or lace cover. Glass tops are being used more and more for this purpose and since the days of the marble tops nothing so nice has been found. For both neatness and cleanliness the glass top is strongly to be advised. Long cotton tassels at the four corners of the table cover make a pretty finish, and the cushions on the divan and even the bed spread and roll cover may have a like adornment.

So much in vogue is chintz this year for all articles in the boudoir that it may even be used on the backs of the toilet articles upon the dressing table. Already all desk furnishings are made in chintz, the scrap basket being, of course, covered to correspond with the rest, while the picture frames, both those on the wall and those with their own stands, as well as the books on the table, all have their summer covering of pretty, cheerful chintz.

With this material to be had at any shop and in patterns and shades that are charming in even the least expensive qualities all that is necessary for a girl to turn her tiny room into a charming nest for herself and her pet belongings is the expenditure of a little time and patience, with also a fair stock of good taste in the selection of the material. For a small room a small pattern is always advisable, and it is best to keep to one or two colorings only and to make one of these more prominent than the other. Pink is generally most effective, as it is always easier to find an attractive pink flowered design than one in blue.

When blue is the favorite shade, however, it must be had, but it is best to keep strictly to ribbon and garland effects, with just a bit of pink, perhaps, in the design. Blue roses are too foreign to nature, even in these days of Burbank miracles, and the more closely nature itself is studied in any flower design, just the same as in hat trimming, the more satisfactory to live with will the pattern prove.

PRACTICAL TALKS BY THE APRIL GRANDMOTHER

"PIE and iced liquid luncheons should be blacklisted by every schoolgirl who realizes the important part which food plays in establishing or in improving whatever beauty has been bestowed upon her at birth," remarked the April Grandmother as she critically studied the luncheon menu of her granddaughter's favorite tea room.

"During the 'bread and butter' period when from four to six hours are passed in the classroom five days of the week in addition to the time devoted to riding, driving and fencing lessons, such tremendous demands are made upon the strength of a growing girl that she absolutely requires a substantial midday meal. It should include plenty of rye, whole or wheat bread, several days old, as the freshly baked variety not only refuses to assimilate with the rest of the meal but is liable to form into a pasty lump that is less readily digested than such immoral concoctions as pies, tarts and frosted layer cakes. On the contrary, butter should be sweet and fresh and liberally applied even though the complexion may show evidences of a disordered stomach. Many girls afflicted with facial blemishes believe that this mortifying condition of the skin is due to the inability to digest fats, and, without consulting a physician, they make the mistake of suddenly eliminating butter from their diet, thus ultimately losing the ability to produce the secretion suited for the digestion of fats and render themselves peculiarly susceptible to tuberculosis.

"In addition to a generous quantity of bread and butter," continued the April Grandmother, "the schoolgirl's luncheon should include at least one warm dish composed of eggs or meat, a seasonable green salad dressed with pure oil, some fresh fruit and a cup of hot, weak, clear tea. If a vegetarian meal is preferred, stewed cauliflower, potatoes and oyster plant, boiled peas, Lima beans and carrots are not only nourishing and invigorating, but will work wonders for a spotted or sallow complexion.

"As the average schoolgirl is of reed-like slimness, she may safely drink plenty of cool, non-iced water with her luncheon. A good way to take water into the system is to slowly sip several glasses while waiting for luncheon to be served, as that helps to prepare the stomach for its food. The meal should be finished with another long, slow drink. This liberal flushing is a better skin tonic than any outward application lotion ever invented, but as fresh water taken at meal time is certainly fattening, the girl who is prone to stoutness as well as to an almost perpetual thirst, would best squeeze a lemon into her individual water pitcher. The acid of lemon is apt to prevent fat from forming; it is said to ward off rheumatism and it certainly clears the complexion.

"Have a regular hour for eating your luncheon," concluded the April Grandmother, "and do not let anything interfere with it. Because the midday meal is regarded as an informal one, that is not a good reason for eating it at twelve o'clock to-day and at half-past two o'clock to-morrow. The penalty for omitting it is usually a headache, a pair of dull, heavy eyes or a capricious temper."

Midnight—Go Home.

MADAME GRUNDY has taken a stand on the subject of early hours and decrees that all smart functions of the season shall end at midnight.

This may not altogether please the girls who like to dance until dawn, but it is a sensible social measure which the elders mean shall be observed.

While all night parties are no doubt great fun for the young people, they are a great strain on even the most rugged of the girls and most demoralizing to the young men who have to go to business.

The married set, too, feel it, except those exceptional few who can sleep the greater part of the day and revel in turning night into day. These will be loath to adopt Madame Grundy's latest decree, but the leaders of society, both here and in London, intend to enforce it.

PUTS BABIES ON DEFENSIVE

Writer Calls on Them to Give Reasons for Their Admission to the Country.

We desire to call attention to a flagrant violation of one of our most important statutes.

Under our immigration laws, no alien can land in this country who has no money and no capacity. If he comes from a foreign shore, he must be identified and duly passed upon.

What is really happening? Every day, nay, almost every minute, in this country babies are being born who really have no right to enter our domain. Not only this, but they are calmly allowed to be here and not the slightest protest is made against them.

It is true that recently some effort has been made to discourage their presence. But this is by private individuals, and not by the authorities.

Every baby comes here from a foreign shore. He is a vagrant. Why, he hasn't even clothes on his back. In a large percentage of cases he is sickly, and ought to be kept out by quarantine authorities, if by no one else.

These intruders ought to be guaranteed under the pure infant act, or else they should be promptly shipped back to the sender, with instructions to at least provide them with the necessities of life before they land among a free people.—Lippincott's.

GOOD JOKE ON THE OFFICERS.

Long and Stern Chase of College Students That Ended in Something of a Fiasco.

Once, in a college town, the rumor that students were carrying concealed weapons reached the ears of the local police. Their chief at once issued stringent orders that the heinous practice should be stopped.

In this particular college town the students were no different from students the world over; in other words, they dearly loved to bother the police to the best of their ability. So one day a group of them nonchalantly passed a policeman, and one of the students, in so doing, put his hand to his hip pocket. Then, as if recollecting himself in time, he hastily withdrew it and looked sheepishly at the policeman.

"What have you in that pocket?" the latter asked sternly.

Instead of answering, the student and all his companions, as if panic-stricken, started to run. Immediately the policeman blew his whistle, summoned several of his companions, and started after the group. After a considerable chase in the course of which the policemen were badly winded and roused to a great pitch of anger, all the students were cornered, and summarily ordered to deliver up whatever they had in their hip pockets.

Meekly they obeyed. Each one carried a corncob. The remarks of the policemen cannot possibly be recorded.

The American Voice.

I think myself that what, as much as anything else, laid the foundation of the American voice was the nervous ill-health, lasting over three or four generations, of the American woman. Up to the middle of the nineteenth century, and even beyond, foreigners were surprised when they came across a healthy looking woman. The isolation of frontier life, the general tension of the American climate, malaria, bad diet and worse sanitation, combined to turn one-half the nation into semi-invalids; and the thin, sharp, slovenly, staccato tones of the American women were as often as not the result of physical and nervous depression. I do not say that ill-health was the sole cause, but it is undoubtedly the fact that as the health of Americans has improved so have their voices.—London Chronicle.

The Erudite Barber.

"I don't see," said the erudite barber as he stropped his razor, "why our customers complain that men of our profession are exceedingly loquacious. All who enter the modern barber's place of business should know what to expect. Every barber shop is a 'tonsorial parlor' nowadays. The word 'parlor' literally means 'talking room,' just as 'parliament' means an assembly of talkers. Parlor and parliament have the same root as the French 'parlez,' which means to talk, and then there is the English 'parley,' to exchange words. Moreover—"

"Moreover," gasped the victim in the chair, "I am in a very perilous position."

The Crimean Crime.

Kinglake was all for war. "He used to say," says Mme. Novikoff, "that peace would emasculate the world. 'Besides,' he continued, 'population when too dense is not at its best.'" He did not like Bright. Mme. Novikoff told Kinglake one day that Bright had made a curious remark about the Crimean statue in Pall-Mall. "The inscription," he had said, "should be altered. The 'a' should be put before the word 'crime,' and not at the end!"—London Chronicle.

Why Church Bells Any More?

Every once in a while a discussion arises as to the use of church bells. Their utility was long ago given up. Their beauty is still defended by some. But in the end the discussion comes back to the question of location. In the country, where distances are long and sounds are softened, a church bell is still enjoyable. But in a city street, where hundreds and thousands are close by, the sound is to most of them a noisy clangor.

Y.M.C.A. NOTES

There was a good turnout at the Oval last night in the weekly athletic contest. The events were the standing broad jump, and quarter mile run, and were keenly contested. Hall won the broad jump with nine feet two inches, N. Rae was second, W. Flowers third.

The quarter mile was won by W. Willis in the good time of 54 4-5 seconds, S. Hill being a good second in 55 1-5 seconds, and Norm Rae a bang up third in 57 3-5 seconds.

The standing by points in this competition is changing every night.

The next workout at the Oval will be Tuesday, July 5th, when the running hop step and jump, and the one mile run will be run off, which will bring the Stratton Cup athletic contest to a close.

Guillemene, a French aviator at Bucharest, fell 500 feet. He fell into a lake and escaped with a broken leg.

POINTERS FROM HAVELOCK

Special to the Review.

Havelock, June 28.—The day is fast approaching when the great sporting event of the year is to be pulled off. It will not be many days until that great question of whether Johnson or Jeffries is the best man will be decided. Very soon the world shall know who's who in the prize ring, and it shall be found out whether a fighter can after a five years' rest, come back and wear the champion's crown.

Jeffries seems to be the favorite. Many experts refuse to give Johnson anything but a slim chance, but this may be through prejudice against the negro fighter. But July 4th will decide the important question that is being so widely discussed at the present time, and which is claiming such great interest all over the Amerian continent.

The biggest and greatest fight that has ever been held will be pulled off at Reno on United States' annual holiday. The stake for which they battle, $101,000, is the largest ever put up for a prize fight. The largest before this was $60,000, when Gans and Nelson fought at Goldfield. The largest stake that Jeffries ever fought for was $67,000, when he met Tom Sharkey at Coney Island in 1899, in a 25 round go.

The fact that the battle will draw such a large amount of money has caused many to think that the fight was framed up for money making purposes alone, but this idea has been pretty well overcome. Although the promoters are trying to make as much as possible out of the fight, the public may be sure that the battle will be fought on its merits and that the best man will win.

Although Jeffries is the favorite, there are many who ought to know who have great doubts about Jeffries' ability to come back. Other men, including Sullivan and Corbett, have tried to come back, but have failed. There is no doubt that if Jeffries could enter the ring and display old-time form he would be able to win back the belt.

Johnson beat some good men when he disposed of Burns, Kaufman and Ketchel. Jeffries has a long line of victories to his credit over good men, but none of them had the effective defence or the hard punch that Johnson possesses.

Besides, Johnson is at his best now. If he ever was able or ever will be able to up a championship fight, he is ready now. Since 1901 he has engaged in 71 fights, with a total of 622 rounds against some of the best men in the game. Jeffries has engaged in 20 fights in all, but has been inactive since August, 1904, when he met Jack Munroe in San Francisco.

In six years a man may lose his judgement of distance and his hitting eye, just as important as the punch and strength. He has been training very hard for some time now, but that will not put a man in the same shape as a real fight would. He has had several struggles with his sparring partners during training, but they lack the good points that a real fight would have in putting a man in shape.

The fact that Johnson will take his time may be Jeffries' downfall. If Jeff can jump right in from the sound of the gong, he may be able to land Johnson one of his left swings, that if not altogether effectual, will go a long way towards beating the dusky one. But this is just what Johnson will seek to avoid. He has Jeffries pretty well sized up already. Johnson does not expect that Jeff will be as easy as Burns or Ketchel. He will wait and quietly look Jeffries over. He never hits from the shoulder unless he has a good opening. He will try to tire Jeffries out by a long battle, and when the time comes put in the blow he believes will win him the victory. As there is much ill-feeling between the principals, it is the opinion that Jeffries will try to bring about the negro's defeat as soon as possible, realizing that the longer the fight goes, the worse it will be for the white race. It is admitted that three hours in the ring would be a terrible undertaking for Jeffries.

Johnson is a cool headed, patient boxer with a great defence, and a hard wallop when the opening comes. He is, besides, the biggest man physically Jeffries has ever met, the most clever.

Johnson's best punch is the right hand uppercut, and the one that has scored him many knock outs, while Jeffries' best is directly the opposite, a left swing.

The change from San Francisco to Reno will be in Jeffries' favor also, as it is believed that he will be able to stand the high altitude better than the negro.

With a twenty-four foot square and since the fight can last 45 rounds, and with Johnson doing his best to prolong the fight, and Jeffries trying to finish it up quick, it is hard even for the fight experts to pick the winner of this great bout.

The best prize fighters of both races.

Jeffries never was beaten.

Both men can take a lot of punishment.

Experts believe that if Johnson wins, it will be after the 52th round.

Greatest fight in the histroy of the ring.

When Sullivan met Donaldson in Cincinnati, the purse was $53: $101,000 has been strung up for the Jeffries-Johnson go.

A small army of newspaper men are at Reno to report the fight.

FACTS.

Johnson has fought 71 fights with 622 total rounds. Jeffries has fought 20 fights with 184 total rounds.

Jack Johnson says:—"I expect to be able to go a long distance, to wear Jeffries down without running any dangerous chances, and then go in and win. I am not foolish enough to think that Jeffries will be as easy as Burns or Ketchel, for I know he will prove much harder to beat. He may come back looking fit and strong, but I think you'll find that he will not be able to stand the strain and will not show the old speed. I intend to let him do all the fighting at the start, for I want to size him up for a few rounds. I want to be sure about his real condition before I take a chance. If I find I can outbox him and can find the proper opening I think I can hit him harder than Fitzsimmons did, and that means he'll go down."

Jim Jeffries says:—"I will lick Jack Johnson and I will lick him quick. I don't intend to stall when I meet the negro in the ring. I don't say this just for the sake of saying something, but because its the gospel truth. Johnson never saw the day he could beat me. He may be a fairly good fighter. I admit that. He may have been able to beat some good men who were anywhere from 20 to 40 pounds lighter that he, but just wait until he gets into the ring with a man who is 20 pounds heavier than he is, and a man who has beaten better men than Johnson ever dreamed of being. That's why I say I am going to beat Jack Johnson and going to beat him quick."

Rube Marquard is having a tough time so far this season in rounding to form, the high priced left hander has been a big disappointment to "Muggsy" McGraw, leader of the New York Giants, who figured on the pennant with Marquard showing any kind of form.

LIVE NOTES FROM NORWOOD

Special to the Review.

Norwood, June 29.—The Norwood Methodist Sunday school ran an excursion per C.P.R. special train to Picton on Monday of this week. A large number took advantage of the delightful trip and thoroughly enjoyed the day's outing.

The excursion left Norwood at 7.15 a.m., arriving in Picton about 9.45, where they remained a short time to give people an opportunity to see the town, after which they returned to Wellington, where they remained the afternoon, arriving home in Norwood in good time, all thoroughly tired, but having enjoyed a most enjoyable outing.

MARRIED.

On Wednesday evening last a large number of guests assembled at Christ Church, Norwood, to witness the marriage of Miss [illegible] M. Baskin, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Baskin, of this place, to Mr. Thomas M. Lumsden, of Athelstan, Que.

The church was beautifully decorated with flowers and white ribbons. At 7.30 the bride entered the church with her father, who presented her at the altar, while Mendelssohn's wedding march was beautifully rendered by Miss Edna Niebel.

The bride's wedding gown was white Brussels net, over white silk with gold trimmings. She wore the conventional veil and orange blossons and carried a bouquet of white roses.

The bridesmaid was Miss J. Lumsden, sister of the groom. She was very becomingly attired in a dress of rose colored messeline silk with hat to match and carried a bouquet of pink roses. The groomsman was Mr. Allie Baskin, brother of the bride.

The officiating clergyman was Rev. E. W. Pickford, of Norwood, while Messrs. Wells Lumsden, of Athalstan, Que.; Fred Haskill, of Peterborough, J. W. White and John Baskin, jr., of Norwood, acted as ushers.

After the ceremony the happy couple and their friends repaired to the home of the bride's parents, Helen street, where a sumptuous wedding dinner was served. The bride was the recipient of numerous beautiful and costly presents, consisting of cut glass, silver and china, &c. The groom's gift was a gold locket watch with raised monogram and gold chain; to the bridesmaid a gold locket, and to the groomsman a pearl stick pin. The parents of the bride presented her with a handsome cheque.

Mr. and Mrs. Lumsden left on the C.P.R. midnight express for Montreal and other places of interest. The bride's travelling suit was navy blue Venetian and Russian blouse with hat to match.

BOARD OF EDUCATION.

A special meeting of the Board of Education was held on Wednesday evening, with Messrs. Squire, Cuffe, Waters, Doherty, Niebel, Anderson, Elliott, McNaughton, Finlay and Pakenham present.

The special business on hand was the resignation of Miss Helen Ford, of the High School staff, she having decided to resume her college studies.

Mr. D. McNaughton moved that Miss Ford's resignation be accepted. The motion received no seconder.

Mr. Pakenham moved, seconded by Mr. Doherty, that Miss Ford be offered an advance of $50.00 per year to remain.—Carried.

The Board also wished to convey to Miss Ford their appreciation of the good work done by her during the two years she has been on the staff. In event of Miss Ford's not staying, Messrs. J. L. Squire, E. P. Cuffe and Principal Lawler were appointed a committee to take steps to procure applications to fill the vacancy.

(We have since learned that Miss Ford will not remain in Norwood.)

Mr. Squire, the chairman, reported that Mr. McFarlane had signed an agreement to remain another year at his present salary.

ENTERTAINMENT.

The Mission Band of the Methodist church, under the direction of Mrs. B. W. Squire and Mrs. A. B. Greenbank, held an entertainment on Thursday evening in the Sunday school room. A good program was enjoyed.

COMING AND GOING.

Auctioneer McKelvie conducted an auction sale last Saturday afternoon for Mr. T. H. Loughbridge, Queen street. The sale was largely attended and prices were quite satisfactory. Mr. and Mrs. Loughbridge intend moving to Toronto soon.

Mr. Gordon Scott, of Oxbow, Sask., is visiting his mother, Mrs. W. H. Cuthbertson, of Norwood.

Mrs. N. A. Pickard, of Port Arthur, and her daughter is visiting at the home of her father, Mr. R. W. Waters, Queen street.

Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Waters and their family intend taking up their abode at their beautiful summer resort at Stoney Lake for the months of July and August. Mr. Waters will have to attend to his business in Norwood, but will visit the lake on Sundays and holidays.

The Rev. and Mrs. Peer have rented Mr. R. Nicolls' cottage at Stoney Lake for a few weeks and will take possession at once.

Miss L. Johnson visited Havelock on Sunday.

Miss Pearl Brown, of Havelock, spent the week end in town, the guest of Miss Mabel Laing.

Rev. G. A. MacLennan, of Chateuguay Basin, Que., formerly pastor of the Presbyterian church here, spent a few days in town last week.

Mr. and Mrs. A. Finlay and Master Everette are spending a few days in Kingston.

Mr. D. McTavish spent Sunday out of town.

Mr. Clarence Holdcroft, who is attending the High School here, visited at his home in Havelock on Sunday.

TUG OF WAR TO BE PULLED OFF

Another feature of the T.A.S. picnic will be a tug of war between a team from the Sacred Heart Church and one from St. Peter's Cathedral.

The pull promises to be a stellar attraction. The members of both teams are doing some tall talking. The southend heavyweights include several past masters at the art, and the test includes such celebrities as "Paddy" McGrath, "Tiny" Deannard and "Copper" Meagher. St. Peter's include several featherweights, and strange though it may seem, are doing the rooster act with a vengeance. "It won't be a case of playing forty-fives, either," says the captain of the light brigade.

WILL RECEIVE FIGHT RETURNS

U.S. WANTS THE WATER AS WELL AS THE EARTH

For the First Time in Years the American Government is Refusing to Recognize Canada's Right to Collect Dues and Taxes From Fishermen.

Ottawa, June 30.—It is the intention of the United States to contest, at the very first opportunity, the claim of Canada that Hudson Bay is an inland sea to which the Dominion of Canada has exclusive right, and over which the Government of this country has complete jurisdiction and control.

For over a year the authorities here have been aware that the time is rapidly approaching when Canada will be called upon to defend her rights to this valuable sheet of water. It is probable that the matter will be dealt with by arbitration, but it may go as far as The Hague Tribunal for settlement.

The action taken by the authorities at Washington open up the whole question direct and unmistakable. The owners and masters of trading vessels and whalers which proceed to these latitudes have been officially notified from Washington that they need not recognize Hudson Bay any longer as an inland sea in the possession of Canada. The method of refusal to recognize this would of course be by declining to pay the licenses and other dues demanded by the Canadian Government. This is suggested by Washington.

So far, during all the years that have gone by, no owner of an American vessel trading or fishing in these waters has ever ventured to contest the claim of Canada to complete jurisdiction over Hudson Bay; indeed, the dues have been paid gladly by traders, if for no other reason than that the benefits they derive far outweigh the small sums they are charged. For instance, they are allowed all facilities for replenishing their very necessary supplies of fuel from the immense and valuable coal fields which are located in the lands to the northwest of the bay.

Above and beyond this, however, is the complete harmony and good relationship that exists between the Canadian Government and its officials and the traders themselves. The traders are engaged in a most lucrative business. Their security for the future depends largely on a continuance of the pleasant relations. In their turn, the whalers and traders have done many kind and thoughtful acts to Canadian Government officials and others in the far north. Therefore, up till now, not one of them has taken any action upon the suggestion of Washington.

Capt. Cromer is one of the best-known of the American traders who go to Hudson Bay. He has just paid a visit to Ottawa to consult with the authorities here upon some matters affecting his business, and in conversation regarding the question of the jurisdiction over Hudson Bay, he stated he had no intention of availing himself of the authority he had received to refuse to pay the dues imposed by the Canadian Government. These are merely nominal, but the underlying principle is vital.

When the first refusal to recognize Canada will be made is merely matter for conjecture, but it is safe to say that it will not be long before a crisis is reached. Last season was the first during which American traders were armed with this authority from the United States Government. The second season has just begun, and possibly before we have reached its close, Canada will be in the throes of another international embroglio.

BROOKINS MAKES VERY HIGH FLIGHT

Montreal, June 30.—The feature of yesterday's program at the aviation exhibition at Lakeside was a flight by Count de Lesseps as a passenger in a Wright biplane, the guest of Walter Brookins, who invited the French aviator to make an ascent with him. De Lesseps at once accepted, and Brookins gave him a lively ride, taking him to an altitude of a thousand feet, and then performing a number of gyrations over the field. After a twenty minutes' flight Brookins made a daring glide through the air from several hundred feet up, skimming close to the ground, and then landing easily.

At one time during the afternoon there were three aeroplanes in the air together. The program closed with an altitude flight by Brookins, when he broke his previous records for the meet, reaching a height, officially measured by scientific apparatus, of 2,500 feet.

London, June 30.—Judgment was given yesterday in the petition presented against the return of Eugene O'Sullivan (Ind. Nat.), M.P. for East Kerry, by John Murphy (Nat.), his opponent. The seat was declared void on the grounds of the petition, viz., impersonation and intimidation.

Winnipeg, June 30.—Fire yesterday afternoon did damage to the extent of $25,000 to the local factory of the Alaska Bedding Co.

BOY JUMPS FROM BROOKLYN BRIDGE

New York, June 30.—To win a purse of $250 and two suits of clothes Otto Eppers, a 17-year-old Brooklyn boy, jumped off the Brooklyn bridge yesterday afternoon. Those who saw him leap through the air say that he spun over and over in the descent, striking the water 135 feet below, head first, with a splash. A row boat that Eppers had arranged to have ready to pick him up, failed to do so, but a tug rescued him.

CRUSHED BY TONS OF EARTH

Wiarton, June 30.—Reuben Brain, an Englishman about 24 years of age, was killed at the White Cloud Island plant of the Crown Portland Cement Co. He was working on a chute filled with gravel and clay, when a bolt broke, precipitating him to the ground, about three tons of the earth from the chute pouring over him.

Lay With Head on Rail.

Owen Sound, June 30.—John Stratton, 50 years of age, committed suicide at 3 o'clock yesterday morning by deliberately lying down on the C.P.R. track with his neck on the rail as a locomotive, with a caboose attached, approached. The head was completely severed from the body, but there were no other injuries.

HAS HOSTS OF FRIENDS

Information Concerning Missing Superintendent is Hard to Secure.

Ottawa, Ont., June 30.—One of the developments of the day at the Printing Bureau is the fact that a well-known employe of the bindery received his dismissal yesterday after examination by Hon. Charles Murphy, who is continuing the personal enquiry at the institution. The man's name is Bailey and he is said to have openly practiced money-lending at the Bureau.

It is stated that Gouldthrite left by the Soo train at 1.50 on Tuesday morning of last week. He bought a ticket at the Central Station and was heading for Minneapolis, where he has a brother residing. Knowledge that the police were on his track caused him evidently to alter his plans and to put across the border at a point nearer home. Saturday his wife went, it is said by friends of the family, to look for him. She, too, travelel in a westerly direction. The only child, a little five-year-old boy, is staying with friends on Waverley street.

The wife, it is stated, left Ottawa with the purpose of bringing him back rather than have him brought back in handcuffs, as was threatened by the officials of the Government.

Meantime Col. Sherwood of the Dominion police returned yesterday, and last night left for Toronto.

Ottawa is full of Gouldthrite's friends. For instance, the photographer who took a picture of Gouldthrite some time ago is his friend and refuses steadfastly to give out pictures of the alleged fugitive. It is even said that he destroyed the negative. Then, again, it is said that a certain ticket clerk in Ottawa is a friend of Gouldthrite and did not hurry to tell the police what he knew.

Gouldthrite has a brother in St. Paul in the hardware business.

TWO TOWNS THREATENED

Winnipeg, June 30.—Canadian Northern officials here appreciate the seriousness of the fire danger to homesteaders and the villages in Lavalle and Devlin districts in Northern Ontario.

Effort was made at two o'clock yesterday afternoon to send a relief train through from Emo, eight miles this side of Devlin, but had to be abandoned owing to fierceness of the conflagration.

Lavalle is situated on the Canadian Northern, ten miles this side of Fort Frances. The country is heavily timbered and danger from fire is increased by reason of the large amount of timber and ties along the track. The telegraph wires of the company have suffered severely and at present communication is practically cut off.

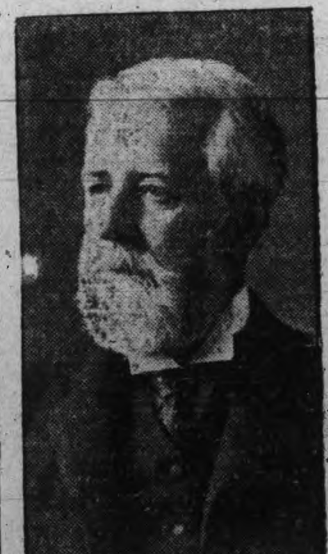
One report is that Devlin has been destroyed and that Lavalle is doomed unless the wind goes down.

MEREDITH'S BIG TASK

Chief Justice Will Look Into Compensation for Workmen—Single Commission Best, Says Sir James.

Toronto, June 30.—Following the announcement that the Ontario Government would issue a commission to enquire into the laws relating to the compensation of employes for injuries, Sir James Whitney stated yesterday that an order-in-council had been issued, appointing Sir William Ralph Meredith, Chief Justice of the Common Pleas Division of the High Court of Justice, a commissioner. His duties are outlined as follows:

1. To enquire and report as to the laws relating to the liability of employers to make compensation to their employes for injuries received in the course of their employment which are in force in other countries, and as to how far such laws are found to operate satisfactorily.



SIR WILLIAM MEREDITH.

2. To make such recommendations as he may deem expedient for enacting in this province any of the provisions of such laws which he may deem suited to the circumstances and conditions of the province and proper to be adopted.

3. To cause to be prepared and to report a bill, embodying such changes in the law as in his opinion should be adopted.

"After giving the subject very careful consideration," the Premier said, "the Cabinet decided in favor of a single commissioner. We believe the object in view will be better served by the selection of a very capable man for commissioner, as in this case, and then giving all possible opportunity to individuals and bodies interested in the subject to present and urge their views of what the law should be."

NO CLUE TO MURDERERS

Streetsville, June 30.—"That Joe Gong was murdered by some person or persons unknown, with strong suspicion pointing to the two men seen about the village on the date of the tragedy."

With only about 15 minutes' deliberation the coroner's jury enquiring into the circumstances surrounding the death of the laundryman who was brutally assaulted on Thursday evening, June 9, returned the above verdict last night. Not the slightest evidence was produced to throw any light on the identity of the culprits. Wm. Couse was foreman of the jury and Coroner Dr. Sutton of Cooksville presided. The relatives of the deceased Chinaman were represented by W. A. Henderson of Toronto. County Crown Attorney McFadden of Brampton examined the witnesses.

H. W. Kumpf, proprietor of a hotel, said he had seen two strangers in his hotel that night. One was tall, about 6 feet, dark, with a brown suit and fedora hat. The other was about 5 feet. 6 ins. tall, with a black Derby hat and blue suit. The men had told him they were painting semiphores on the C.P.R.

"Bobs" In Defence.

London, June 30.—Lord Roberts presiding at the National Service League yesterday, said they must persevere in educating public opinion to the fact that they could not hope to guard the Empire unless the defence of the country is to depend upon the whole people being trained in the time of peace to defend hearth and home of the country when attacked.

COMPANIES LOSING MONEY OPERATING SLEEPING CARS

So Say Railway Men Testifying Before Railway Board—Sleeping Cars Are a Luxury for Which the Public Should Pay Well.

Toronto, June 30.—According to the arguments of railway officials, the companies are losing money in the operation of sleeping cars, which they class as a luxury, and should be paid for as such by the traveling public. As to the latter argument, Chairman Mabee of the Dominion Railway Board disagreed. Sleep was a necessity, he said.

The board spent several hours yesterday hearing the reasons why the price of upper berths in sleeping cars should not be made cheaper than that of lower berths. The railways contended that sleeping cars cost a great deal more than day coaches, were heavier, and, therefore, cost more to haul, and carried fewer passengers, and were therefore less remunerative, and argued that to make a reduction in rates would lead to undesirable passengers.

Representatives for the various railway companies produced masses of figures which attempted to show that sleeping cars were operated at a net loss. Further, the operating cost of sleepers would soon be higher, said the railways.

At the conclusion of the case Chairman Mabee said: "We will have to consider the matter. It is too important to try to dispose of off hand, without further investigation."

Sleeping cars were the most expensive in regard to maintenance cost and the most expensive in first cost in use, said Mr. Beatty, counsel for the C.P.R. They carried only about one-third as many passengers as the other cars and were heavier. The C.P.R. ran about 192 Pullman sleepers.

"They are saving the cost of other coaches that would have to be used to carry the people they carry," said Chairman Mabee.

According to Mr. Ussher's statistics 50 per cent. of the cars were out of commission eight months in the year, but enough cars had to be kept on hand to cope with the rush season.

Sleeping cars were never a paying proposition for the railways. The maintenance and haulage expenses of sleepers were bound to go up. Electric lights were being installed in sleepers on other roads and the C.P.R. had to follow suit. The extra apparatus would add about one and one-half tons of weight to the car. In addition to that sleepers would soon have to be built out of steel, which would make them from 7 1-2 tons to 10 tons heavier, all tending to increase the cost of haulage. The old sleepers weighed only 35 tons, he thought.

The Pullman people were able to make money out of their own cars because they did not need to allow them to lay idle. They were able to concentrate their cars on the part of the country which had the biggest demand. There was nearly always a demand in some part of the country. They could utilize their cars much more than the C.P.R. His evidence was intended to show the wickedness of reducing the cost of the berth and adding to the burden of operating sleepers.

COMMISSIONER HANDS IN REPORT

Toronto, June 30.—Judge Winchester, commissioner of enquiry appointed by the City Council in September, 1908, will to-day hand to Mayor Geary his report on the probing of accounts of the Canadian National Exhibition Association.

It is understood that this has already resulted in the turning back into the city's coffers of at least $2,000. Twelve hundred dollars of this amount was paid in during the last few days by Col. Leslie, late treasurer of the exhibition, and is in addition to the $10,000 restitution already made by his late wife for him. The balance of the $2,000 is made up of a payment from the exhibition authorities of amounts not previously accounted for, owing to bookkeeping errors.

The report, which is a lengthy one, based on nearly [illegible]0 typewritten foolscap pages of evidence, will not disclose anything seriously wrong, but will probably offer some suggestions for an improved system of bookkeeping, and review some of the transactions about which evidence was taken.

Woman In Aeroplane.

New York, June 30.—Mrs. Clifford Harmon, wife of the millionaire aeroplanist, yesterday on Hempstead Plains, L.I., made a sensational flight as a passenger with her husband in his Farman biplane. She is the first of New York's "four hundred" to fly in an aeroplane.

Western Railwayman Dead.

Winnipeg, June 30.—John D. Landers, well known all through the west as pioneer railroad man, died yesterday morning at Hot Springs Ark.

FAMOUS PAIR FOUND DEAD

Stuttgart, Germany, June 30.—Dr. Aloys Obrist, the famous musical conductor, and Anna Sutter, a court singer, were found dead together yesterday. Both had been shot. Appearances indicated that one had been murdered and that the other had committed suicide.

Dr. Obrist was born at San Remo, Italy, in 1867. He conducted the royal opera here in 1907 and 1908. He was of Swiss-Scotch descent. His mother came from the north of Scotland, while his father's family have been engaged either in the Government service or in agriculture in the vicinity of Zurich for 600 years.

Dr. Obrist had made Weimar his home since 1875 and for many years had occupied the Villa Alisa. He was a director of the Liszt Museum and was appointed a royal conductor by the King of Wurtemburg. He was the author of several contributions to musical literature, upon the subject of which he was regarded as an authority.

Edmonton, June 30.—Owing to illness of O. M. Biggar, the meeting of the great waterways commission was postponed until July 5. It was expected that the report would be handed down yesterday.

THE BRIDELESS KING

The information has been cabled across the ocean that King Manuel has gone back home without being able to secure a princess of the royal blood. In plain English he, though a king, cannot get a wife. It seems a relic of barbarism that pedigree should have anything to do with marriage. There are doubtless thousands of amiable, sound and well bred Portuguese maidens who would be willing to wed Manuel and rear for him a family of healthy blood. However, there are many men in Ontario who would like to wed, but who can find no one, and there also are women who would be pleased to accept, but no lover has come their way. They can feel for Manuel, who, though king, cannot secure a bride.

Money can purchase much, but there are some things before which even a king is as powerless as his most humble peasant.

THE ARMY OF WRITERS

There's a host of special writers in Reno Nevada, where the eyes of the sport loving world are centred. No two figures are as much in the mind of the newspaper public to-day as Jeffries and Johnson. The writers realize this. They are straining to say something immensely original and a lot of them are falling down in the effort. In simplicity is power. The flood was described in simple language, and that greatest of all tragedies, the killing of Christ by the Jews, was told in a few words. The art of writing is not in appearing learned and using long words, but in being natural, whether it is in writing something that is sublime, or recording the fact that two men are getting ready to punch each other for the championship of the world. But however the sporting writers may strive, and no matter how great their renown, their stuff will soon be forgotten. You cannot make a silk purse from a sow's ear, and the spectacle of two men fighting for money cannot be construed into a classic.

THE DUNCE

He was great on whittling, but he was a terrible dunce at school, and while class prodigies were ranking high and heading their lists, he made a poor fist of it all. And when the class' best reader got up and rattled it off with fine effect, he stuttered through his turn. But say when it came to making a little boat with a jack-knife, there was grace in that little craft, style and contour in its curves. But they didn't recognize the hand of genius there, and he was lambasted to a finish for whittling the desk and playing hooky and sailing his boat in the river. But there are other things to cut one's name in than school desks, the hall of fame for instance. He went back school, and went down near the foot of his class. But they landed the other fellows who knew it by the book, but he learned his lessons from the maker of men and the Great Author of all things. He was a genius. Well he left home a happy go lucky chap, went out to South Africa and to-day he is getting $10,000 a year with a big transportation company in Mexico. You can't always tell children by their school reports.

THE STUDENT

The Review this week has printed the names of about two thousand young people who have tried their examinations, and who have succeeded. But what of the disappointed ones? Many a scholar who has written and has failed has worked harder and put in more hours of study than those who pass with honors. Theirs is the fate of being dull. But do any of them, stupid or clever, know that their education to-day is broader far than that of their parents. The school of to-day is light and airy. The school of the olden time was often dark and close. It is nearby now, once it meant a tramp of miles. Books were dear, now they are within the reach of all. The old guard went barefooted and in the clothes of the elder brother. To-day the youngster cries if there is a patch on his pants, and as he progresses in his studies puts on patent leathers and superior airs.

THE PLAIN FACED GIRL

The novelists are raving and the poets dreaming rub sonnets to the beautiful girl. Has no one got any kind word to say for the homely one? Beauty attracts but for the moment, and we soon peer past rouge and switches, the jewelry, the latest style millinery and gowns. What of the homely girl with the lovely life? What of the homely girl who is a good listener, for good listeners are ever rare! Good listeners usually hold many secrets because when we get hold of some one we can trust we all like to unload our troubles and tell our little heart stories. Here's to the girl with the plain face, often the most popular in her set.

FRESH AIR FEAR

Sir Frederick Treves seems to be talking sense when he says that people do not catch cold from draughts. People catch heat, catch bad air, and then catch cold. The surveyor goes out from his home to the northland. He sleeps in a tent or airy shack, never gets inside a heated building for any length of time. He is nearly always in the open. Does he catch cold? Not much, he catches fresh air and a fresh complexion, and is always ready for his meals. We are afraid of a draught because we do not know any better. Fresh air has saved thousands of lives and foul air has slain its millions. Keep your windows up all year around.

THE PATH OF PAIN

The airship "Deutschland," of Count Zeppelin, the father of flying, came to grief on Tuesday, and lies in a German forest. The air ship had just been sold to a company for $132,500. But that is nothing, the path of progress is always through pain, disappointment and loss. The people are timid. That is only history repeating itself. One of the greatest American statesmen declared when the railway was first introduced into America that he would not risk his life racing through space at fifteen miles an hour. To-day we are impatient at a mile a minute. Yes, the path to progress is the path of pain. Our children, as they have their private air ships, as we have our motor cars, will wonder how we ever got along without them. Columbus will ever have his name connected with America, and when biography is written one hundred years from now, Count Zeppelin's name will be there in the role of honor, even as the name of Caxton lives in connection with type and Elias Howe with the sewing machine.

THE POINT OF VIEW

SILLY SENTIMENT.

Ottawa Free Press.

There was an execution in Peterborough the other day, when a young man, named Robert Henderson, paid the penalty for the brutal murder of an elderly lady who had befriended him in his hour of need. It was a brutal crime, one which deserved the climax of the law's justice, yet the body of the murderer had hardly been interred in the cemetery before some women decorated the grave with flowers.

Can anything be imagined more out of place or time? Is it any wonder that the Peterborough Review objected?

Those flowers would have been much better in place on the grave of the victim or in the home of her sister than upon the grave of the murderer. When will this stupid sentimentality end?

NATURE.

Charles F. Raymond.

The King may sit upon the throne,
The flags may be unfurled,
No other name save his alone,
May sound about the world.
His soldiers may be heroes all,
His navy grim with power,
And rear for him a bristling wall,
Prepared for any hour;
Knees may bend and heads may bare
And spines most supple be,
While lords and ladies ermine wear,
But none of this for me,
Give me summer's glory,
With the trees above me swaying,
Where the robin tells his story,
For his mate knows what he's saying,
Give me the evening star,
The twinkling eye of light,
That winks me from afar,
A beacon of the night.
The hush of Nature's noon,
The swish of the restless sea.
The light of the later moon,
That laughing, stares at me.
Let Nature and I be alone,
I care not for pomp or power,
Envy no king or his throne,
A fickle, fleeting hour.
No palace I wish to share,
No envious dream I see.
To Nature alone I bare—
He's king enough for me.

THE DICTATOR.

President Diaz, of Mexico, has been re-elected for the eighth time after having served for 26 years. Of course he was. They had to elect him. It was not wholly a matter of choice; for Diaz owns Mexico. When the old man dies republican institutions will be put to the test in that nominal republic.

WHEELS.

St. Thomas Times.

The patent on the single-tube bicycle tire has expired. Probably few persons will be interested in this fact to-day; but in spite of the apparent disuse of the wheel, one manufacturer says that his factory is making more bicycles than ever—and what is more selling them.

FLOWER SHOWS.

Lethbridge Herald.

The cultivation of a love for the beautiful is one of the important parts of the education of the young. This has been recognized by the School Board and teachers of the Lethbridge schools. One of the ways of accomplishing this has been by means of conducting an annual flower show and competition.

A BIG ONE.

CATTLE MARKETS.

Hogs Continue on Down Grade at Buffalo—Cattle Slow.

Montreal Live Stock.

MONTREAL, June 29.—(Special.)—At the Canadian Pacific live stock market this morning the offerings of live stock were 750 cattle, 750 sheep and lambs, 700 hogs and 800 calves. A feature of the trade continues to be the weak feeling in the market for cattle, and prices are steadily tending towards a lower level, which is attributed to the increased supplies coming forward, and a large percentage of the same being of an inferior quality. At the reduction in values, however, the demand was good. There were five carloads of northwest ranch cattle from the Maple Creek district on the market, and they met with a ready sale at 6¼c, 6½c and 6¾c per lb. Choice beeves sold at 6½c to 6¾c; good at 6c to 6¼c; fairly good at 5½c to 5¾c; fair at 5c to 5¼c, and common at 4½c to 4¾c per lb. Cows sold at 3c to 5c, and bulls at 3c to 4c per lb. Owing to the increased supplies of old and yearling sheep, a weaker feeling developed in the market, and prices declined 1c per lb. The demand at this reduction was fairly good, and sales were made at 3½c to 3¾c per lb. In lambs a good trade was done and prices were unchanged at from $3.50 to $5 each. The demand for calves was good, and, as the supply was not in excess of the requirements, values were firm at from $3 to $10 each. The tone of the market for hogs was steady under a fair demand, and sales of selected lots were made at $9.50 to $9.75 per 100 lbs., weighed off cars.

At the Montreal Stock Yards West End Market the offerings of live stock were 370 cattle, 75 sheep and lambs, 450 hogs and 1000 calves. A fair trade was done in all lines, and the prices realized were much the same as those quoted above.

Many Women who are Splendid Cooks

dread having to prepare an elaborate dinner because they are not sufficiently strong to stand over an intensely hot coal range. This is especially true in summer. Every woman takes pride in the table she sets, but often it is done at tremendous cost to her own vitality through the weakening effect of cooking on a coal range in a hot kitchen.

Cautionary Note: Be sure you get this stove—see that the name-plate reads "New Perfection."

It is no longer necessary to wear yourself out preparing a fine dinner. Even in the heat of summer you can cook a large dinner without being worn out.

New Perfection
WICK BLUE FLAME
Oil Cook-stove

Gives no outside heat, no smell, no smoke. It will cook the biggest dinner without heating the kitchen or the cook. It is immediately lighted and immediately extinguished. It can be changed from a slow to a quick fire by turning a handle. There's no drudgery connected with it, no coal to carry, no wood to chop. You don't have to wait fifteen or twenty minutes till its fire gets going. Apply a light and it's ready. By simply turning the wick up or down you get a slow or an intense heat on the bottom of the pot, pan, kettle or oven, and nowhere else. It has a Cabinet Top with shelf for keeping plates and food hot, drop shelves for coffee, teapot or saucepan, and even a rack for towels. It saves time, worry, health and temper. It does all a woman needs and more than she expects. Made with 1, 2, and 3 burners; the 2 and 3-burner sizes can be had with or without Cabinet.

The Mystery of The Yellow Room

By GASTON LEROUX

COPYRIGHT, 1908, By BRENTANO'S.

"With that theory in my mind, I searched for proof in their lodge, which, as you know, I entered. I found there under their bed some springs and brass wire. 'Ah,' I thought, 'these things explain why they were out in the park at night!' I was not surprised at the dogged silence they maintained before the examining magistrate, even under the accusation so grave as that of being accomplices in the crime. Poaching would save them from the assize court, but it would lose them their places, and as they were perfectly sure of their innocence of the crime they hoped it would soon be established, and then their poaching might go on as usual. They could always confess later. I, however, hastened their confession by means of the document M. Stangerson signed. They gave all the necessary 'proofs,' were set at liberty and have now a lively gratitude for me. Why did I not get them released sooner? Because I was not sure that nothing more than poaching was against them. I wanted to study the ground. As the days went by, my conviction became more and more certain. The days after the events of the inexplicable gallery I had need of help I could rely on, so I resolved to have them released at once."

We reached the Donjon inn and entered it.

This time we did not see the landlord, but were received with a pleasant smile by the charming hostess.

"How's Daddy Mathieu?" asked Rouletabille.

"Not much better, not much better. He is still confined to his bed."

"His rheumatism still sticks to him, then?"

"Yes. Last night I was again obliged to give him morphine, the only drug that gives him any relief."

She spoke in a soft voice. Everything about her expressed gentleness She was, indeed, a beautiful woman, somewhat with an air of indolence, with great eyes seemingly black and blue, amorous eyes. Was she happy with her crabbed, rheumatic husband? The scene at which we had once been present did not lead us to believe that she was. Yet there was something in her bearing that was not suggestive of despair. She disappeared into the kitchen to prepare our repast, leaving on the table a bottle of excellent cider. Rouletabille filled our earthenware mugs, loaded his pipe and quietly explained to me his reason for asking me to come to the Glandier with revolvers.

"Yes," he said contemplatively, looking at the clouds of smoke he was puffing out, "yes, my dear boy, I expect the assassin tonight."

A brief silence followed, which I took care not to interrupt, and then he went on:

"Last night just as I was going to bed M. Robert Darzac knocked at my room. When he came in he confided to me that he was compelled to go to Paris the next day—that is, this morning. The reason which made this journey necessary was at once peremptory and mysterious. It was not possible for him to explain its object to me. 'I go, and yet,' he added, 'I would give my life not to leave Mlle. Stangerson at this moment.' He did not try to hide that he believed her to be once more in danger. 'It will not greatly astonish me if something happens tomorrow night,' he avowed, 'and yet I must be absent. I cannot be back at the Glandier before the morning of the day after tomorrow.'

"I asked him to explain himself, and this is all he would tell me. His anticipation of coming danger had come to him solely from the coincidence that Mlle. Stangerson had been twice attacked, and both times when he had been absent. Now a man so moved who should still go away must be acting under compulsion—must be obeying a will stronger than his own. That was how I reasoned, and I told him so. He replied 'Perhaps.' I asked him if Mlle. Stangerson was compelling him. He protested that she was not. His determination to go to Paris had been taken without any conference with Mlle. Stangerson.

"To cut the story short, he repeated that his belief in the possibility of a fresh attack was founded entirely on the extraordinary coincidence. 'If anything happens to Mlle. Stangerson,' he said, 'it would be terrible for both of us—for her, because her life would be in danger; for me, because I could neither defend her from the attack nor tell of where I had been. I am perfectly aware of the suspicions cast on me. The examining magistrate and M. Larsan are both on the point of believing in my guilt. Larsan tracked me the last time I went to Paris, and I had all the trouble in the world to get rid of him.'

"'Why do you not tell me the name of the murderer now if you know it?' I cried.

"M. Darzac appeared extremely troubled by my question and replied to me in a hesitating tone:

"'I? I know the name of the murderer? Why, how could I know his name?'

"I at once replied, 'From Mlle. Stangerson.'

"He grew so pale that I thought he was about to faint, and I saw that I had hit the right nail on the head. Mademoiselle and he knew the name of the murderer! When he recovered himself, he said to me: 'I am going to leave you. Since you have been here I have appreciated your exceptional intelligence and your unequaled ingenuity. But I ask this service of you. Perhaps I am wrong to fear an attack during the coming night, but as I must act with foresight I count on you to frustrate any attempt that may be made.'

"'Have you spoken of all this to M. Stangerson?'

"'No. I do not wish him to ask me, as you just now did, for the name of the murderer. I tell you all this, M. Rouletabille, because I have great, very great, confidence in you. I know that you do not suspect me.'

"The poor man spoke in jerks. He was evidently suffering. I pitied him, the more because I felt sure that he would rather allow himself to be killed than tell me who the murderer was. As for Mlle. Stangerson, I felt that she would rather allow herself to be murdered than denounce the man of the yellow room and of the inexplicable gallery. The man must be dominating her or both by some inscrutable power. They were dreading nothing so much as the chance of M. Stangerson knowing that his daughter was 'held' by her assailant. I made M. Darzac understand that he had explained himself sufficiently and that he might refrain from telling me any more than he had already told me. I promised him to watch through the night. He insisted that I should establish an absolutely impassable barrier about Mlle. Stangerson's chamber, around the boudoir where the nurses were sleeping and around the drawing room where since the affair of the inexplicable gallery M. Stangerson had slept. In short, I was to put a cordon round the whole apartment.

"From his insistence I gathered that M. Darzac intended not only to make it impossible for the expected man to reach the chamber of Mlle. Stangerson, but to make that impossibility so visibly clear that, seeing himself expected, he would at once go away. That was how I interpreted his final words when we parted, 'You may mention your own suspicions of the expected attack to M. Stangerson, to Daddy Jacques, to Frederic Larsan and to anybody in the chateau.'

"When he was gone I began to think that I should have to use even a greater cunning than his so that if the man should come that night he might not for a moment suspect that his coming had been expected. Certainly! I would allow him to get in far enough, so that, dead or alive, I might see his face clearly. He must be got rid of. Mlle. Stangerson must be freed from this continual impending danger."

The landlady reappeared at that moment, bringing in the traditional bacon omelet. Rouletabille chaffed her a little, and she took the chaff with the most charming good humor.

"She is much jollier when Daddy Mathieu is in bed with his rheumatism," Rouletabille said to me.

When he had finished his omelet and we were again alone Rouletabille continued the tale of his confidences.

"When I sent you my telegram this morning," he said, "I had only the word of M. Darzac that 'perhaps' the assassin would come tonight. I can now say that he will certainly come. I expect him."

"What has made you feel this certainty?"

"I have been sure since half past 10 o'clock this morning that he would come. I knew that before we saw Arthur Rance at the window in the court."

"Ah!" I said. "But, again, what made you so sure? And why since half past 10 this morning?"

"Because at half past 10 I had proof that Mlle. Stangerson was making as many efforts to permit of the murderer's entrance as M. Robert Darzac had taken precautions against it."

"Is that possible!" I cried. "Haven't you told me that Mlle. Stangerson loves M. Robert Darzac?"

"I told you so because it is the truth."

"Then do you see nothing strange"—

"Everything in this business is strange, my friend; but take my word for it, the strangeness you now feel is nothing to the strangeness that's to come!"

"It must be admitted, then," I said, "that Mlle. Stangerson and her murderer are in communication—at any rate in writing?"

"Admit it, my friend; admit it! You don't risk anything! I told you about the letter left on her table on the night of the inexplicable gallery affair—the letter that disappeared into the pocket of Mlle. Stangerson. Why should it not have been a summons to a meeting? Might he not, as soon as he was sure of Darzac's absence, appoint the meeting for the coming night?"

And my friend laughed silently. There are moments when I ask myself if he is not laughing at me.

The door of the inn opened. Rouletabille was on his feet so suddenly that one might have thought he had received an electric shock.

"Mr. Arthur Rance!" he cried.

Mr. Arthur Rance stood before us calmly bowing.

CHAPTER XX.

An Act of Mlle. Stangerson.

"YOU remember me, monsieur?" asked Rouletabille. The American extended his hand, and Rouletabille, relaxing his frown, shook it and introduced Mr. Arthur Rance to me. He invited him to share our meal.

"No, thanks. I breakfasted with M. Stangerson."

Arthur Rance spoke French perfectly, almost without an accent.

"I did not expect to have the pleasure of seeing you again, monsieur. I thought you were to have left France the day after the reception at the Elysee."

Rouletabille and I, outwardly indifferent, listened most intently for every word the American would say.

The man's purplish red face, his heavy eyelids, the nervous twitchings, all spoke of his addiction to drink. How came it that so sorry a specimen of a man should be so intimate with M. Stangerson?

Some days later I learned from Frederic Larsan—who, like ourselves, was surprised and mystified by Rance's appearance and reception at the chateau—that Mr. Rance had been an inebriate for about fifteen years only—that is to say, since the professor and his daughter left Philadelphia. During the time the Stangersons lived in America they were very intimate with Arthur Rance, who was one of the most distinguished phrenologists of the new world. Owing to new experiments he had made enormous strides beyond the science of Gall and Lavater. The friendliness with which he was received at the Glandier may be explained by the fact that he had rendered Mlle. Stangerson a great service by stopping, at the peril of his own life, the runaway horses of her carriage. The immediate result of that could, however, have been no more than a mere friendly association with the Stangersons, certainly not a love affair.

Frederic Larsan did not tell me where he had picked up this information, but he appeared to be quite sure of what he said.

The American must have been at least forty-five years old. He spoke in a perfectly natural tone in reply to Rouletabille's question.

"It put off my return to America when I heard of the attack on Mlle. Stangerson. I wanted to be certain the lady had not been killed, and I shall not go away until she is perfectly recovered."

Like Larsan, Rance thought that Robert Darzac had something to do with the matter. He did not mention him by name, but there was no room to doubt whom he meant. He told us he was aware of the efforts young Rouletabille was making to unravel the tangled skein of the yellow room mystery. He explained that M. Stangerson had related to him all that had taken place in the inexplicable gallery. He several times expressed his regret at M. Darzac's absence from the chateau on all these occasions and thought that M. Darzac had done cleverly in allying himself with M. Joseph Rouletabille, who could not fail sooner or later to discover the murderer. He spoke the last sentence with unconcealed irony. Then he rose, bowed to us and left the inn.

Rouletabille watched him through the window.

"An odd fish, that!" he said.

"Do you think he'll pass the night at the Glandier?" I asked.

To my amazement the young reporter answered that it was a matter of entire indifference to him whether he did or not.

As to how we spent our time during the afternoon, all I need say is that Rouletabille led me to the grotto of Sainte Genevieve and all the time talked of every subject but the one with which we were most interested. Toward evening I was surprised to find Rouletabille making none of the preparations I had expected him to make. I spoke to him about it when night had come on and we were once more in his room. He replied that all his arrangements had already been made, and this time the murderer would not get away from him.

I expressed some doubt on this, reminding him of his disappearance in the gallery, and suggested that the same phenomenon might occur again. He answered that he hoped it would. He desired nothing more. I did not insist, knowing by experience how useless that would have been. He told me that, with the help of the concierges, the chateau had since early dawn been watched in such a way that nobody could approach it without his knowing it and that he had no concern for those who might have left it and remained without.

It was then 6 o'clock by his watch. Rising, he made a sign to me to follow him, and, without in the least trying to conceal his movements or the sound of his footsteps, he led me through the gallery. We reached the "right" gallery and came to the landing place, which we crossed. We then continued our way in the gallery of the left wing, passing Professor Stangerson's apartment.

At the far end of the gallery, before coming to the donjon, is the room occupied by Arthur Rance. We knew that, because we had seen him at the window looking on to the court. The door of the room opens on to the end of the gallery, exactly facing the east window, at the extremity of the "right" gallery, where Rouletabille had placed Daddy Jacques, and commands an uninterrupted view of the gallery from end to end of the chateau.

"That 'off turning' gallery," said Rouletabille, "I reserve for myself. When I tell you you'll come and take your place here."

And he made me enter a little dark, triangular closet built in a bend of the wall to the left of the door of Arthur Rance's room. From this recess I could see all that occurred in the gallery as well as if I had been standing in front of Arthur Rance's door, and I could watch that door too. The door of the closet, which was to be my place of observation, was fitted with panels of transparent glass. In the gallery, where all the lamps had been lit, it was quite light. In the closet, however, it was quite dark. It was a splendid place from which to observe and remain unobserved.

We returned along the gallery. On reaching the door of Mlle. Stangerson's apartment it opened from a push given by the steward who was waiting at the dinner table. (M. Stangerson had for the last three days dined with his daughter in the drawing room on the first floor.) As the door remained open, we distinctly saw Mlle. Stangerson, taking advantage of the steward's absence and while her father was stooping to pick up something he had let fall, pour the contents of a vial into M. Stangerson's glass.

Automobile Tires

The Straight Wall type of Automobile Tire is not a new thing. It was featured by the Dunlop Tire Company in 1905, and the prediction was then made that it would be the tire of the future.

This Straight Wall tire is also variously called the "Non-Clinch," "Straight Side," "Straight Bead," or "Universal Quick Detachable Tire." As the name Straight Wall implies this Tire has no toe extensions—is not made like the solid clincher or clincher detachable tire—has no projecting ends that fit in under a fixed, hooked shape side of the rim.

The Straight Wall tire cannot become cemented to the rim. It is a readily detachable tire under all conditions, and at the same time it sets solidly and cannot slip or come off until the bead on the rim, that holds the tire in place, is removed.

This Tire Will Not Rim Cut

Since 1905 developments have been fulfilling the claims for the Straight Wall type tire. It has finally made good on every count.

Died From Sunstroke.

Streetsville, June 30.—As the result of sunstroke, received while boating on the river here Tuesday afternoon, Frank Carr, a young man, whose home is in Toronto, died yesterday morning.

Mr. Carr, who had recently returned from Cobalt, was here on a holiday and was visiting his brother, who is the proprietor of the Franklin House. Deceased was 24 years of age.

Underwriters Fined.

Newport News, Va., June 30.—President Dan B. Harris, General Manager A. B. Andrews and 21 members of the Southeaster Underwriters' Association were convicted here yesterday in a magistrate's court, of unlawfully conspiring to control insurance rates in this city, and were fined $500 each. The cases were appealed.

Things Look Brighter.

Montreal, June 30.—Things look more like a settlement to-day between the railways and their employes than at any time since negotiations began. Meetings took place yesterday, but there was nothing to report, delay being caused by the absence from the city of Vice-President Fitzhugh of the Grand Trunk.

Men Blown to Bits.

Port Arthur, June 30.—Two foreigners, Carlton and Olison, while working on the Transcontinental above Nepigon, were blown to atoms by the explosion of dynamite used in blasting.

Olison was blown over 100 yards in the air.

WHEN YOU ARE SICK

It doesn't take a good doctor to tell that — most any one could do that much, but to tell exactly the nature of the disease sometimes calls for the utmost skill of the Physician. Most anybody by a few simple tests could tell that your eyesight was defective and that you needed glasses of some kind, but to diagnose the exact trouble and fit the right glasses calls for more than ordinary skill.

We have made that one thing a study for years, and we are in business to bring wrong eyes and right glasses together. Satisfaction Guaranteed.

LAID AT REST

All that was mortal of Eugene Jos. Coughlin was laid away at St. Peter's cemetery this morning amidst many expressions of sorrow and regret at the closing of so bright and promising a young life. Requiem high mass was said by Rev. Dr. O'Brien at the Sacred Heart church, where the remains were taken from the family residence. Many beautiful floral offerings were received and these included tributes from the deceased's friends and from those who had been associated with him in the Ottawa Bank.

The pallbearers were Messrs. Vincent Sullivan, W. Cahill, L. Giroux, M. O'Brien, Vincent Corkery, and F. Hickey.

BAND ARRIVED IN PLENTY OF TIME

A stitch in time saves nine, but a visit to a garden party ahead of time doesn't save another trip.

Last night the Salvation Army band anticipated the date of the Cavanville strawberry festival a week in advance of the scheduled evening, and on their arrival at the happy eating grounds were told that the sweet strains that went with the strawberries would not be required for seven days hence.

But the drive in the soothing air of the country was worth something.

STRAWBERRY SOCIAL WAS BIG SUCCESS

Between 300 and 400 people attended the strawberry festival held under the auspices of St. Mark's W. A., Otonabee, on the lawn of the residence of Mr. and Mrs. John Dixon, Drummond station. The weather was all that could be desired. The menu consisted of strawberries and cream, bread and butter, pies, cake and tea. A refreshment booth was also on the ground, at which bananas, ice cream lemonade, candies, etc., were for sale. A programme was given from the verandah, in which Mr. Chas. Coleman, Mr. H. Dudley, Misses Dorothy Langfeldt, Margaret Turner and Dorothy Collins took part. Mr. J. J. Turner, jr., as church warden of St. Luke's expressed kind greetings from the parish church, and Mr. Joshua Smithson, warden of St. Mark's, expressed a hearty welcome to all present. Rev. Dr. Langfeldt was chairman. The happy event was brought to a close by singing the National Anthem.

The Weather

Though the weather in this district has been quite warm and sultry for some weeks, no very high temperature have yet been reached. West of Toronto much higher readings of the thermometer have occurred. In the Northwest particularly high temperatures have occurred. Hot weather with lack of rain, is said to be causing much anxiety to the farmers generally in the west, and unless rain comes speedily, the results may be serious. In this locality we nave had three showers during the month, but more is needed. Highest temperature yesterday, 86 degrees in the shade. Highest this summer, on the 02th, 87 degrees.—W.P.

RE NON-BURNING ELECTRIC LAMPS

The Fire, Water and Light Committee met last night to consider the question of dealing with the reduction from the Light and Power Co's. account for lights that had not been burning during the hours called for by contract.

According to the contract the company is to have no responsibility in connection with lights not burning when the causes are beyond the company's control.

Ald. Morgan, chairman of the committee, was authorized to act in the matter.

ITALIAN MURDERER DIES ON SCAFFOLD

Ventracini Kept His Nerve at His Execution This Morning — Placed His Soul in Hands of Merciful God He Said in Letter to His Wife—Death Came in Nine Minutes.

Special to the Review.

Toronto, June 30.—Pasquale Ventracini, the Italian, who murdered Raffael Fabbio, a fellow countryman, in this city March 6th last, expiated his crime on the scaffold this morning. The condemned man, white faced, and with his nerves evidently strung to the highest tension, walked steadily from his cell to the death chamber between two Italian priests, and accompanied by Rev. Father Redmond, of St. Mary's Cathedral. Nine minutes elapsed after the falling of the drop before the doctor pronounced him dead. Ventracini's last act was the writing of a letter to his wife, in which he said he placed his soul in the hands of the merciful God, and that he hoped to go to heaven.

Ellis officiated at the hanging.

TENDER ACCEPTED FOR PUBLIC LIBRARY BASEMENT FLOOR

Peterborough Hardware Company Will Supply Locks and Hardware Trimmings—Ice for the City Fountain—Property Committee in Session

At the Property Committee meeting last night a tender was accepted from Messrs. Howard, Shuter and Rutherford Brothers for the building of the concrete floor in the basement of the new public library (all except that which is included in the contract) and for the covering of all steam pipes with timber. The sum involved in the tender is $225.

Architect Blackwell was granted $100.00 on account in connection with the Isolation Hospital.

The Peterborough Hardware's contract for $160.00, for supplying the locks and hardware trimmings for the new public library building, was accepted.

The chairman reported that he had had a testing room fitted up in the city building for the medical health officer, and one for the industrial commissioner and other work of a similar character done. He also reported that the contract for supplying ice for the city fountain at the police station had been awarded to the Allin Ice Co., which will furnish the ice at $75.00 a year, and that the fountain had been given a new sheet iron covering and supplied with a new basin.

The chairman was instructed to see that another electric lamp was placed in the band stand at Victoria Park.

Chairman Duncan presided at the meeting.

THE BATTERY BOYS AT CAMP; NEWS LETTER FROM THE FRONT

What the 24th is Doing at Petawawa—Surgeon Denies His Death—Sprucing Up for the Arrival of General French

From Our Own Correspondent.

Camp Petawawa, 24th Battery, C. F.A., June 29.—Yesterday morning the Battery fired twenty rounds of blank, and also the same number in the afternoon. Gun laying, fuse setting and observation of firing was also the order of the day. All was done very well, and the boys were complimented very highly for their work. The horses stood the firing test well and returned to camp feeling like colts. To-day they will indulge in drilling, etc., as above.

AT HIS OWN FUNERAL.

This morning the writer, on getting out of his berth for a morning bath, was surprised to see a large wooden cross at the head of a big grave with a sign attached to the cross "Capt. H. C. Elliott, M.D., 10th Brigade Field Artillery, Petawawa." At first it struck one as if it was a grave of some ancient Indian warrior, but upon enquiry from some of the boys, found out that an empty cask had been procured, a large hole dug, and was placed therein and covered up. The sign was stolen from the surgeon's tent. A funeral procession was formed and the "remains!" interred. Shortly after seven this morning several "mourners" went to the grave and took off their hats with deep reverence. A few minutes afterwards the surgeon, upon emerging from his tent, was horrified to see the cross and grave, and asked what was up. Upon being informed it contained his remains he was more than furious and loudly demanded who were the perpetrators. He accused one of the officers, who informed him that he was in error, and demanded an apology, which was given with bad grace. Upon the surgeon looking at his grave, he was thunderstruck to see a large procession passing by it, all with heads bowed and canting a prayer! After it had passed, two of the mourners planted huckleberry flowers on the grave.

him at last."

An epitaph was also placed on the foot-stone, thusly:—

Not a sound was heard,
Not a funeral note,
As the corpse to the rampart they hurried,
Not a soldier discharged a farewell shot,
O'er the grave where the hero was buried. Alas!

AWAITING THE GENERAL.

It is expected that General French will arrive here in a couple of days. The boys are getting in readiness for the occasion.

All are well here, and everyone in good spirits—not alcoholic spirits—as this is local option. The weather still keeps warm, but does not seem to affect the boys.

Have got to get busy now, so no more at present.

ST. ANDREW'S S. S. PICNIC

An ideal day, a delightful excursion, and an enjoyable picnic throughout are terms that in some measure describe the annual outing of St. Andrew's Sunday school, held yesterday to Jubilee Point and Idyl Wyld. Great praise is given the management of the Otonabee Navigation Company for the courtesy, kindness and care shown by its officials throughout the day.

Jubilee Point was reached at 11.30 after a most delightful trip down the river. The conditions at the Point were most satisfactory. The cool breezes of Rice Lake made the hours spent in the grove most refreshing. The sports were run off after dinner. The list of prize winners is subjoined. The names of the lady winners are not published, as they are not open for the balance of the season to accept any challenges from professionals. It may, however, be observed that they were in a class by themselves.

The excursionists crossed the lake to Idyle Wyld at 2.30 p.m., and as they approached the wharf where All Saints' picnickers were embarking a ringing three cheers were given by the Scotch Saints to the All Saints, which was reciprocated by the waving of handkerchiefs.

The trip home was made at 4.45, and the Wolfe street wharf reached precisely at 8 o'clock, and everybody was happy.

The following is the list of prize winners:—

Boys' race, under 7 years—1, Arthur Hill; 2, Fred Batten.

Girls' race, under 7 years—1, Marjorie Cox; 2, Florence Gardiner.

Boys' race, between 7 and 9 years—1, Joe Batten; 2, Jack Eaton.

Girls' race, between 7 and 9 years—1, Florence Robertson; 2, Helen Brodie.

Boys' race, between 9 and 12 years—1, Gerald McClelland; 2, Gordon Henry.

CHIMES USED WITH FINE EFFECT AT BAND CONCERT

The new tubular chimes of the 57th Regiment band were heard last night for the first time, when they were used in a couple of numbers. The first selection in which they were employed was a sacred number, Bandsman Hughes very efficiently operating the sweet sounding bells.

Mr. Jean Desgrands, a talented cornetist of the band, effectively played the chimes for "Yuletide," a Christmastide number, and for "The Last Rose of Summer," the band and chimes arrangement of which he made himself.

The entire program was very much enjoyed by the immense audience.

SPORTING NEWS

BALM FOR THE "AFTER THE HOLIDAY" CROWD

The "after the holiday" crowd will be able to rest up at Riverside Park Saturday afternoon when the weekly doubleheader of the City League will be pulled off. P.A.C. and T.A.S. meet in the first game at two o'clock, and four o'clock will see the West Ends and Strathconas hustling for the honors.

While it may look like a dream for the champions in the first affair, the result may be entirely different. The southenders won a memorable go with the T.A.S. about this time last season, and are just as likely to get away with another.

It's up to the Straths to add another to their one win record, and the cellar brigade will go on to the field against the West Ends with the express purpose of making up for their defeat in the first game.

Train Killed Four.

Baltimore, Md., June 30.—Four men are dead, one is said to be fatally injured and three have less serious hurts as a consequence of a passenger train coming at top speed yesterday morning upon a gang of 11 carpenters engaged in making repairs to a trestle of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad.

Chicago Meat Prices Drop.

Chicago, June 30.—Retail beef prices have dropped sharply following the wholesale price reduction of Monday. Quotations revealed that sirloin steak which on Monday sold for 18 1-2 cents per pound, could be had for 16 1-2. Porterhouse that had sold for 22 cents was quoted at 20.

HAS FACED BOTH MEN BUT PICKS J. JOHNSON

Hank Griffin, an ex-ring artist, of Ann Arbor, Mich., picks Jack Johnson, for the big bank roll on July 4th.

Says Hank:—Jeffries is going to do the rushing and Johnson is going to keep out of his way. When Jeff rushes, the negro is going to be there only long enough to hit and get away. He will wear his opponent down. On the other hand, if Johnson tries rushing it will be all over in a shorttime.

Griffin has fought both men. He taught Jeffries boxing lessons for six months and afterwards lost to him in seventeen rounds. Some time afterwards he won the decision in a go with Johnson.

MISS M. BURNETT WON LADIES' TOURNAMENT

Out of an entry of eighteen ladies in the city tennis tournament, Miss M. Burnett won out in the final series played on the golf grounds last evening, with Mr. R. J. Devey as referee. Miss Hall faced Miss Burnett winning the first set 6—2, set No. 2 falling to Miss Burnett 6—4. The deciding set was finely contested, Miss Burnett winning by 9—7. Both ladies are to be congratulated on the splendid tennis played, which was much enjoyed by those present.

Desert Gems.

In 1889 a hunter in the northwest of New South Wales wounded a kangaroo. The animal went off through the mulga and the salt bush at a pace too fast for the hunter to follow and was soon out of sight. The hunter was a bushman and did not despair. He followed the blood trail, hopeful of a short search and a speedy bag. At one point of the pursuit it may be that the trail grew faint and necessitated a closer inspection. Anyway the hunter stooped and picked up a piece of stone. This he examined. The red spot was not on it; it was in it. It was not blood that he saw; it was opal. Such was the beginning of the White Cliffs opal fields.

Waded to Church.

The inhabitants of Cruit, an island in Donegal, have been sorely inconvenienced lately by the collapse of a bridge. At a District Council meeting it was stated that there had been a football match in the district, and when the teams were crossing the structure it caved in with a crash, many of the passengers being immersed in the sea. The people going to mass on the following Sunday had to wade across up to their waists, and after the service wade back again. Such heroic conduct ought to get them a new bridge soon.

Old Heads Found.

An important archaeological "find" was made near Castlepollard, County Westmeath, Ireland, the other day, where some men were engaged making fences on a ranch. The relics comprised ten human skulls, some of which had teeth still left in them, shin bones, vertebrae and finger bones, as well as some swords of an old pattern and deer horns. The bones were all of huge size, and must have belonged to men of far distant times.

Central Asia.

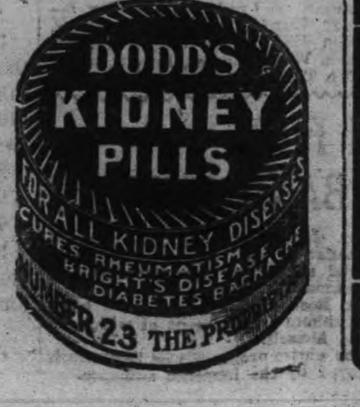
The people living in the cotton belt of central Asia represents a conglomerate of all the races and nations that in ages past have inhabited these regions, from pure Aryans to full fledged Mongols. They all adhere to the Mohammedan faith and speak various dialects of the Tartar-Sart-Bokhara language except in the southwestern part, where the influence of the Persian language is felt.

A Courtier's Retort.

Queen Bess had a pretty wit, they say, which she was by no means loath to exercise upon her subjects. She got the worst of it in one verbal duel at least. Observing in the garden a courtier to whom she had promised promotion that had not yet been realized, Her Majesty thrust her head out of the window and called to him.

"What does a man think of, Sir Edward, when he thinks of nothing?"

"Of a woman's promise, your majesty," was Sir Edward's response.



"Old Red Blood of Adam" Entices Great Crowd of Men to Reno

Jack London Declares Nevada City Got the Jeffries-Johnson Fight Through a Foul Blow Such as Would Not Be Countenanced in Any Prize Ring.

CONDITION OF FIGHTERS, BY JACK LONDON.

[Copyright, 1910, in the United States by the New York Herald Company. All Rights Reserved.]

RENO, Nev., June 24.—Reno has always been a live town, but just now it is quickening to a greater and growing liveliness than it has ever known. Every train, east or west, brings in the sporting men, fight followers and the inevitable correspondent. It is to wonder. On the other hand, there is no wonder about it. There must be a large remnant left of the large bloodedness of the English speaking race to evince such a tremendous interest in the particular sport of sports which it originated and developed until it became stamped to-day into that crystallization of many generations, the Marquis of Queensberry rules.

Everybody is arriving in Reno. All the men whom one has met in all the earth he meets again here, in Nevada's metropolis. From all the lions of the old days down to the latest cubs they are here; fight fans, grizzled and time worn, who remember far beyond the aching thirty-nine rounds at Chantilly, France, between Sullivan and Mitchell, down to the youngsters of yesterday who were not dry behind the ears when Corbett and Fitzsimmons fought their historic fight in Carson City.

Never, in a war, at any one place, was congregated so large a number of writers and illustrators. When the Japanese threw fifty thousand men across the Yalu into the teeth of the Russians on the Manchurian shore, on the walls of Wiju, but eleven correspondents looked on. Many men were killed and the fate of great empires and ancient dynasties hung in the balance, yet only eleven men were there to tell what they saw to the world. But here in Reno to-day were ten times that number of correspondents.

Nor are they here to witness a bloody battle and the deaths of thousands. They are here to witness two strong men, hearty and husky, who will not kill each other, but who will attempt by skill and wit and gameness and endurance to outdo each other in a sport that calls to the uttermost for the exercise of all these faculties.

Cause of the Interest.

For the man who would know life as it is in all its naked facts, and not life as he surmises or dreams it ought to be, there is something of big and of basic importance in the contemplation of the world-wide interest manifested in this fight.

Why do men fight? Because of the money in it. An apt answer, but it will not apply to the following question:—Why do men go to witness fights? Certainly not to spend money. There are easier ways of spending money than by travelling all the way to Nevada. They want to see fights because of the old red blood of Adam in them that will not down. It is a bit of profound significant human phenomena. No sociologist nor ethicist who leaves this fact out can cast a true horoscope of humanity.

There is another way of looking at it. The newspaper editors are skilled purveyors to the public of information the public wants. Did a few men only desire this particular information the editors would be guilty of gross stupidity in sending to the front so large and expensive an aggregation of star sporting writers. But the editors are making no mistake. The point is that the public wants this information. The conclusion is that the public, despite countless asseverations to the contrary, is interested in prize fighting.

Certainly Reno is interested. Reno is also proud. She considers herself fortunate. Once again, as in no other modern way, will she put herself and the State of Nevada on the map. No masterpiece of prose, poetry, painting or sculpture could achieve this distinction for Reno. Well, it is a fact of life, and as a fact of life it is worthy of contemplation.

Calls It a Fluke.

And Reno got the big fight by a fluke. She got it because of a foul blow such as would not be countenanced in any prize ring. A Governor of a State whose function is to execute the law arrogated to himself the function of interpreting the law—a function that peculiarly and specifically belongs to the courts. Failing in getting an injunction from the courts, the Governor enforced his decree by calling for troops.

Every man who applauded this action applauded, consciously or unconsciously, a foul blow. Had such persons had a training in the brutal fair play of the ring they would have been fairer minded than to applaud the consummation they devoutly wished, but a consummation achieved in any way except devoutly.

But Reno got the fight and is putting forth a great effort to make good in the matter of housing and feeding and entertaining the army of guests that are descending upon her.

"Jack" Johnson has not yet arrived, but it seems as if all the rest of the world were already here. Jeffries is comfortably installed at beautiful Moana Springs. To-day in an old fashioned game of "two nine out" he sweated and batted and pitched and ran bases like a juvenile Cyclops. He was good to look upon. To such degree did the massive bulk of him loom up that other old time heavies in the game with him, such as Corbett and Choynski, looked like middleweights. Of entirely different build and texture is Jeffries from them. He is a big bear, heavy and rugged, and he is physically a man that one may well say occurs no oftener than once in a generation.

Jeffries was examined to-day by Mike Murphy, than whom there is no other who can better judge to the finest hair of a man's condition. Murphy's report was unequivocally favorable. More than that, it was enthusiastic. And yet a year ago Jeffries was reckoned a "has been." He has certainly devoted himself seriously and faithfully to the preparation for this fight.

To demonstrate that human nature is human nature the world over, whether in ships' forecastles, sewing circles or training camps, Sullivan and Corbett celebrated their meeting to-day by indulging in a tiff of neither mean nor dire proportions. Nobody was hurt and the militia was not called out.

THE JOKER AT WORK.

A rather amusing episode occurred the other day, in which two bankers of the town had the misfortune to be the victims of a practical joke. It appears that the two young men in question were down the river to spend the day. While there they decided to go for a swim, leaving their clothes on the river bank. They swam across to the opposite side. Meanwhile the young men of the neighborhood, seeing the wide gulf that separated the bankers from their clothes, thought it would be a good chance to play a practical joke on the. They accordingly procured some clothes belonging to the fair sex, and adorning themselves thus, they secured a boat and rowed across the river. The bankers saw them coming, and thinking they were a a couple of ladies, they ensconced themselves in the bushes. Meanwhile the young men in the boat kept rowing around the spot, much to the discomfort of the unfortunate victims hid in the bushes, who were experiencing much discomfort from the mosquitoes which infest the neighborhood. It was some time before they realized that a joke was being played upon them, and when they did they vowed vengeance on the men in the boat, but fortunately the jokers made their escape before their plans were put into execution.

WHAT'S NEW.

The Smart Cloak
a Parisian Model.

The smart summer cloak is a nondescript sort of affair—half cape, half coat—and wholly attractive. As pictured it is one of the newest wraps sent over from Paris and is of white cloth, with bands of black satin. The mingling of black and white effects is seen everywhere in the fashion world, but the color scheme is, of course, always subject to the fancy of the owner.

Origin of Folding Fan.

According to tradition, the convenient and almost universal fan, folding with its collapsible ribs not unlike some of the particular palm leaves, was invented in an emergency by a Japanese woman of noble extraction. Having retired into the temple of Micido, in Kyoto, to spend her widowhood in the seclusion of a nunnery, the pious woman had occasion to nurse the abbot during a fever, which, it is alleged, she cured by a gentle fanning produced by her hand at first, but afterward rendered more efficacious by employing a piece of paper ingeniously creased to radiate like the fingers of the hand and over which had been duly muttered a few dispensable incantations. This novel idea, due to an act of mercy, caught on at once and was carried out with gradual improvements as a remunerative occupation by the priests of the temple, who to this day, it is reported, have retained their renown for fanmaking. This fact explains why in Japan many fan shops still adopt the trade name of Micido. The lorgnette fan illustrated is a unique specimen that is owned by a collector.

Women Give Liberally to Charity.

Mrs. Thomas F. Ryan is a deeply religious woman and has given much time and money to charity institutions. In the last few years, it is estimated, her gifts have amounted to $2,000,000. Her single largest gift was for the rebuilding and refurnishing of the Cathedral of St. Peter in Richmond, Va. Helen Gould's gifts to charity are computed at $10,000,000. Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt's charity work amounts to more than $1,000,000, and rumor has it she will give a large amount for the establishment of a school with the aim of aiding children who are mentally defective, but who may be cured through the new discoveries in psychology. Anne Morgan, daughter of J. P. Morgan, is keenly interested in charity work, and she is said to have given at least $800,000. Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont's gifts to charity amount to more than $300,000.

When Using Gasoline.

The best way to use gasoline is to add common table salt to it. In this way you can remove spots from clothing or the most delicate fabric without leaving a ring around the edges.

It is said that many a dry cleaner's bill can be saved by this useful bit of knowledge.

Col. Roosevelt will go over the political situation in New York State with Governor Hughes.

Cookery Points

Just what to have for dinner, that query as old as the eternal feminine and as much of a puzzle, has been answered, at least partially, by Mrs. Alice Gitchell Kirk, who has just issued a comprehensive bulletin for the housekeeper.

The question is not alone "What shall we eat?" but what two, three or four things shall we eat at the same time in order that they may do us the most good and conserve our digestions?

Since most housekeepers either cannot or will not find time to take a course in the chemistry of food or in dietetics, the question of correct food combinations must be answered for them. The schedule Mrs. Kirk has published is a large wall placard, containing a classified list of approximately all the dishes which a housewife would be apt to serve for any meal.

In order that the housekeeper may know how to combine the proper foods these dishes are arranged in numbered groups, and the dishes in each group of the same number may be served together.

With this wall placard comes a little pad, also meant to hang on the wall. On this the housewife jots down whatever leftovers may be on hand, as she puts them away.

It is then possible to build up a good meal from what food is on hand.

If cold roast beef is the principal leftover it is easy to find its number among the meats.

To plan a good menu one then simply looks under vegetable salads and desserts of the same number.

The method will at least serve to save the gray matter of the housekeeper, whether or not it saves the digestions of the family or the household allowance.

The Cook Born and Made.

"If yo' common sense don' tell you what to cook, honey, den go 'long to de cookin' school. I does it out o' my head, and somehow the folks fatten on it."

So spoke the old aunty whose black face bent over the cook stove and whose hands turned marvels from the frying pans.

"Bless yo' heart, honey, I don' measure; I jest know. I don' taste; I know how it ought to be with a shake of pepper and a pinch of salt. I know when it ought to have butter, and you can't fool dis chil' with any recipes. I know directly jus' what's in 'em."

This is the born, the inspired cook, whose imagination runs ahead of her tongue in the cooking art. Of course we are not all born that way, but luckily some of us are. Such a cook knows how to balance a dinner perfectly. The heavy foods and the greasy ones will be offset by tender, crisp salads and refreshing vegetables, and the dessert will cap the climax.

The tactless, unimaginative person would have grouped a lot of things she liked and probably begun with whipped cream on the soup and carried it through regardless of satiety until whipped cream made foam on the dessert and the coffee cup. This is the person who needs the bill of fare of the cooking schools and must have a cookbook at her elbow.

French Terms Used In Cooking.

Chateaubriand—Name of a French viscount, whose favorite dish, a thick cut from the center of a large fillet of beef nicely broiled, hands down his name. The steak should be cut to weigh one pound and a quarter.

Chaufroid—Name given to cold dishes, also to the sauce that masks them, of chicken, game, cutlets, masked or covered with a cold gelatin sauce, decorated with truffles, white of egg, etc., and the decorations covered with a thin layer of aspic jelly. The word means "hot-cold."

Chiffonade—Fine shredded, cut in narrow ribbons, often applied to salad, as "salad chiffonade," a salad in which all or a part of the ingredients are shredded or cut in ribbons.

Chinois—A pointed strainer with fine holes used to strain soups and sauces, often called Chinese strainer.

Queenstown Potatoes.

For Queenstown potatoes cut three or four peeled potatoes into small wedge shapes, soak them in cold water for an hour, drain and dry them and fry in deep fat until they are a golden brown. Then drain, turn them into a frying pan with a tablespoonful of melted butter and a couple of sweet red peppers cut into shreds and cook until all are nicely browned and very hot.

Raised Eyebrows.

There is little use to massage for wrinkled forehead when lines are constantly formed from the habit of raising the eyebrows with every word. Often one is unconscious of this trick and should ask to be reminded. This may provoke unpleasantness, so a safer way is to use adhesive plaster.

Whenever one is to stay in the house for several hours at a stretch paste lengthwise strips of adhesive plaster at outer corners of eyebrows and just above the nose. Paste with face in repose, and each time the brows are elevated the drawing of the plaster jogs the memory.

The Italian Chamber unexpectedly voted about $0,193,000 for diragible baloons for the army.

Sifton Elected.

Edmonton, June 30.—With ten polls heard from, Premier Arthur L. Sifton of Alberta has a majority of 140. The same polls at the general election gave Campbell, retired Liberal member, a majority of 50.

Medicine Hat, June 30.—Former Judge Mitchell, who succeeds A. G. Cross as Attorney-General, carried every poll in the city, winning by 116 votes here.

Twenty polls give Mitchell 284 majority with seventeen places to hear from in the back country from where returns will not be received until tonight.

British Government Pleased.

HOW CANADA REGULATES ITS TIME

From early days the clocks of Toronto have been regulated by time obtained at the Observatory from star transits across the meridian, and in more recent years the time service over the larger part of the Dominion has been performed by meteorological observers and paid for out of the meteorological appropriation. By the present system the director of the observatory at McGill University obtains time by transit observations, and the Observatory clock automatically transmits signals to various parts of Montreal, including the Grand Trunk and Canadian Pacific Railways, which companies distribute it along their lines. Quebec Observatory gives time signals to that city, and the director of the Saint John Observatory sends time signals throughout the Maritime Provinces, including the dropping of time balls in both Saint John and Halifax and the transmission seaward of a noon signal by wireless telegraphy for the benefit of ocean shipping. About twice a month, in order to make comparison between the time signals sent out from Toronto and those sent out from the various observatories, telegraphic exchanges are made, the signals from outside stations being recorded electrically on the chronograph in the Central Meteorological Office, Toronto, thus assuring agreement and accuracy in the Dominion time service.—R. F. Stupart, writing on "The Canadian Meteorological Service" in the July Canadian Magazine.

George Taylor, aged 21, was perhaps fatally injured by falling one thousand feet at Belleville, N.J., with a parachute that failed to open properly.

INTO WEDDED BLISS
LAST OF JUNE BRIDES

LUFFMAN—BABCOCK.

In the presence of numerous friends and relatives of both parties, Miss Nettie Babcock and Clarence Luffman were married at 6 o'clock last evening.

The ceremony was performed by the Rev. W. C. Riddiford at the home of the bride's father, 35 Jackson avenue.

The bride looked very becoming in a gown of white silk, and was assisted by Mrs. Eva Watley.

Mr. George Watley was best man.

At the conclusion of the ceremony the guests, numbering about twenty, partook of a dainty wedding supper.

Mr. and Mrs. Luffman went to Lindsay and Belleville on a wedding trip to spend a few days with friends, and on their return will reside on Albert street.

The bride's going-away dress was of dark blue.

Both bride and groom were the recipients of many beautiful presents, including an organ from the bride's father.

MOYSE—WARD.

The wedding took place yesterday morning at All Saint's church, of Miss Alice Myra Ward, of Peterborough, and Mr. Herbert Moyse, of Bowmanville, Rev. Mr. Trumpour officiated.

The bride is a sister of Mrs. Nelson Routley, Park street.

Both bride and groom were unattended, and at the conclusion of the ceremony, a dainty lunch was served at the residence of Mrs. Nelson Routley, Park street, the bride's sister.

Mr. and Mrs. Moyse left on the 11:40 G.T.R. for Bowmanville, where they will reside.

McILLMOYLE—STOCKDALE.

At St. John's church yesterday afternoon, the marriage took place of Mr. Harry McIllmoyle and Miss Annie Stockdale. Both of Buckhorn.

The contracting parties were unattended and the ceremony was performed by the Rev. Canon Davidson.

Mr. and Mrs. McIllmoyle will reside in Buckhorn.

CARSCALLEN—SMITH.

On Wednesday, June 29th, at four o'clock, at the home of the bride's father, Mr. John E. Carscallen, 512 Parnell street, the marriage of Miss Della E. Carscallen to Mr. Harrison B. Smith, of Belleville, took place, Rev. Charles H. Coon performing the ceremony.

The bride, unattended, beautifully dressed in champagne gloria cloth and carrying a shower bouquet of roses and carnations, entered with her father to the strains of Mendelssohn's wedding march, played by Miss Myrtle Coon.

A small company of immediate friends were present as guests, and after partaking of a dainty dejeuner, saw the happy couple off upon their honeymoon, which will be spent at Port Hope, Cobourg and other points.

Mr. and Mrs. Smith will reside in Belleville, where the groom is engaged in a prosperous business.

LOCOMOTIVE WENT THROUGH BRIDGE

Special to the Review.

Toronto, Ont., June 30.—S. Wharren, a Grand Trunk Railway fireman, was killed, and W. K. Campbell, an engineer, whose home is in Mimico, and James Hewitt, yardmaster, who lives at 109 Malvern avenue, East Toronto, were injured this morning, as the result of the collapse of the trestle bridge in the Grand Trunk yards at East Toronto.

An engine was hauling two cars of coal up the chute, when the wooden posts gave way without the slightest warning, and the engine and the cars crashed into a heap below.

The collapse of the chute was due to the taking away of the coal beneath it, the coal having acted as a support to the posts.

AMONGST RICE LAKE BREEZES

The steamer Otonabee had a big contract on its hands yesterday when it was called upon to carry the large number of excursionists of the All Saints' Sunday school on their annual outing.

The day was a happy one for all. The big boat arrived at Idyl Wyld at 11.30, and dinner was first looked after.

In the afternoon a programme of races and other sports were carried out to the great enjoyment of the young people.

Toward the latter part of the afternoon the excursionists were taken across the lake to Jubilee Point, where supper was served, and Wolfe street wharf was reached on the return trip home shortly before nine o'clock. Besides being an occasion for much enjoyment, the excursion netted a balance on the right side.

NICKLE BREAD LAW WILL HAVE NO LOCAL EFFECT

The new Nickle bread law comes into effect to-morrow, July 1st.

This will not effect Peterborough bakers, however. The new law fixes the standard weight at 24 ounces.

The leading bakeries, including Peterborough bakers, are already manufacturing bread of 24 ounces weight, and so there will be no need for citizens of Peterborough to be alarmed lest the price of bread will advance, owing to this new law.

In some other cities and towns the price may go up.

The Ladies' Aid of St. James's Church will hold a Strawberry Social at the home of Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Robinson, (Sandy Nook Garden) on evening of June 30th. Good programme will be provided. Admission 15 cents including Strawberries and Cream.

T. A. S. PICNIC TO-MORROW

A full course, no-meat dinner will be one of the appealing feature of the big picnic to-morrow under the auspices of St. Peter's T.A.S. The dining section will be in capable hands and bounteous and attractive viands will be served.

An organ will be given to the winner of the popular lady's contest.

PRESENTATION TO FATHER CASEY

Rev. Father Casey was yesterday made the recipient of an appropriate presentation by the entrance class of St. Mary's Convent School as a mark of the pupils' appreciation of his interest in their class during his time at the Cathedral.

CONFIRMATION AT ST. PETER'S

At the nine o'clock Mass on Sunday His Lordship Bishop O'Connor will administer the sacraments of confirmation and first communion to a large number of children from the Cathedral parish.

Three men were killed and another was seriously injured in a powder mill explosion at Valley Falls, N.Y.

With his wife watching him, John Frey, a high wire performer, fell 30 feet at Van Wert, O., and was killed.

Lee Ritchey, aged 15 years, was drowned while bathing at Franklin, Pa. He choked on a chew of tobacco after diving.

From Jest to Earnest.

Of his barristerial days Mr. Justice Grantham, the famous English judge, relates a remarkable coincidence. On circuit, as junior in Croydon, he, with some other members of the Bar, put up at a pastry-cook's in the High street. Included in the company was a clever pianist and vocalist, and his singing attracted crowds to the house. One night young Grantham opened the window and addressed the people outside as his "constituents." Curiously enough, eleven years later, what the future judge had done in fun he did in realty from the window of an hotel a few yards away. Realism is added to the anecdote when it is stated that on that occasion he was returned M.P. for Croydon.

The Impossible.

The Duke of Wellington wanted a certain piece of work done and instructed an officer of the Royal Engineers to do it. After examination the officer informed the duke that it was impossible.

The duke sent for another officer, a much younger man and attached to another division of the army. This officer did what the duke required.

The next morning there appeared in the "orders of the day" the following epigrammatic note: "He who in war fails to do what he undertakes may always plead accident, which invariably attends military affairs, but he who declares a thing to be impossible which is subsequently accomplished registers his own incapacity."

A Beef Ham.

Sir Walter Scott wrote little about meat and drink, but his description in "Waverley" of a Scotch breakfast is memorable, says The London Chronicle. "He found Miss Bradwardine presiding over the tea and coffee, the table loaded with warm bread, both of flour oatmeal and barley meal in the shape of loaves, cakes, biscuits and other varieties, together with eggs, reindeer ham and beef ditto, smoked salmon and many other delicacies." "And," as Samuel Weller would have observed, "a werry good idea of a breakfast too." But has any reader ever seen a beef ham? Fortunately the sideboards in Scott's time were of substantial build.

"SEVEN DAYS" FOR SUMMER RUN

Grace La Rue Wins Suit Against Hobart for $316,90

"Seven Days," the comedy by Mary Roberts Rinehart and Avery Hopwood, that has kept New York laughing for many weeks, has settled down for a summer run at the Astor Theatre. The success of this comedy proves that the public likes clean, wholesome fun and merriment. All the members of the company in "Seven Days" have been re-engaged by Wagenhals & Kemper, so that the original cast will be maintained.—The Clipper.

Grace La Rue (Mrs. Byron Chandler) has won a suit against George V. Hobart. On Thursday, June 16, a jury awarded to her $316.90 in a suit she brought in the Gates Avenue Municipal Court, Brooklyn, against Mr. Hobart, to recover the sum of $250. The verdict was for the sum sought, with interest and cost.

Miss La Rue alleged that Mr. Hobart agreed to write a vaudeville sketch for her for $500. She paid him $250 on account, she asserted, but the sketch was not delivered. Mr. Hobart stated that it was not his fault that Miss La Rue had failed to receive the sketch. He said that he was unable to complete it before he could get into communication with her to consult her as to certain features of it, including the music.—The Clipper.

RADIANT HAIR

New York Society Women's Hair Matched Only by Parisians

While much attention is given to choicest gowns by New York society women, the prevalent fad just now is the care of the hair.

For many years the clever women of Paris have been famed for the magnificent beauty of their hair.

"Glorious hair," a Virginian calls it; radiant and luxuriant that it not only attracts, but fascinates and compels unstinted attention.

But now that the elite of New York ever anxious to improve their beauty, have learned that Parisian Sage, a remarkable and almost marvellous hair nourisher and beautifier, is almost entirely responsible for the charming hair of the ladies of France, the demand for it has become enormous.

Parisian Sage is now sold all over Canada and in Peterborough by Wm. Madill, who is glad to guarantee it to eradicate dandruff, stop falling hair and itching scalp in two weeks or money back. Large bottle 50 cents.

PEOPLE AND CAPITAL ARE CANADA'S GREATEST NEEDS

In Speech at Dominion Day Banquet in London Hon. Mr. Fielding Defends the Immigration Laws and Says That Annexation is the Last Thing in Minds of Canadian Politicians.

London, July 2.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—The Dominion Day dinner held at the Hotel Cecil maintained the high standard of previous years, namely that of being the most successful dinner in London. Lord Strathcona presided for the fifteenth time. Among those present were Hon. W. S. Fielding, Hon. William Fisher, Hon. William Paterson, Sir William Mulock, Earl Crewe, Lords Balfour of Burleigh, Blyth-Shaw of Dunfermline, and Wenlock, G. H. Reid of Australia, W. Hall Jones of New Zealand, Richard Solomon of South Africa, the Bishops of Ripon and St. Albans, Judge Channell and A. W. Smithers.

Lord Strathcona and Justice Mulock proposed the royal toasts. The president who received an ovation, in giving the toast "Canada," welcomed the distinguished visitors and regretted the unavoidable absence of Earl Grey. The Dominion's progress, prosperity and wealth were his inspiring theme. In an eloquent speech, he made reference to the reported gold discovery in British Columbia, and counselled caution till more reliable information could be obtained. In response the Hon. Mr. Fielding, in a fluent and vigorous address, referred to the growing importance of this annual gathering and proceeded to emphasize Canada's two needs, which were capital and population.

Canadians, he said, rejoiced to see the tide of British investment in the Dominion greater than ever. It would bring satisfactory returns. As regards population the Finance Minister entered a strong defence of the purpose of the immigration laws. The interview of Sir A. Douglas was his next subject of reference. Mr. Fielding emphatically controverted each of the three points alleged to have been made by Douglas. The statement that annexation was at the bottom of the hearts of Ministers of the Dominion he characterized as amazing. There never was a moment in the history of Canada when there were less thoughts of annexation to the United States than at present. (Cheers.) Canada, north, south, east and west was and meant to be thoroughly British. Mr. Fielding next endeavored to remove some of the misconception which he found existed here regarding Canada's commercial arrangements. The impression was widespread here that in making these arrangements Canada had some way interfered with her liberty to deal with the Motherland as she might desire in the future.

He wished to correct that view. Canada had fought for freedom in this direction and won. She was not going to interfere in any degree with the principle she had m[illegible]ned in everyone of the treaties. T[illegible]as a desire to improve Canadian t[illegible] but in no one of them was there a single word to prevent the Mother Country making a preferential arrangement if they desired. Imperial fiscal arrangements, he declared, were domestic affairs, wherewith no foreign nation had a right to meddle. (Cheers.)

A loyal telegram having been sent to the King in the name of the 400 guests present, the president at this point read a gracious message of thanks and good wishes.

Hon. Sidney Fisher proposing the toast to the guests, added his testimony of Mr. Fielding's respecting the absence of any desire for annexation, pointing out that according to the last census of American settlers qualified for naturalization, 80 per cent. had taken out papers.

Lord Crewe, responding, said that self-government now also applied to international relations. He most heartily welcomed them. To state things that he knew the Canadian Government in framing its tariff took every care to avoid, if it could be done, including even the slightest injury upon British industry. Transactions of that kind were better carried out by men like Fielding than by home officials, however much their good will. (Hear, hear.)

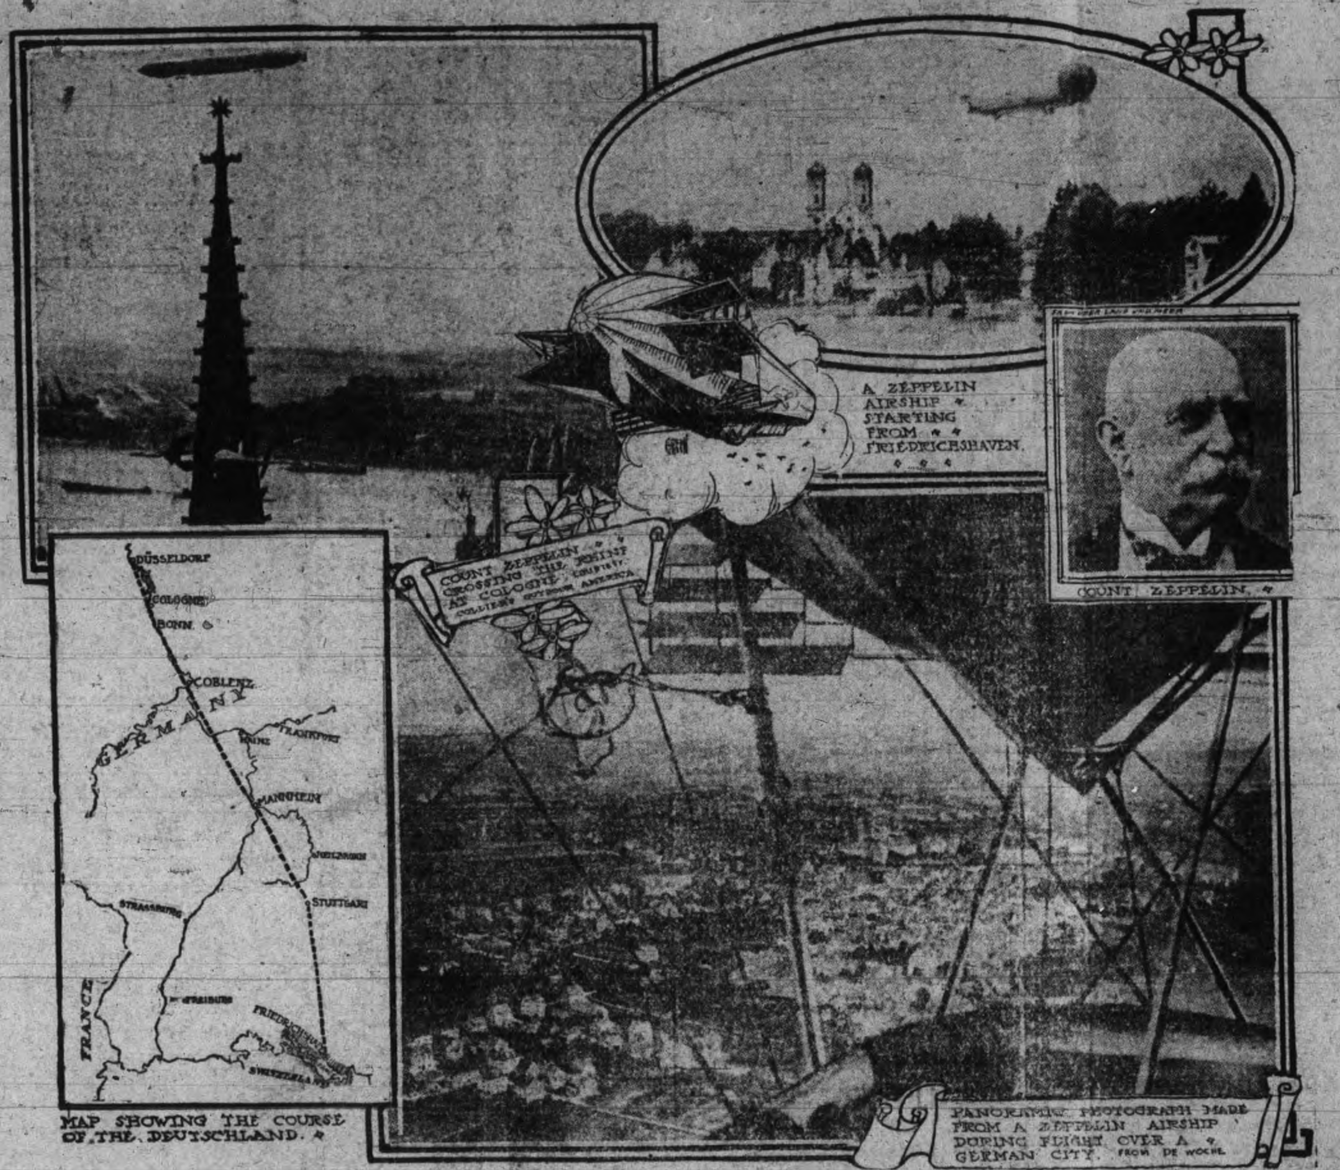
It had been their desire that Canada should settle her own affairs in her own way. To a superficial observer that might sound something like an advance towards independence, but what was aimed at was combined concerted action. (Cheers.)

In two excellent after dinner speeches the Bishop of Ripon and Sir G. H. Reid also responded. The toasts were concluded with one to the chairman, proposed eulogistically by Hon. Wm. Paterson, and enthusiastically honored.

Subsequently Lord and Lady Strathcona held a big reception in Queen's Hall.

Sir A. Douglas, in response to a question by wireless regarding the interview referred to by Hon. Mr. Fielding, replied from the Megantic, "Had no interview with any newspaper in Canada."

THE ZEPPELIN PASSENGER AIRSHIP



MAP SHOWING THE COURSE OF THE DEUTSCHLAND.

PANORAMIC PHOTOGRAPH MADE FROM A ZEPPELIN AIRSHIP DURING FLIGHT OVER A GERMAN CITY. FROM DE WOCHE

Dusseldorf, June 29.—One of the greatest achievements in the history of aerial navigation was accomplished when the first regular airship passenger service was inaugurated by the Deutschland, the giant dirigible built after the Zepplin model. With the veteran aeronaut himself at the steering wheel, the airship, carrying twenty passengers, travelled from Friedrichshafen, on Lake Constance, to this city, a distance of three hundred miles, in nine hours.

The weather was perfect and the motors worked faultlessly. The average time maintained for the complete course was approximately thirty-three miles an hour, but the 124 miles between Friedrichshafen and Stuttgart were covered on an average rate of forty-one miles an hour. The best speed for a single hour was forty-three and a half miles.

BLOW WITH FIST KILLS

Fight in a Port Credit Factory Ends Fatally.

Port Credit, July 2.—Another killing was yesterday added to the alarmingly large number which have taken place in Ontario within the last year or so. As a result Michael Maw of this village lies dead here and George Barker, accused of doing the deed, is locked up in Brampton jail, where he was lodged by Chief Constable Rutledge.

The fatality is said to have been the termination of a row which occurred at the works of the St. Lawrence Starch Co., in which both the participants were employed. Strained relations had evidently existed between the men previously to the outbreak of an open appeal to force. Barker, it is said, while passing Maw used an expression which caused the latter to lose his temper and throw a hammer at him. Barker promptly retaliated by knocking Maw down.

The man then started in to fight in deadly earnest. A second blow from Barker's fist again felled Maw to the floor. This time he did not rise to resume the contest. He was dead.

Barker was promptly arrested and taken to the county jail at Brampton. He is a young English immigrant, having only been eight or ten weeks in Canada. He is 21 years of age and of a stout and muscular build.

Coroner Dr. Sutton decided to hold an inquest on Maw, and this will take place at 2 o'clock Monday afternoon. Crown Attorney McFadden of Brampton will attend to watch developments.

SCOTCHMEN WILL REVISIT AULD LAND

Detroit, July 2.—There will be an international meeting of prominent Scotchmen at the Hotel Cadillac on Tuesday evening, July 5, to arrange for a trip to Bonnie Scotland, to include Scots from all parts of the United States and Canada. The international committee having the matter in charge expects to book 2,000 on a specially chartered steamer to go from New York or Montreal.

The trip is regarded as the greatest event in the annals of Scottish doings in America. A reception committee is already appointed by the lord provosts of Glasgow and Inverness to give the home-goers a royal Highland welcome. The tour will include Edinburgh, and all points of interest in Scotland. A feature of the trip will be a visit to [illegible] Castle, by special invitation from An[illegible] Carnegie.

Among those coming to the meeting here next week are: Col. B. M. Robertson, Toronto; E. L. Sutherland, Zorra, Ont.; Dr. W. C. Gilchrist, Orillia; R. D. McDonald, London, Ont.; Judge D. F. MacWatt, Sarnia; Hon. A. G. McKay, Owen Sound; J. A. Ross, St. Thomas; Donald Guthrie, Ingersoll; James Fourbes, Woodstock; Senator Sir George W. Ross, Toronto.

REDMONDITES NOT PLEASED

Retention of the Whisky Tax is Disappointing to the Irish,

London, July 2.—Chancellor Lloyd-George, in submitting the budget to Parliament, said that he felt justified in estimating the stated revenues on the assumption that the volume of trade this year and next would be greater than the country had ever experienced before. He proposed to retain the duty on spirits unchanged, and while admitting that there had been a loss of $7,000,000 in these duties, said that the consumption of spirits had been decreased by 10,000,000 gallons from the figures of the preceding year and that the moral gain to the state far outweighed the loss in revenue.

Mr. Asquith, the Premier, refused to make a statement in the House of Commons regarding the prospects of the conference between the Government and the Opposition over the legislation involving the veto power of the House of Lords.

The Chancellor having retained all the features of the previous budget in the current budget, the Unionists will oppose every stage of its progress. The Redmondites are disappointed at the retention of the whisky tax, but it is not likely that they will seriously object to the budget while the fate of the veto power of the House of Lords still is in the balance.

The remainder of the Parliamentary session will probably be quite uneventful. It will be devoted to routine matters, all the serious and contentious stages of the budget and other important measures being postponed until the autumn session. In the improbable event that the conference of the representatives of the Government and the Opposition on the veto question will arrive at an agreement, the proposals will be submitted to Parliament in November. Should the conference fail to agree, the struggle between the rival Houses will be revived in the autumn to an intensified degree.

IMPORTED CANADIAN WOMAN

Detroit, July 2.—Harry Preston was taken into custody yesterday by Leonard Coyne, an immigration inspector, on a charge of importing from Canad an alien woman for immoral purposes. Coyne, who has charge of the "white slave" work of the Detroit office, had been watching the general delivery window in the postoffice for two days. Preston is wanted in Niagara Falls. The woman in the case, Winnifred Parrington, is under arrest in Buffalo. Preston will be taken to Niagara Falls.

TORE JEWEL FROM EAR

New York, July 2.—A daring daylight burgary and a brutal assault on a woman by two men, who tore a diamond jewel from her ear after knocking her unconscious with a blackjack, occurred in Harlem yesterday, and after a lively chase, in which more than 500 men and boys participated, one man was caught. An angry mob stoned the prisoner on the way to the police station, where he was finally lodged and denied his guilt.

The victim of the assault, Mrs. Lena Kassina, 55 years old, on returning to her home in West 155th street from a shopping trip, noticed that her door had been jimmied. Inside she found two men ransacking her apartment. One of them jumped for her and struck her with a blackjack. She was found with one of her earrings torn from her ear and with a serious cut on the head. The man arrested gave him name as Barney Parker, and he was charged with attempted burglary. No one saw which way the second man fled.

CHAUFFEUR STILL UNCONSCIOUS

Hamilton, July 2.—The condition of Keith McCrae, the chauffeur of the Hobson car, which toppled over the side of the Strongman road Thursday evening, precludes the possibility of a correct solution of the accident being obtained from him. It is thought, however, that the steering gear of the car was faulty. McCrae suffered a slight concussion of the brain and up to last night had no idea of the fatality which attended the accident. He does not even remember who he had in the car with him. Miss Hobson's condition still give her physicians cause for the gravest alarm, though it is thought that she will get better. The remains of the nurse, Miss Perkins, who was killed, were taken to Lindsay yesterday evening for interment there this afternoon, after a service conducted by Rev. Canon Abbott and Rev. E. J. Etherington, at the residence of W. A. Wood, 265 South James street.

CRUSHED HIS HEAD WITH BRICK

Port Dover, July 2.—In endeavoring to protect a weak man from a cruel beating, one of the cruiser Vigilant sailors was set on here yesterday by the former's assailants and his skull caved in by a brick thrown by a man alleged to be Roy Becker of Simcoe, who has just been captured by parties who drove out into Simcoe. The injured sailor was carried to the hospital by shipmates. Dr. E. S. Hicks will perform the operation of trephining in an endeavor to save his life. Chances are favorable, as the victim has not lost consciousness.

7TH FUSILIERS IN CAMP AT SARNIA

Sarnia, July 2.—The 7th Fusiliers of London arrived here about nine o'clock Thursday. They were conveyed the Lake Huron Park by the Sarnia street railway and went under canvas, previously prepared by the regimental fatigue party.

Yesterday morning the regiment and band took part in the ceremony of flag-raising at the Sarnia General Hospital, after which the men were refreshed at the St. Andrew's Rink. In the afternoon the men enjoyed the cool breezes and surf of Lake Huron.

Waterloo Box Factory Burned.

Waterloo, July 2.—The Dominion Box Factory was completely destroyed by fire early yesterday. The building was entirely of frame, and is a complete loss. The office and most of the stock in the yard was saved.

The loss will probably reach $25,000 or $30,000, partly covered by insurance.

CAME DOWN WITH PLUNGE

Montreal, July 2.—Many thousands went out to Lakeside yesterday, and the public greatly appreciated the several features of the meet. There were nine different flights, and the interest was kept up till dark. Walter Brooken, who has become a prime favorite, went up 3,130 feet and established a record for the time being, 45 minutes and 21 seconds in the air. Count de Lesseps made a few flights, but his Bleriot machine did not work well.

Ralph Johnston's engine failed him after he had gone up a few hundred feet, and the biplane came down with a plunge, the tail being badly smashed.

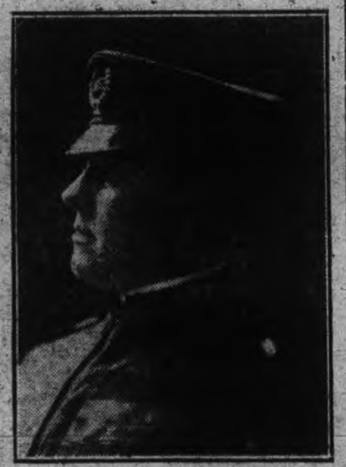
STUDENTS HAVE FIGHT

Lemberg, Austria-Hungary, July 1.—The two groups of Ruthenian and Polish students of the University of Lemberg got at each other yesterday, and, before the police had separated the combatants, many of the students had been seriously injured.

The feud, borne of racial jealousy, is as old as the university itself, and periodical clashes have occurred. For some time the bitter feeling has been held in bounds by the university authorities, but it broke with pronounced fury and led to a fierce battle for the possession of the campus.

Hundreds of students were involved. Many of them had revolvers and these were used. When the firing began, a strong force of policemen was summoned, and the fight became a three cornered affair. The officers finally succeeded in driving the students to cover. Broken heads were the rule, but in numerous instances injuries of a grave nature were found to have been inflicted.

Chief of Police G. Thompson



Peterborough's new Chief of Police arrived in the city yesterday at noon.

MARGARET ANGLIN AS "ANTIGONE"

San Francisco, July 2.—Before an audience of 8,000 persons gathered in the Hearst Greek Theatre, on the campus of the University of California, Margaret Anglin and her company appeared last night in a magnificent production of Sophocles' "Antigone." In artistry and in interest, beauty and illusion, the performance surpassed all expectations on the part of the public, while Miss Anglin's wonderful playing of the part of Antigone is declared by those who have followed her to be the finest work of her career.

MINERS' STRIKE CAUSING TROUBLE

Greensburg, Pa., July 2.—The Westmoreland coal district is in the throes of a miners' strike, which so far has caused several deaths, the use of dynamite, many arrests and much violent disorder.

The latest trouble arose yesterday at Export, when the home of two foreign miners were dynamited, resulting in the injury of a one-year-old baby, which was hurled from its crib across a room against a wall. The miners whose homes were wrecked are said to have remained at work while the others were out on strike. Late Thursday night marching strikers fired into the barracks of deputy sheriffs guarding the property of the Fort Palmer mines.

To date several men have been shot and killed, over fifty persons have been arrested and jailed, and the mine operators are claiming a heavy loss while the labor war is going on.

WHALERS TOLD TO DISREGARD TAX

Washington, July 2.—The question as to whether Hudson Bay is a mere clausean or closed sea completely controlled by Canada as is contended by the Dominion Government, according to Ottawa despatches, may be vitally affected by the decision of The Hague tribunal upon the large issues which are now being argued before it by eminent British and American counsel.

While the question came up in a rather incidental way, through the assertion by the Canadians of their right to impose a small tax upon American vessels entering Hudson Bay, the payment of that tax might constitute a recognition of the Canadian title. In view of the possible construction of a new Canadian road to Hudson Bay, giving a much shorter route to European wheat shipments from the far west, the matter, it is said, is one which cannot be overlooked by far-sighted American statesmen.

Last year, for the first time, the attention of the State Department was attracted to the subject, and American whaling captains were advised that they need not pay the tax and they did not do so. There is no record of a similar instruction this year, as it is assumed that the Massachusetts fishermen are simply acting in conformity with the original declaration.

AVIATOR CURTISS DROPS BOMBS

Hammondsport, N.Y., July 2.—Glenn H. Curtiss, in the mimic war tests of the aeroplane which he is making over the waters of Lake Keuka, in the presence of officers representing the navy and army, hit the battleship target beneath him in 15 of his 22 efforts, the remaining seven shots missing the target by distances ranging from 30 to 50 feet, with one exception. The aviator achieved these results while flying at a fast rate of speed at altitudes ranging from 139 feet to 900 feet, the greater number of shots being attempted from heights of about 300 feet.

The weather conditions left nothing to be desired. The chief problem which this second day's test was intended to solve was whether an aeroplane in its rapid flight through the air is capable of hurling a projectile at a battleship with sufficient accuracy to hit a target within a given number of rounds. Curtiss was first allowed four trial shots at a target, which represents the deck of a battleship lying on the waters of Lake Keuka and measuring 500 feet in length by 90 feet in width. Two of the trial shots hit the target and two fell within 30 feet of it. Then, in 14 flights at various elevations in the morning, 14 missiles were dropped at the simulated Dreadnought. Of these ten hit the target, the other four falling within 50 feet of it. In the evening Curtiss made four more attempts to hit the target. Three were successful, one from a height of 900 feet.

RECEIVES A BLOODY EAR

Cleveland, July 2.—Wrapped around a bottle of alcohol in which lay a bloody human ear, Harry Coulby, president of the Pittsburg Steamship Co., received a letter here yesterday, in which he was threatened with mutilation and death if he refused to grant the demands of the sailors who have been on strike for two years.

The man to whom the ear belonged has already been identified as Edward Fraser, a non-union sailor, who was assaulted in Buffalo last Monday, and had his ear severed from his head by his assailants. He was picked up later by the police, dying from loss of blood. Across his breast was pinned a sheet of paper inscribed "Don't be a scab."

Sympathized With Her.

London, July 2.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—Mrs. Woolmear, the wife of a Toronto laborer, whom the immigration regulations did not permit to join her husband in consequence of his being an assisted emigrant, sailed on the Empress of Ireland by public subscription. Sympathizers decorated her cabin in flowers.

Carmen Sylva Is Better.

Bucharest, Roumania, July 2.—The condition of Queen Elizabeth of Roumania (Carman Sylva), who is suffering from a severe attack of appendicitis, is reported as improving.

MRS. VANDERBILT MADE A FLIGHT

New York, July 2.—Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt, jr., made a flight in an aeroplane with Clifford B. Harmon over the Hempstead Plains Thursday night. Three thousand persons who went to Mineola in the hope of seeing some one fly saw a nattily-dressed little woman climb on the stool behind Mr. Harmon's seat in his big skeleton like air craft, but only a few of them knew her identity.

They simply saw her sit apparently nerveless in her seat some twelve feet above the ground and wave her hand when the machine started off. After it alighted and Mr. Harmon asked her how she like it she simply said:

"It was perfected splendid."

Then she stepped into her automobile and whisked away.

J. S. ROBERTSON HAS RESIGNED

Toronto, July 2.—Mr. J. S. Robertson, for nearly ten years executive secretary of the National Sanitarium Association, has resigned in order that he may devote his time to personal business, and private affairs. In 1901, when Mr. Robertson first associated himself with this work, there was only one sanatorium in Muskoka, having accommodation for seventy-five patients. To-day there are four sanatoria, that have grown from the one root — two in Gravenhurst, and two near Weston, with a total accommodation of three hundred and ninety-five beds.

DEMONSTRATION AT EXECUTION

Paris, July 2.—Liabeuf, the apache, who killed a policeman several months ago, was guillotined at daybreak yesterday.

The Socialists had attempted to get a reprieve for the assassin but failed, and a violent manifestation by the revolutionary Socialists occurred at the scene of the execution. At the very moment the blade fell, several of the rioters fired revolvers. The police charged them repeatedly with bayonets. A police captain was shot in the throat, and several persons were badly injured.

He was surprised at how the sores healed—"I took your NEW METHOD TREATMENT for a serious blood disease with which I had been infected for twelve years. I had consulted a score of physicians taken all kinds of blood medicine, visited Hot Springs and other mineral water resorts, but only got temporary relief. They would help me for a time, but after discontinuing the medicines the symptoms would break out again—running sores, blotches, rheumatic pains, looseness of the hair, swellings of the glands, palms of the hands scaling, itchiness of the skin, dyspeptic stomach, etc. I had given up in despair when a friend advised me to consult you, as you had cured him of a similar disease 8 years ago. I had no hope, but took his advice. In three weeks' time the sores commenced to heal up and I became encouraged. I continued the NEW METHOD TREATMENT for four months and at the end of that time every symptom had disappeared. I was cured 7 years ago and no signs of any disease since. My boy, three years old, is sound and healthy. I certainly can recommend your treatment with all my heart. You can refer any person to me privately, but you can use this testimonial as you wish. W. THE LASH

Magistrate Jelfs, in Hamilton, on Wednesday sentenced Joseph Daniels to one week in jail and ten lashes. The brute got what he deserved. He had been kicking and beating his wife. The lash is excellent medicine. Some years in a rough community in the old land violent crimes against women were common. The judge sentenced three to a lashing and, as if by magic, the crimes ceased. The prison bars are hard, the cells narrow, the food and confinement galling. But the bare back, the whistle of the cat o' nine tails and the red stripe on the back is awful. Criminals, so statistics show, dread the lash more than imprisonment. There are many crimes which the lash would make less frequent.

MR. BORDEN'S TOUR

The success and enthusiasm which marked the tour of Mr. R. L. Borden, the Conservative leader, throughout Ontario demonstrated conclusively that the electors of that Province are determined at the next opportunity to sweep from power the Laurier administration, and put the affairs of the country into more capable and honest hands. Mr. Borden throughout the tour was welcomed as the man who could and would grapple with the dragon of graft, and no leader has been received with more evidence of good will and affection. And it was no empty message which Mr. Borden and Judge Doherty brought to the electors of the banner Province. The note of optimism rang throughout their addresses and as the leader aptly put it, there was absolutely no need of discouragement and such a word did not exist in the dictionary of the party. Mr. Borden in his speeches took up in a masterly way typical examples of the blunderings of the government which have cost the country so dearly, and which will continue so long as the reins of power remain in present hands. Over classification on the National Transcontinental, the scandal of the Quebec bridge, the gross extravagence and piling up of the debt, the waste of natural resources with the hand of every heeler in the public treasury, the alienation of lands to the detriment of the settler and the fattening of the friendly speculator, all these came in for stringent criticism and it can be safely said that never has the record of any government been more ruthlessly laid bare than by Mr. Borden on the tour which has just ended.

THE GLORIOUS 4TH

The FOURTH of July is at hand and during the 24 hours of its existence the people of the United States will give themselves up to estolic spasms. There will be the usual number of maimed, blind and killed. The usual number of fires and didn't know it was loaded. And when night falls, pandemonium commences again. The heavens are bright with rockets, the bars are full, men are full, the streets are full, and the nation is full of joy. And lo! The puritan fathers rose from the grave and walked upon the sons of men. Then they went back again disgusted. Some one had told them that the main thing on was a prize fight for the championship of the world.

THE HOLIDAY IS PAST

Well, the 1st of July is over, and it will soon be Civic Holiday. The flight of time is, to the man who thinks, one of the most awful facts of our existence. Tick! tick! No army can devise a method to stop the hands of the great clock for a single second. No navies, not the armies and navies of the world can have the slightest affect on its relentless ticking. We arrive; we play a little while as children, then fancy we are more sedate, and once more a child we are ticked off to the spot where there are no clocks or storms, no victories or defeats. As to where we go, the child is as wise as the philosopher, as to when we go, none can tell. The First of July is gone, and it will not be long till the fall, the winter, the spring and summer, and 'twill be Dominion Day again. Tick! tock! We are moving towards the inevitable.

DEATH DEFYING FEATS

This from the Globe:—

> Is it not about time for the police to put an end to these "death defying" feats at the various summer resorts? Surely the people of Toronto have not so soon forgotten the poor woman who plunged to her death at the Exhibition as to want blood to cement their pleasures.

No class of entertainers have been hit harder by the demand for experts than the acrobats and vaudeville people. Nothing ordinary will do. The people are responsible for this, and they should stop in their crying for sensationalism. But they won't, they will cry the louder. Deacons and dames who would condemn a prize fight as hellish and horrible, preachers who will decry the fighters as tools of the devil, will sit open-mouthed and watch an automobile go down an incline at terrific speed and turn a complete somersault with its occupants. This is the latest thriller. Should anything happen there would be two funerals for the occupants would certainly be killed. The chances are some day that they will. Hanging by the teeth and crossing over Niagara, a parachute drop from the high sky, being shot from a cannon, these are a few of the stunts of this strenuous age. Men and women active in church and social life, feast on these sights, at the same time condemning the coming fight at Reno as vile. The acrobats and vaudeville stars dodge death. The worst the fighters do is to dodge a blow on the jaw by a human fist.

EDWARD TRUDEAU

Edward Trudeau, did you ever hear the name? Thirty-seven years ago Trudeau was aged twenty-six, with consumption staring him in the face. His were otherwise splendid prospects. He was a brilliant medical man. He had a winning personality. Did he sit down and cough himself into the grave? No, he went from New York into the wilderness and Nature healed him. Then he looked over the country in joy and sorrow. Joy that he knew Nature's secret so well, and in sorrow for the great host of consumptives. To-day the Adirondack Sanitarium is known the world over. What a tribute to the power of man. Are there fresh air sanitariums for consumptives with modern methods in America, in Canada, in Ontario, then thank Edward Trudeau, the man with the iron will, who called on Nature and was healed. He is still living, unassuming, working, loving humanity back to health again. Frail, yet virile, he is the outstanding figure at Saranac Lake.

OUR HOLIDAY.

Toronto Star.

Constant Reader suggests a better celebration of Dominion Day. It is rather too late to make arrangements for to-morrow, but in a year plans could be devised for giving the celebration of 1911 a national and historical character. And by 1917 we ought to be ready for a grand celebration of the fiftieth anniversary.

GUELPH PAYS TOO.

Exchange.

Statistics show that an electric car service cannot be made to pay all expenses, and provide a revenue for necessary improvements, in a city with a population of less than 40,000.—Kingston Whig.

Rather too sweeping an assertion. The Hamilton street railway paid well when the population of this city was under 40,000. It was a horse-car system then; but Calgary's electric street railway is on a paying basis, and London's electric railway paid when London had less than 40,000 people.

THE PEASANT.

Cotton's Weekly.

A story is told of an ignorant Russian peasant and a pawnbroker. The peasant wanted to raise some money so took his cloak to the pawnbroker and raised a dollar and a half on it, agreeing to pay back two dollars in the fall. Then the pawnbroker started to talk to the peasant telling him how hard it would be for him to raise two dollars in the fall. The peasant agreed. The pawnbroker explained how much easier it would be to raise fifty cents. The peasant agreed. Then the cold of winter was dwelt upon and how the poor peasant would suffer if he could not redeem his cloak when the time came. Finally the peasant was persuaded into giving back the dollar and a half in order that he might have but fifty cents to pay in the fall when it came time to get back his cloak. Foolish, no doubt. But the workers of Canada are standing just that kind of fool treatment under the legalized thefts of capitalism.

ANEAMIA'S VICTIMS

Can Find New Health in Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

Anaemia is simply a lack of blood. It therefore follows that the correct treatment for anaemia is one that increases the blood supply. That is really the only treatment that can possibly be successful. The symptoms of anaemia are easily recognized. Paleness, listlessness, the failure of food to nourish, headaches and often in women and girls backaches, faintness and palpitation of the heart. To restore the blood supply to its normal quantity and quality Dr. Williams' Pink Pills can be recommended with confidence. First, because they are known to have cured thousands of anaemic people—the highest possible recommendation. Secondly, they actually contain the ingredients that combine with the food and oxygen to make rich, red blood, without which no man, woman or growing boy or girl can be healthy.

Mrs. E. M. Bell, Red Deer, Alta., says:—"When I came to Alberta some years ago, a young girl, I had been suffering for a couple of years from anaemic blood. Doctors had done everything for me that could be done, but to no purpose. The doctors said I could not live, but that a change of climate might prolong my life, so my father brought me to Alberta. For a short time I did seem to improve, but soon became as bad, if not worse, than before I left Ontario. I could not walk upstairs, walk on the street, or stand in a room for more than a few minutes without fainting. Life was a burden, and I did not care whether I lived or not, and had given up hope of getting better. It was at this time Dr. Williams' Pink Pills were brought to my attention, and a supply was got for me. After I had used the second box I thought I felt some better, and I continued taking the Pills until I had used nine or ten boxes when I felt like a new person. I could walk, ride a bicycle and skate without the dreadful pains in my limbs I had before experienced, and in every way I was enjoying better health than ever before in my life. Now, whenever I feel the need of a tonic I turn at once to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and I am constantly recommending them to my friends."

Sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50, from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

YOUTH PUT ON A JOHN GILPIN

Last evening four young men decided to go for a drive, but their prospective journey received a rude setback. One of them lost his head, either through the excitement of the day or something else, and at the corner of George and Smith streets the John Gilpin performance attracted much attention.

The proprietor of the stables where the outfit was secured was notified and two of the employees made a quick run and the young fellows were relieved of the horse and buggy.

WICK BLUE FLAME
Oil Cook-stove

What a contrast! The kitchen no longer is stifling hot, the work is now done with comfort, and the housewife is not worn out with the heat.

She saves her strength, keeps her health and is better able to enjoy the summer.

The New Perfection does everything that any other stove can do—all the family cooking, baking, washing and ironing. No smoke, no dust, no odor. Heat is applied directly and not wasted. A turn, and the flame is out.

The New Perfection stove has a Cabinet Top with shelf for keeping plates and food hot, drop shelves for the coffee pot or saucepans, and nickeled towel racks.

It has long turquoise-blue enamel chimneys. The nickel finish, with the bright blue of the chimneys, makes the stove very attractive and invites cleanliness. Made with 1, 2 and 3 burners; the 2 and 3-burner stoves can be had with or without Cabinet.

The Mystery of The Yellow Room

By GASTON LEROUX

COPYRIGHT, 1908, By BRENTANO'S.

CHAPTER XXI.

On the Watch.

THE act, which staggered me, did not appear to affect Rouletabille much. We returned to the room and, without even referring to what we had seen, he gave me his final instructions for the night. First we were to go to dinner. After dinner I was to take my stand in the dark closet and wait there as long as it was necessary—to look out for what might happen.

"If you see anything before I do," he explained, "you must let me know. If the man gets into the 'right' gallery by any other way than the 'off turning' gallery you will see him before I shall, because you have a view along the whole length of the 'right' gallery, while I can only command a view of the 'off turning' gallery. All you need do to let me know is to undo the cord holding the curtain of the 'right' gallery window nearest to the dark closet. The curtain will fall of itself and immediately leave a square of shadow where previously there had been a square of light. To do this you need but stretch your hand out of the closet. I shall understand your signal perfectly."

"And then?"

"Then you will see me coming round the corner of the 'off turning' gallery."

"What am I to do then?"

"You will immediately come toward me, behind the man, but I shall already be upon him and shall have seen his face."

I attempted a feeble smile.

"Why do you smile? Well, you may smile while you have the chance, but I swear you'll have no time for that a few hours from now."

"And if the man escapes?"

"So much the better," said Rouletabille coolly. "I don't want to capture him. He may take himself off any way he can. I will let him go—after I have seen his face. That's all I want. I shall know afterward what to do, so that as far as Mlle. Stangerson is concerned he shall be dead to her even though he continues to live. If I took him alive Mlle. Stangerson and Robert Darzac would perhaps never forgive me. And I wish to retain their good will and respect.

"Seeing, as I have just now seen, Mlle. Stangerson pour a narcotic into her father's glass, so that he might not be awake to interrupt the conversation she is going to have with her assailant, you can imagine she would not be grateful to me if I brought the man of the yellow room and the inexplicable gallery bound and gagged to her father. I realize now that if I am to save the unhappy lady I must silence the man and not capture him. To kill a human being is no small thing. Besides, that's not my business unless the man himself makes it my business. On the other hand, to render him forever silent without the lady's assent and confidence is to act on one's own initiative and assume a knowledge of everything with nothing for a basis. Fortunately, my friend, I have guessed—no, I have reasoned it all out. All that I ask of the man who is coming tonight is to bring me his face so that it may enter"—

"Into the circle?"

"Exactly! And his face won't surprise me!"

"But I thought you saw his face on the night when you sprang into the chamber?"

"Only imperfectly. The candle was on the floor, and his beard"—

"Will he wear his beard this evening?"

"I think I can say for certain that he will. But the gallery is light and now I know—or at least my brain knows—and my eyes will see."

"If we are here only to see him and let him escape, why are we armed?"

"Because, if the man of the yellow room and the inexplicable gallery knows that I know, he is capable of doing anything! We should then have to defend ourselves."

"And you are sure he will come tonight?"

"As sure as that you are standing there! This morning, at half past 10 o'clock, Mlle. Stangerson, in the cleverest way in the world, arranged to have no nurses tonight. She gave them leave of absence for twenty-four hours, under some plausible pretexts, and did not desire anybody to be with her but her father, while they are away. Her father, who is to sleep in the boudoir, has gladly consented to the arrangement. Darzac's departure and what he told me, as well as the extraordinary precautions Mlle. Stangerson is taking to be alone tonight, leaves me no room for doubt. She has prepared the way for the coming of the man whom Darzac dreads."

"And what we saw her do was done to send her father to sleep?"

"Yes."

"Then there are but two of us for tonight's work?"

"Four; the concierge and his wife will watch at all hazards. I don't set much value on them before, but the concierge may be useful after, if there's to be any killing!"

"Then you think there may be?"

"If he wishes it."

"Why haven't you brought in Daddy Jacques? Have you made no use of him today?"

"No," replied Rouletabille sharply.

I kept silence for awhile; then, anxious to know his thoughts, I asked him point blank:

"Why not tell Arthur Rance? He may be of great assistance to us?"

"Oh," said Rouletabille, crossly, "then you want to let everybody into Mlle. Stangerson's secrets? Come, let us go to dinner. It is time. This evening we dine in Frederic Larsan's room—at least if he is not on the heels of Darzac. He sticks to him like a leech. But, anyhow, if he is not there now I am quite sure he will be tonight. He's the one I am going to knock over!"

At this moment we heard a noise in the room near us.

"It must be he," said Rouletabille.

"I forgot to ask you," I said, "if we are to make any allusion to tonight's business when we are with this policeman. I take it we are not. Is that so?"

"Evidently. We are going to operate alone, on our own personal account."

"So that all the glory will be ours?"

Rouletabille laughed.

We dined with Frederic Larsan in his room. He told us he had just come in and invited us to be seated at table. We ate our dinner in the best of humors, and I had no difficulty in appreciating the feelings of certainty which both Rouletabille and Larsan felt. Rouletabille told the great Fred that I had come on a chance visit and that he had asked me to stay and help him in the heavy batch of writing he had to get through for the Epoque. I was going back to Paris, he said, by the 11 o'clock train, taking his copy, which took a story form, recounting the principal episodes in the mysteries of the Glandier. Larsan smiled at the explanation like a man who was not fooled and politely refrained from making the slightest remark on matters which did not concern him.

With infinite precautions as to the words they used and even as to the tones of their voices, Larsan and Rouletabille discussed for a long time Mr. Arthur Rance's appearance at the chateau and his past in America, about which they expressed a desire to know more, at any rate so far as his relations with the Stangersons. At one time Larsan, who appeared to me to be unwell, said, with an effort:

"I think, M. Rouletabille, that we've not much more to do at the Glandier and that we shan't sleep here many more nights."

"I think so, too, M. Fred."

"Then you think the conclusion of the matter has been reached?"

"I think, indeed, that we have nothing more to find out," replied Rouletabille.

"Have you found your criminal?" asked Larsan.

"Have you?"

"Yes."

"So have I," said Rouletabille.

"Can it be the same man?"

"I don't know if you have swerved from your original idea," said the young reporter. Then he added with emphasis, "M. Darzac is an honest man!"

"Are you sure of that?" asked Larsan. "Well, I am sure he is not. So it's a fight, then?"

"Yes, it is a fight. But I shall beat you, M. Frederic Larsan."

"Youth never doubts anything," said the great Fred laughingly and held out his hand to me by way of conclusion.

Rouletabille's answer came like an echo:

"Not anything!"

Suddenly Larsan, who had risen to wish us good night, pressed both his hands to his chest and staggered. He was obliged to lean on Rouletabille for support and to save himself from falling.

"Oh, oh!" he cried. "What is the matter with me? Have I been poisoned?"

He looked at us with haggard eyes. We questioned him vainly. He did not answer us. He had sunk into an armchair, and we could not get a word from him. We were extremely distressed, both on his account and on our own, for we had partaken of all the dishes he had eaten. He seemed to be out of pain, but his heavy head had fallen on his shoulder and his eyelids were tightly closed. Rouletabille bent over him, listening for the beatings of the heart.

My friend's face, however, when he stood up, was as calm as it had been a moment before agitated.

"He is asleep," he said.

He led me to his chamber, after closing Larsan's room.

"The drug?" I asked. "Does Mlle. Stangerson wish to put everybody to sleep tonight?"

"Perhaps," replied Rouletabille. But I could see he was thinking of something else.

"But what about us?" I exclaimed. "How do we know that we have not been drugged?"

"Do you feel indisposed?" Rouletabille asked me coolly.

"Not in the least."

"Do you feel any inclination to go to sleep?"

"None whatever."

"Well, then, my friend, smoke this excellent cigar."

And he handed me a choice Havana, one M. Darzac had given him, while he lit his brierwood—his eternal brierwood.

We remained in his room until about 10 o'clock without a word passing between us. Buried in an armchair, Rouletabille sat and smoked steadily, his brow in thought and a faraway look in his eyes. On the stroke of 10 he took off his boots and signed me to do the same. Standing in our socks, he said in so low a tone that I guessed rather than heard the word:

"Revolver."

I drew my revolver from my jacket pocket.

"Cock it," he said.

I did as he directed.

Then, moving toward the door of his room, he opened it with infinite precaution; it made no sound. We were in the "off turning" gallery. Rouletabille made another sign to me which I understood to mean that I was to take up my post in the dark closet.

When I was some distance from him he rejoined me and embraced me, and then I saw him, with the same precaution, return to his room. Astonished by his embrace and somewhat disquieted by it, I arrived at the "right" gallery without difficulty, crossing the landing place and reaching the dark closet.

Before entering it I examined the curtain cord of the window and found that I had only to release it from its fastening with my fingers for the curtain to fall by its own weight and hide the square of light from Rouletabille, the signal agreed upon. The sound of a footstep made me halt before Arthur Rance's door. He was not yet in bed, then! How was it that, being in the chateau, he had not dined with M. Stangerson and his daughter? I had not seen him at table with them at the moment when we looked in.

I retired into the dark closet. I found myself perfectly situated. I could see along the whole length of the gallery. Nothing, absolutely nothing, could pass there without my seeing it.

I waited about an hour, and during all that time I saw nothing unusual. The rain, which had begun to come down strongly toward 9 o'clock, had now ceased.

My friend had told me that probably nothing would occur before midnight or 1 o'clock in the morning. It was not more than half past 11, however, when I heard the door of Arthur Rance's room open very slowly. The door remained open for a minute, which seemed to me a long time. As it opened into the gallery—that is to say, outward—I could not see what was passing in the room behind the door.

At that moment I noticed a strange sound, three times repeated, coming from the park. Ordinarily I should not have attached any more importance to it than I would to the noise of cats on the roof. But the third time the mew was so sharp and penetrating that I remembered what I had heard about the cry of the Bete du Bon Dieu. As the cry had accompanied all the events at the Glandier I could not refrain from shuddering at the thought.

Directly afterward I saw a man appear on the outside of the door and close it after him. At first I could not recognize him, for his back was toward me, and he was bending over a rather bulky package. When he had closed the door and picked up the package, he turned toward the dark closet, and then I saw who he was. He was the forest keeper, the Green Man. He was wearing the same costume that he had worn when I first saw him on the road in front of the Donjon inn. There was no doubt about his being the keeper. As the cry of the Bete du Bon Dieu came for the third time he put down the package and went to the second window, counting from the dark closet. I dared not risk making any movement, fearing I might betray my presence.

Arrived at the window, he peered out on to the park. The night was now light, the moon showing at intervals. The Green Man raised his arms twice; making signs which I did not understand; then, leaving the window, he again took up his package and moved along the gallery toward the landing place.

Rouletabille had instructed me to undo the curtain cord when I saw anything. Was Rouletabille expecting this? It was not my business to question. All I had to do was obey instructions. I unfastened the window cord, my heart beating the while as if it would burst. The man reached the landing place, but, to my utter surprise—I had expected to see him continue to pass along the gallery—I saw him descend the stairs leading to the vestibule.

What was I to do? I looked stupidly at the heavy curtain which had shut the light from the window. The signal had been given, and I did not see Rouletabille appear at the corner of the "off turning" gallery. Nobody appeared. I was exceedingly perplexed. Half an hour passed, an age to me. What was I to do now, even if I saw something? The signal once given, I could not give it a second time. To venture into the gallery might upset all Rouletabille's plans. After all, I had nothing to reproach myself with, and if something had happened that my friend had not expected he could only blame himself. Unable to be of any further assistance to him by means of a signal, I left the dark closet and, still in my socks, picked my steps and made my way to the "off turning" gallery.

There was no one there. I went to the door of Rouletabille's room and listened. I could hear nothing. I knocked gently. There was no answer. I turned the door handle and the door opened. I entered. Rouletabille lay extended at full length on the floor.

CHAPTER XXII.

The Incredible Body.

I BENT in great anxiety over the body of the reporter and had the joy to find that he was deeply sleeping, the same unhealthy sleep that I had seen fall upon Frederic Larsan. He had succumbed to the influence of the same drug that had been mixed with our food. How was it, then, that I also had not been overcome by it? I reflected that the drug must have been put into our wine, because that would explain my condition. I never drink when eating. Naturally inclined to obesity, I am restricted to a dry diet. I shook Rouletabille, but could not succeed in waking him. This, no doubt, was the work of Mlle. Stangerson.

She had certainly thought it necessary to guard herself against this young man as well as her father. I recalled that the steward in serving us had recommended an excellent Chablis which, no doubt, had come from the professor's table.

WON BY A WHISKER.

Great Gee-Gees' Game Fights For Glory.

The phrase "Won by a short head!" which you often see in the racing news, means that the horse that won pulled off the race by a foot, or perhaps a little less, a distance so small that the judge may, and sometimes does, have considerable difficulty in deciding which of the two leading horses was actually the winner.

Indeed, there have been cases in which the onlookers have quarrelled seriously with the judge's decision. For instance, in the English Derby of 1869, Pretender and Gomez came in so nearly abreast that most who saw the finish declared the result a dead-heat. But the judge gave the race to Pretender, and as he certainly had the best opportunity of seeing what really did happen, no doubt he was right.

The Blue Riband of the English turf has often been won by the shortest of short heads. In 1880 the race lay between Robert the Devil—ridden by Rossiter—and Bend d'Or, with Fred Archer in the saddle. Robert the Devil had the lead, and appeared to be winning, when Rossiter glanced round to see how close the next horse was. Archer came with a rush, and Bend d'Or won a terrific race by a margin of inches.

In 1881 Archer won on the famous American horse Iroquois, and two years later came one of the finest struggles ever seen, when three great horses—Highland Chief, Galliard, and St. Blaise—all galloped in together. Most people believed that Highland Chief had won, and so did Webb, his jockey, and bitter was the disappointment when the number of St. Blaise went up.

The following summer saw the only dead-heat on record in all the years since 1780, when the Derby first became a race. Harvester and St. Gatien came in absolutely level.

1885 was Melton's Derby, and it is certain that no race was ever fought out more fiercely than this one. Archer rode Melton, Webb was on Paradox, and not one of the spectators knew which horse had won until Melton's number went up.

Tom Cannon was once asked to ride a filly in a race at Windsor for which a colt of his own was favorite. He had backed the colt to win $2,500, and this he explained to the gentleman who had asked him to ride the filly, adding that he could not ride his own colt because of the weight.

"Oh, you needn't worry about that!" replied the other. "My filly hasn't got a ghost of a chance. I only want her to get a little confidence—just what your gentle handling will give her."

So Cannon agreed. But a hundred yards from the winning-post the filly drew level with Cannon's colt. To his everlasting credit, Tom sat down to ride in real earnest, and, by a short head, pulled off a race the winning of which cost him $2,500.—London Answers.

BABY'S OWN TABLETS CURE SUMMER COMPLAINTS

Baby's Own Tablets should be kept in every home where there are infants and young children, and at first sign of illness during the hot summer months they should be given to the little one. At no time of the year is baby in such danger as in summer. Summer complaints come on so quickly that unless prompt aid is at hand the little one may be beyond help in a few hours. The Tablets never fail to relieve the sick child, and if occasionally given to the well child they will keep him well. Mrs. P. Laroche, Les Fonds, Que., says:—"Last summer my baby suffered severely from stomach and bowel troubles but the prompt use of Baby's Own Tablets saved his life." The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

WHEN YOU ARE SICK

It doesn't take a good doctor to tell that — most any one could do that much, but to tell exactly the nature of the disease sometimes calls for the utmost skill of the Physician. Most anybody by a few simple tests could tell that your eyesight was defective and that you needed glasses of some kind, but to diagnose the exact trouble and fit the right glasses calls for more than ordinary skill.

We have made that one thing a study for years, and we are in business to bring wrong eyes and right glasses together. Satisfaction Guaranteed.

IF HE CAN'T CHOOSE FOREMAN WILL WITHDRAW TENDER

City Engineer Took Quick Action at Board of Works Meeting—Board Will Look Over Proposed Septic Tank Site—Who'll Lay the Dust on Sunday?

"That means that my tender is withdrawn."

This is the surprise that City Engineer Hay sprang on the Board of Works on Thursday night, when on motion of Ald. Graham and Duncan, a foreman not favorable to the engineer was named to act on the sewer construction in the city this year, for which Mr. Hay's tender is accepted.

The engineer wanted to appoint a man who would be thoroughly acceptable to himself and insisted on having full authority in making the appointment.

The motion to have the appointment made had been carried, and the question as to what course to follow naturally came in for consideration.

It was suggested to divide the work between the next two lowest tenderers, but the matter was finally left in abeyance till Monday night.

A WALK ACROSS AUBURN DAM.

No action was taken on the application of F. C. Dobbin requesting the board to open a road on his property on Rogers street south to the G.T.R. tracks. Mr. Dobbin may open the street as a lane if he wishes to, but it is not wide enough for a street.

The mayor, chairman and Ald. Phelan were appointed a committee to arrange with the syndicate in control for a foot and driving road across the Auburn dam.

SEPTIC TANK.

Ald. Hicks said that Mr. J. C. Shook would like the board to look over the property on which the proposed septic tank would be built. It was decided to meet at the site on Tuesday day evening at 7 o'clock.

Petitions for a granolithic walk on the south side of Dalhousie street from Aylmer street to Bethune, and one for a sewer on Westcott street were presented with a sufficient number of signatures, and action will be taken on both.

WON'T WORK ON SUNDAY.

Ald. Phelan stated that no Sunday street watering was being done in spite of the board's promise that it would be. The chairman explained that so far it had been impossible to get anybody to do the work on Sunday, but said that the Street Commissioner was endeavoring to get someone.

GEORGE STREET PICNIC WAS MOST SUCCESSFUL EVENT

Annual Excursion Took Place to Jubilee Point Yesterday—Two Baseball Games and Races--Ideal Weather

Sociability and splendid management were the noticeable features of the annual George St. Church Sunday school picnic, which was held yesterday to Jubilee Point.

The weather man seemed to be particularly kind to the excursionists.

At 8.40 the steamers 'Otonabee' and 'Lintonia' left the Wolfe street wharf with their full allowance of passengers, and after an enjoyable trip Jubilee Point was reached about 12 o'clock.

The refreshment booth on the steamer Otonabee was a regular mecca for dry people during the entire day, and toward the evening the demand exceeded the supply.

During the trip down and back splendid music was provided by the George St. Sunday school orchestra, and these musicians may rest assured that their efforts to enliven the trip were thoroughly appreciated by all present. They were out in full force also, and their musical renditions were both liberal and varied.

Special mention must also be made of the extreme kindness and courtesy of the crew of both steamers, who exerted every effort to make the trip pleasant for all concerned.

On arriving at Jubilee no delays were made by the hungry picnickers in satisfying the cravings of the inner man, and the clatter of dishes and peals of laughter resounded from all quarters of the grounds.

After dinner the usual programme of races and sports were commenced.

Two games of baseball provided a considerable amount of interest to every person, and the brand of ball indulged in was by no means anything to be ashamed of, some real good plays being pulled off quite frequently.

A game between the married and unmarried men resulted in a win for the benedicts by the score of 6—3. The line-up was as follows:—

Married Men — Turner, McKim, Thornton, Robertson, Soden, Skitch, Scarrow, Oke, Armstrong.

Unmarried Men — Laing, Halpany, Dixon, Pearson, Long, Walton, Miller, Lowes, Pearce.

Another fast little game between two teams of junior boys, captained by E. Stewart and Mulhern respectively, was won by Stewart's team by one run, the score being 3—2. The teams were as follows:—

E. Stewart, Drummond, Dixon, Armstrong, Srigley, Coon, Kelly, Elliott, Long.

Mulhern, Morrow, Soden, Helson, Lowes, R. Blanchette, B. Blanchette, Kingscote, Pearson.

Great excitement was caused by some of the following races, and the list is given below with the names of list is given below with the name of the winner of each.

Get The Best Piano

Various piano manufacturers claim their instruments are best because of some single feature. Some of these features are of genuine advantage; others are merely "talking points." We claim ours is the best Canadian piano because of its correct construction, the quality of the woods and other materials, and because of the success we have attained in the quality of tone. The

Nordheimer

has peculiar features in its construction which are practical and effective. This is proven by the fact that these same features have been adopted by the greatest piano builders of the world. The result of this construction and tone-perfection is that the Nordheimer Piano has been given the name of

WAS ONLY DEAD DRUNK

Robert Shouter had a big day yesterday and when he faced the Magistrate this morning on a drunk charge, he claimed it was his first offence. This let him out.

Shouter looked like a dead one when picked up by P. C. McGinty at noon, on the boundary road. A big crowd had gathered and it was feared that the man was dead. A delivery waggon brought him to the police station and Dr. McPherson was called in. The prisoner's condition was attended to but he was still rather shaky when he left the court.

HECLA FURNACE

The Perfect Type of Warm Air Furnace

Clean, Invigorating Heat

Warm air heating is the only system of heating that gives heat plus ventilation. Warm Air Furnace is the only means of ventilating the house every minute of the day and night, without opening windows.

No Water Pipes to Burst

"Hecla" Warm Air Furnace has no leaky valves to overflow and ruin carpets floors and ceilings. There are no water pipes to freeze and burst—no pipes to drain if you leave the house in winter for more than a day.

No Gas—No Dust

You've seen a blacksmith put a steel tip on an iron horseshoe. He welds iron and steel together and makes them practically one metal, without even a line to show where they join. THIS IS A FUSED JOINT. It is the same kind of a fused joint that connects the steel and iron used in the construction of "Hecla" Furnaces.

Fused Joints are permanent joints—absolutely preventing any gas, dust or smoke escaping into the house.

20 years use, in hundreds of homes, has proved the value of Fused Joints.

This Firepot Won't Burn Out

There are 97 steel ribs fused into "Hecla" Firepots, which increases the radiating surface 300%.

The fire may get red hot but the firepot won't. The steel ribs help the firepot to radiate the heat almost as fast as it is generated.

Save 1/7 of Your Coal Bill

The steel ribbed Fire Pot—a "Hecla" Patent—will save you one ton of coal in seven. We make this saving statement only after the most exacting tests, both in our foundry and in the homes of hundreds of owners of "Hecla" Furnaces.

Lasts A Lifetime

The "Hecla" Combustion Chamber is made of castiron. Practical experience proves that a cast-iron combustion chamber is better than steel. It is stronger and lasts longer—and with its corrugated surface has more heating power than any steel combustion chamber.

Easy Shaking Grate Bars

"Hecla" Grate Bars are not geared or fastened together. Each bar can be shaken separately, easily. Thus, each part of the fire can be shaken much or little as needed, cleaning the fire of all ashes, without turning good coal and live fire into the ash pan. The Dust Flue carries all dust up the chimney.

The Firm Behind The Furnace

It's a wise plan to know the people with whom you do business. We have been making Stoves since 1851—and Furnaces for more than 30 years—right here in Preston. We have made our name stand for satisfaction and reliability all over Canada.

Let Us Plan Your Heating

and give you the benefit of our experience. Send us a rough diagram of your house, showing size and location of rooms, and we will lay out and send you, free, a complete plan for a system of heating, showing the cost of putting in the right "Hecla" Furnace. 98

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

The Review does not hold itself responsible for opinions expressed by its correspondents

To the Editor of the Review.

Sir,—I notice in your issue of yesterday, a mild complaint as to the inadequate supply furnished the citizens by the local poobahs. I wonder if the complainant received from his butcher one ounce of beef for every pound he paid for would he "respectfully" ask for at least half a pound. After an unnecessary expenditure of $200,000 the people were justified in at least anticipating a supply in excess of former years, and one of a quality at least equal to that dumped into the system before the new work was completed. What is the result to date? The quality is undrinkable, in fact, nauseating, and the supply, at times actually non est. Last year it was August before the supply at certain elevations dropped completely out of sight. Whilst last night and the night before there was not enough water to wash one's hands, from about 5 p.m. until 8.30. Tea dishes remained in the sinks awaiting the cleansing fluid; lawns went thirsty and flowers withered. Nice state of affairs in case of fire! If the city grows in proportion to the amount expended on it in various ways, the supply now required at high pressure will be needed hourly. The C.G.E. wheels will need some power other than water to make them turn. And we pay through the nose for every gallon we contract for, and many a one we have not contracted for or get. And so we "respectfully" petition for a stiffer pressure. Do we—why—we demand it, and will have it.

Yours,
Incensed.

Don't Judge the Lager You Drink by the Price You Pay For It.

The price has nothing to do with the quality. Imported lagers cost more than O'Keefe's "Pilsener" because of the high duty—NOT because they are better, or even as good.

Jack London Describes Jeffries As Primitive, Ferocious, Terror Inspiring

Johnson, on the Contrary, He Regards as of a Happy Go Lucky Temperament, Easily Amused and as Light and Free of Care as a Child.

CONDITION OF FIGHTERS, BY JACK LONDON.

[Copyright, 1910, in the United States by the New York Herald Company. All Rights Reserved.]

RENO, Nev., June 25.—Bag and baggage, bull pups, bass viols and phonographs, "Jack" Johnson stepped off the train at Reno to-day, to be greeted by fully as large a crowd as met "Jeff" when he arrived. Whirled away in an automobile to Rick's Resort, he appeared unperturbed and happy, despite the fact that his train was three hours late and that it was a Friday.

His voice was just as jovial, his handshake as hearty, his smile as dazzling as when I last saw him in Australia. Commenting on the fact, he announced that he was feeling much better and stronger than a year and a half ago in the Antipodies. In short sleeves his shoulder muscles and biceps bulge knottily. Like Jeffries, he, too, is every inch a big man.

But they are vastly different types of men. Under all his large garniture of fighting strength, Johnson is happy go lucky in temperament, as light and care free as a child. He is easily amused. He lives more in the moment, and joy and sorrow are swift passing moods with him. He is not capable of seriously adjusting his actions to remote ends.

Shows No Worry.

Though fresh arrived from an irritating railroad journey fraught by vexatious delays, his face was placid and lineless. Nor was there the hint of a sign of care and worry such as would be expected from his disagreements with his manager, from the abrupt shift of training quarters at the eleventh hour and from joy rides interrupted by rude police.

This quality, differing so widely in the two men, cannot be over emphasized if one is to get an adequate comprehension of the fight when it takes place. They say that Johnson cannot hold a grudge. The man who does him a real or fancied injury to-day is received heartily by him a week hence, and this is so because a moment of life at a time is good enough for him. He cannot hold on to more than the moment, be it a moment of fierce hate or joyful friendship.

Possibly a good conception of this difference between the two men may be gained from my own feelings about them. If Johnson should rush upon me in anger and with fell intent to do me bodily injury I feel that all I would have to do would be to smile and hold out my hand, whereupon his hand would grip mine and he too would smile. On the contrary, I am certain if Jeff rushed at me in wrath that if I did not die of fright there and then I should bite my veins and howl in maniacal terror.

The illustration may seem farfetched, but it is just the way I feel, and it serves to show the essential difference in the characters of the men.

Jeff More Ferocious.

"Jeff" is a fighter, Johnson is a boxer. "Jeff" is more primitive, more ferocious, more terror inspiring. He has the temperament of the fighter. Old Mother Nature in him is still red of fang and claw. He is more a Germanic tribesman and warrior of two thousand years ago than a civilized man of the twentieth century, with the civilized trade of boiler-maker, and he has bridged the gap by turning pugilist and becoming the mightiest walloper of men in all the earth.

Another thing, despite Jeff's primitiveness he is more disciplined than the other man, vastly more disciplined, as instance the rigid adjustment of action to a remote end when he began, a year and a half ago, and faithfully carried through the heroic course of training that put him in the superb condition he is to-day. Johnson, mastered by the moment, could make no such an adjustment. He would forget all about that remote end a year and a half away. The passing moments would tantalize him in pursuit of immediate and momentary ends. It is safe to predict that if Johnson, at his present age, leaves the ring for two years he can never possibly come back again.

And by the same token, down in the heart of him, this fight does not mean to Johnson what it does to "Jeff." If Johnson loses the fight he won't be worried much. If "Jeff" loses it will almost break his heart. Under that dark and sombre seriousness that characterizes him there is a race pride of which he is intensely self-conscious.

Then, too, there is the pride in himself as a man and as a subduer of men. Leaving out the world, he has pledged himself to himself to win this fight, and that pledge he voiced to the world when, after stating that he was refraining from agreeing to fight Johnson until he could make certain that he was able to defeat him, he announced his certitude and signed the articles. Of one thing I am certain, the loss of any half dozen of his other fights would be less of a blow to "Jeff" than the loss of this coming fight with Johnson.

Erratic in Training.

Jeffries' erratic selection of times for training and sparring is the despair of the fight fans and newspaper scribes. The whisper passes around that he is going to do things about four in the afternoon. Long ere the time the electric cars running to his quarters are packed and jammed and nothing happens. The rumor spreads that "Jeff" will be out and hard at it at peep of day. The first cars out to Moana Springs are crowded, and even before the first car runs a string of automobiles has sneaked in the same direction. The hours pass. Nothing happens. Everybody waits, until at last, weary and hungry, the return is made to town for something to eat, and, lo! it turns out that that particular portion of the day was selected by "Jeff" for work.

But no one can blame him. It is his fight and his training, not theirs, and he knows what he wants and when he wants it a whole lot better than they do. And right here the difference between the white champion and the black is manifested again. Johnson is more willing to please the public. The fight is a week away, and Jeffries remembers that and that only. Johnson cannot remember it because the public is pressing at his doors for an exhibition there and then of his prowess and development. It is the moment, the everlasting, tantalizing, immediate moment, and Johnson succumbs.

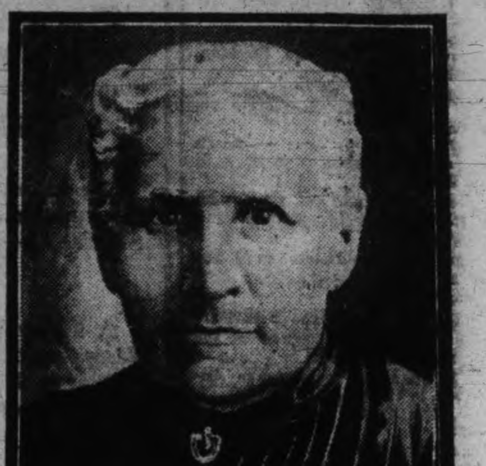
THESE STURDY LIFE—PARTNERS

ATTRIBUTE THEIR GOOD HEALTH TO "FRUIT-A-TIVES"

Everyone for miles around Grande Ligne, P.Q. knows Mr. N. Joubert. He was born and raised in St. Johns Co., went in business for himself, prospered, and then retired to enjoy the fruits of his industry. Mr. Joubert and his esteemed wife have the respect of a wide circle of friends and acquaintances. Although Mr. Joubert is now 80 years old and Mrs. Joubert is 75 years, they are enjoying the best of health. This is due to the marvellous powers of "Fruit-a-tives."



GRANDE LIGNE, QUE., JAN. 2nd, 1910.

"I heartily recommend 'Fruit-a-tives' to all who suffer from Constipation and the painful consequences—Piles. I am now over 80 years of age and suffered for over 20 years with Constipation and Piles. I tried all kinds of remedies, saw the doctors and took their medicines, but nothing cured me. About four years ago, I received a sample of 'Fruit-a-tives.' After taking a few doses, I really felt that 'Fruit-a-tives' were doing me good. As 'Fruit-a-tives' were not sold here I wrote to Ottawa for several boxes. My previous opinion of the value of 'Fruit-a-tives' was more than confirmed by the wonderful good they did me. After taking four boxes, I felt well—my bowels were regular—and the Piles had disappeared.

My wife was troubled for three years with Asthma and Eczema on the hands, which made her hands almost useless. The doctor gave her several ointments to use, none of which had any effect. He also advised her to use rubber gloves (she wore out three pairs). I persuaded her, as a last resort, to try 'Fruit-a-tives.' The effect was marvellous. Her hands are cured and the Asthma has also left her. We both attribute our present good health to 'Fruit-a-tives.'"

N. JOUBERT.

It does seem wonderful to think of one remedy curing four such diseases as Constipation, Piles, Eczema and Asthma. Yet when you think of it, all four troubles are caused by one thing—poisoned blood. Old age brings a certain weakness. The liver becomes clogged and does not give up enough bile to move the bowels regularly, causing Constipation and the Constipation in turn causes Piles. Waste matter in the system is carried to the skin and lungs, causing Eczema and Asthma. "Fruit-a-tives" cures all such diseases because it contains, in tablet form, the most wonderful blood purifying elements ever discovered. 'Fruit-a-tives" is not made by a drug trust—nor some chemist who knows nothing about disease. No! "Fruit-a-tives" is the discovery of one of Canada's most eminent physicians, who devoted many years to searching for the medicinal elements in fresh fruit. This physician found that by combining certain fruit juices in a certain way, he formed a new compound which was many times more valuable in curing disease than anything known to medical science.

This discovery is "Fruit-a-tives", now known and praised in every part of Canada. The case of Mr. and Mrs. Joubert shows the remarkable powers of "Fruit-a-tives" in curing disease when all else has failed. If you are a sufferer, try "Fruit-a-tives." 50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, or trial size, 25c. At all dealers or from Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

ST. PETER'S T.A.S. PICNIC ANOTHER BIG SUCCESS

St. Peter's Total Abstinence Society's picnic is over again for another year. The eleventh annual, held yesterday at the T.A.S. grove was as in previous years, a big success in every way and the committees in charge are to be congratulated on this. Each department was thoroughly looked after and everything worked smoothly. The number which visited the grounds during the day must have come up to the neighborhood of three thousand.

BUDGET OF INTERESTING NEWS FROM HAVELOCK

From Our Own Correspondent.

Havelock, July 1—Havelock's First from all parts of the compass, and an enjoyable day with excellent weather was spent by all present. The day started off with a trades procession at 10.30 a.m., which, although not very large, was interesting. Coon & Chiles were the winners, with Spencer Bros. taking second-class honors.

The baseball match between Havelock and Sulphide got started at two o'clock, and proved a very interesting feature, the locals winning by a 4—3 score. The Havelock team put up a good game, considering their lack of practice, while the visitors played good ball during the whole game. The Havelock lineup was:—D. Forde, p; Chas. Robson, c; Bleeker, 1b; Stuart, 2b; Paquet, 3b; Stuart, ss; Campney, cf; Armstrong, lf; Rose, rf. Mr. T. Kemp, of Norwood, made a satisfactory umpire.

In lacrosse the locals were not so fortunate, the Campbellford team winning by a 6—0 score. The one-sided score was due to the fact that the Havelock team have not played lacrosse for four years. Although the boys from Campbellford had the best of the play, the locals put up a good argument, and made it real interesting for them at times. Mr. A. Archer, of Norwood, refereed.

The baby show, for infants under fifteen months, brought many a fond mother to the grounds to enter her child. Master Charlie Rose was the winner of the kite flying contest, while Mr. Wm. Green, of town, won the one mile foot race, with Geo. Black second. Robt. Curry won the three-mile marathon race, with W. McBurney second. The one-mile bicycle race was won by C. Herrington, with S. Copp a close second. Julia Bennet was the winner of the race for girls under fifteen years.

The Kilties' Band, of Campbellford, and the Havelock Brass Band furnished music during the day.

The horse races proved a very interesting feature of the day. In the 2.30 class Fife's "Tom Tariff" took first place, with Simpson's "Ticket Boy," of Campbellford, second, and "Little Skitch," of Belleville, third honors. The time of the first heat was 2.01 3-4, and of the others 2.00.

The green horse race, with two local horses, proved interesting to the Havelock people. H. Andrew's "Harry J" took first place in 2.05, with C. Armstrong's "Harry R" second and "Black Hawk," owned by Mr. Scott, third place.

In the evening a concert was given in the opera house, when Mr. James Doughty and Miss Eva Cuthbert, of Toronto, assisted by local talent, provided the programme.

INDUCTION OF REV. MR. SKENE.

The induction of the Rev. James Skene, as pastor of the Havelock Presbyterian church, will take place on Tuesday afternoon of next week at 1.30 o'clock. The moderator of the Presbytery, Rev. D. A. McKenzie, of Centreville, will preside; Rev. D. A Thompson, of Hastings, will preach; Rev. J. G. Potter, of Peterborough, will address the minister, and Rev. G. A. Brown, of Campbellford, will address the congregation. In the evening a tea will be held in the church.

DANKERT—WALTON.

The marriage of Miss Lily Walton, daughter of Mrs. S. Walton, of town, to Mr. Chas. Dankert, of West Toronto, took place on Wednesday, June 22, at the residence of the bride's sister, Mrs. T. Murtell, 271 Yonge street, Toronto. The bride looked pretty in a gown of grey silk and a white hat, trimmed with white lilacs and mauve violet. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. B. H. Stauffer.

The young couple left on a wedding tour to Hanover, the home of the groom, and other western points.

The bride was the recipient of many beautiful wedding gifts, among others, a handsome china tea set from her friends in the W. A. Murray Co., where she was employed while the girls in the office gave her a linen shower and her friends in the Robt. Simpson Co. gave her a kitchen shower.

The marriage of Miss Ella Thompson to Mr. Widmer Bailey, both of Seymour township, took place at the Methodist parsonage here on June 28, the ceremony being performed by Rev. D. Balfour.

Counterfeits.

Read what one of the GREATEST NEWSPAPERS IN AMERICA has to say on this subject:

"The manufacturers of Castoria have been compelled to spend hundreds of thousands of dollars to familiarize the public with the signature of Chas. H. Fletcher. This has been necessitated by reason of pirates counterfeiting the Castoria trade-mark. This counterfeiting is a crime not only against the proprietors of Castoria, but against the growing generation. All persons should be careful to see that Castoria bears the signature of Chas. H. Fletcher, if they would guard the health of their children. Parents, and mothers in particular, ought to carefully examine the Castoria advertisements which have been appearing in this paper, and to remember that the wrapper of every bottle of genuine Castoria bears the fac-simile signature of Chas. H. Fletcher, under whose supervision it has been manufactured continuously for over thirty years.—Philadelphia Bulletin.

Letters from Prominent Druggists addressed to Chas. H. Fletcher.

Conger Bros. of St. Paul, Minn., say: "Fletcher's Castoria is certainly full of merit and worthy of recommendation."

C. G. A. Loder, of Philadelphia, Pa., says: "For 20 years we have sold Fletcher's Castoria and are pleased to state that it has given universal satisfaction."

The Scholtz Drug Co., of Denver, Colo., says: "Fletcher's Castoria has surely become a household word. Seemingly every family where there are children uses it."

Hoagland & Mansfield, of Boston, Mass., say: "We have nothing but good to say about your Castoria and we do not hesitate to give it our unqualified endorsement."

Riker's Drug Stores, of New York City, say: "Fletcher's Castoria is one of the oldest and most popular preparations in our stores. We have nothing but good to say about it."

Wolff-Wilson Drug Co., of St. Louis, Mo., says: "Of the thousands of patent medicines for which we have demand there are a very few of them that we can conscientiously recommend and your Castoria is included in this few."

D. R. Dyche & Co., of Chicago, Ills., say: "The increasing demand for your Castoria shows that a discriminating public is not slow to seek out a remedy of merit and once convinced that it does all and even more than claimed they do not hesitate to recommend it to their friends."

The Owl Drug Co., of San Francisco, Cal., says: "We have always been a believer in the 'original man protection' and have been particular never to sell anything but the genuine and original Castoria (Fletcher's). We have many calls every day for this article from people who say they would not be without it in their homes."

SUCCESSFUL CELEBRATION AT CHEMONG INDIAN VILLAGE

W. Willes a Local Runner Won the One Mile Race and Came in Second in the Five Mile Event—Chemong Won From Bridgenorth in Baseball Game

The picnic at Chemong village yesterday was a great success. The affair was held at the baseball grounds by the Chemong Athletic Club. An excursion left Bridgenorth in the afternoon, and the ball team from that place played the Chemong village nine, and were defeated by the score of 29—9. At the second innings the score stood 5—1 in favor of the visitors, but the home team got busy and won out easily. The prize was a bat and ball, and a return game will be played in the near future.

Mr. W. Willis, of Peterborough, took part in the sports, entering the five and one mile running events. He won the latter and came in second in the longer distance. He missed the boat at Bridgenorth and in wheeling to the village, fell off his bicycle and injured his shin. This proved to be a handicap to him.

The event sand winners were as follows:—

The Belmont club are to be congratulated on having such a splendid club house at their disposal for boating headquarters.

BOBCAYGEON CELEBRATED

There was nothing tame about the way in which Bobcaygeon celebrated yesterday, and the big crowd spending the holiday in the summer resort village saw evidences of the glad hand everywhere. The day was distinctly one of welcome, and those in charge more than made good.

In the morning, a programme of foot races and other sports was carried out, and shortly after noon, a big calithumpian procession took place. This was a real live one, and some of the floats were exceptionally good. At the conclusion of the procession a list of water sports, in which all the events were interesting, was pulled off, and in the evening a fireworks display and an illuminated parade were the attractions.

The Lindsay band furnished music during the day.

BODY OF GOULDTHRITE FOUND IN DETROIT RIVER

Passengers on the Steamer Columbia Sight His Corpse off Grosse Isle—Friends in Ottawa Who Believed Message a Ruse Are Surprised.

Detroit, July 4.—The body of Frank S. Gouldthrite, the former superintendent of the stationery department of the Ottawa Printing Bureau, who committed suicide last Tuesday morning by jumping off the steamer Eastern States, was found floating down the river off Grosse Isle yesterday afternoon, 20 miles south of here. The body was towed ashore and taken to Trenton, Mich.

The body was first seen by passengers on the steamer Columbia, on their way to Bois Blanc Island. The captain of the boat notified the lighthouse keeper on Grosse Isle, and he recovered the body. Marshall Winnie notified police headquarters last night that the body had been identified by letters found in the pocket. Lieut. of Detectives Tuttle immediately notified Col. Sherwood, commissioner of the Canadian police.

Gouldthrite left Buffalo last Monday afternoon on the steamer Eastern States, bound for Detroit, and was last seen alive sitting on the railing around the upper deck, and ordered by one of the boat attaches to get off. A few minutes later Gouldthrite's straw hat and the notes were found lying on the deck.

Surprise at Ottawa.

Ottawa, July 4.—When news reached Ottawa last night that the body of Frank Gouldthrite, the missing purchasing agent of the Printing Bureau, had been found in the Detroit River, it surprised everybody but the most intimate friends of the missing officials. While ninety people out of one hundred were convinced that Gouldthrite had not committed suicide, and that the message left on board the steamer at Detroit on Tuesday was a ruse to put the police off the track, those who knew Gouldthrite well were disposed to believe that he had done away with himself. It was asserted by one friend that Gouldthrite, before quitting Ottawa had gone to the Chaudiere Falls, with the determination of throwing himself in, but that his nerve had failed him. He was in a highly nervous state.

Mrs. Gouldthrite, who returned from Detroit on Saturday, has been convinced all along that her husband's body was in the Detroit River, but when information that it had been found was conveyed to her last night, she was much affected. Her belief was doubtless strengthened by the receipt of letters previously addressed to her by Gouldthrite.

Since the disappearance of Gouldthrite followed by the discovery of the frauds in the stationery department of the Government Printing Bureau, the authorities have been looking for Edwin S. Andrews of Toronto, upon a charge of complicity in the the[illegible]. Andrews was associated with Gouldthrite in "The Mervin Baby Food Warmer" Co., with offices in the Yonge street Arcade.

Gouldthrite began his career in the Dominion civil service as a messenger in the Printing Bureau twenty years ago. His promotion was steady. Fifteen years ago he married a woman from Minneapolis, by whom there is one child alive, a boy five years of age. It was his experience as a father that resulted in his inventing a device to keep warm at night the bottled milk, which he patented. It is charged that the company which he formed to manufacture the article became a means of coaxing money from those who sold supplies to the Government through him.

He was about 45 years of age, short and light by build. He was of a modest, retiring disposition, and had a large circle of friends, who believe he was led into the system of frauds by others, rather than that he originated it. Just what the amount of the embezzlements has reached, has not been discovered, but it is claimed that the percentage that went into his pockets, and those of certain suspected associates, from huge quantities of supplies purchased, mainly from United States firms, may have aggregated a quarter of a million. Five other employes of the department have been dismissed and one suspended. Gouldthrite got $2,100 a year salary. When he built an $1,800 fence in front of his house, people began to wonder. He said he had been fortunate in mining speculations. A week ago last Friday the truth came out, and he was a fugitive from justice.

In official circles there are no developments in connection with the Printing Bureau enquiry, but it is possible that Hon. Charles Murphy, Secretary of State, may be in a position to make a statement after the next meeting of the Cabinet Council, to be held on Tuesday next.

Ancient Colony Prosperous.

St. Johns, Nfld., July 4.—A surplus of nearly half a million dollars, more than double that of any previous year, is shown in the revenue returns for the colony of Newfoundland for the fiscal year ending June 30. The total revenue was three and one-half million dollars and the expenditures about three millions.

The Deadly Hatpin.

Boone, Iowa, July 4.—A large hatpin penetrated four inches into the brain of Mrs. Peter McDonald Friday, when she, with a companion, Mrs. Andrew Simpson, was thrown from a buggy in a runaway.

Executed General Who Betrayed.

New Orleans, July 4.—A private cablegram received here last night from Bluefields, Nicaragua, says Gen. Matuy has been executed, following a trial by court-martial. It was charged that he betrayed the Estrada cause.

BIG TOURING CAR UPSETS

Blyth, July 4.—About six o'clock Sunday morning a heavy 60 horsepower touring car was flying through Blyth on its way to Toronto, when it suddenly swerved to the side of the road, skidded on the wet grass at the edge, and without any warning, turned turtle in the ditch, imprisoning its eight passengers, with the exception of those on the front seats, who jumped. Only the height of the back of the car saved the lives of those in the tonneau. This kept its two tons of heavy machinery from crushing them to death. In about ten minutes all succeeded in crawling out of the debris, saturated with gasoline, which flowed down like a waterfall from the tank. The wife of the owner of the car had her shoulder dislocated and was badly bruised about the body, and one of the other passengers was unable to walk from injuries sustained to his back.

The cause given for the accident was the dangerous condition of the road, which had gravel piled in ridges off the centre, not giving sufficient clearance for the heavy car.

AN ACT OF CLEMENCY

Ottawa, July 4.—A militia order just issued announces that His Majesty the King has been pleased, as an act of clemency marking his accession to the throne, to approve of remission of sentences to soldiers undergoing detention in military prisons and detention barracks. Soldiers undergoing sentence of 56 days or less would be released, while those undergoing longer sentences will be entitled to a remission of one-half of the unexpired portion of their terms. Pardon will also be extended to deserters and absentees from the regular forces, who are required, however, to report themselves in writing. Men who have been in a state of desertion for over five years, or who are physically unfit for service, will not be called upon to rejoin for service, but will be given certificates freeing them from future service.

LATE TICKS FROM WIRES

Five inches of hail fell in Lewisville, Alberta, and much damage was done to the crops.

Sir Archibald Douglas has denied that he gave an interview attributed to him in Montreal.

A young aviator named Wachter was killed when his aeroplane fell from a height of 500 feet at Rheims, in France.

It is said that the Pope believes King Alfonso of Spain has abandoned him in his controversy with the Spanish Government.

The Grand Trunk freight sheds, weighhouse and a number of freight cars at Allandale were burned, with most of their contents.

While the conferences between the railways and the trainmen are still in progress at Montreal the men state their strong determination to accept nothing less than the standard rate of pay.

Frank Eldridge, aged 19, a tree expert from Akron, O., was killed in Toronto on Saturday by falling 40 feet from a tree in Justice Maclannan's grounds. A falling limb jarred him from his perch.

The head office of the C.N.R. express and telegraph systems will be moved to Winnipeg from Toronto. Scott Griffin, who goes to England as manager of the steamship lines, will be succeeded by Wm. Muir.

"I intend to sentence all vagrants to the Kansas wheat fields, while the harvest season is on," said Judge Burney in the Kansas City Municipal Court Saturday. "If they refuse to go and are caught loitering around town, I will send them to the workhouse for six months.

Railwaymen Strike at Brantford.

Brantford, July 4.—Employes at the Grand Trunk freight sheds went on strike here on Saturday, truckers demanding 16 1-2 cents per hour and checkers 18 cents. The company made a compromise offer of 15 cents per hour and $45 per month respectively, which was refused. Thirty are on strike.

UNION BANK ABSORBED

The Royal Purchases Halifax Institution's 45 Branches.

Montreal, July 4.—The important deal by which the Royal Bank of Canada purchases the assets, amounting to about $15,000,000 of the Union Bank of Halifax, has been consummated as far as the directors of both institutions are concerned. The closing of the transaction depends now upon the ratification of the shareholders of the Union Bank.

As the annual meeting of the Union does not take place till February, it is quite probable that a special meeting will be called, notice of four weekss being given to each shareholder.

The Union has 45 branches, but it is supposed that the branches in Amherst, Bridgewater, Lunenburg, Sydney, Truro, St. John, N.B., Charlottetown, and San Juan, Porto Rico, will be closed, as the Royal has also branches in those localities. As for Halifax, where both the Royal and Union Bank buildings are crowded, it is supposed that the Union office will be called the Hollis street branch of the Royal.

The banking fraternity view the purchase with favor. Mr. John Knight, secretary of the Canadian Bankers' Association, said that both would probably profit by the outcome.

MILLIONAIRE FIGHTS ARREST

Milwaukee, Wis., July 4.—John I. Beggs, president of the local electric railway and light companies, and director of the North American Co., which owns properties in other cities, has decided to make a vigorous fight against his arrest by the Socialist administration for failing to pay a city license of $15 a car for all street cars operated in the city. He was arrested recently to make a test case, and now has obtained an injunction from a higher court forbidding the lower court to take testimony in the case. This carries the suit at once to the higher state courts and will rush the termination of the city's suit.

Knox Church Notes

The mid-week service and Young People's Guild meeting of Knox church will be held on Wednesday at 7.30. Choir practice at 8 o'clock.

DR. SUTHERLAND LAID TO REST

Toronto, July 4.—Representative, impressive and reliant, with a tone of strength and power such as characterized the living presence of Alex. Sutherland was the funeral service in Sherbourne street Methodist Church on Saturday morning. Memory instantly recalled to the recollection of many present that dark and gloomy Saturday afternoon some months ago, when, in the Metropolitan Church, Dr. Sutherland paid tribute to his old colleague, Dr. Withrow. In that address Dr. Sutherland, with luminous imagery and a radiant magnificence of description, painted a word picture of a golden sunset on the Pacific as emblematic of the passing away of a Christian leader to glory. Saturday morning the obsequies were in the full blaze of a summer sunshine, with the meridian still unreached, a fitting hour and setting for the funeral of so militant a missionary leader.

The church was suitably draped with black, the only color visible being an outburst of gorgeous blossoms amid the profusion of floral tributes on the casket.

J. T. PRUDHOMME DIES SUDDENLY

Winnipeg, July 4—J. T. Prudhomme died suddenly of heart failure at his residence, 48 Notre Dame street, St. Boniface, at 10 o'clock Saturday morning. He was afflicted with a weak heart and had been ailing the last two days.

Undoubtedly the great strain, following the leading part he has taken for several days past in the provincial campaign, told on his strength. It was he who preferred the charges, denied by Sir Wilfrid Laurier, that Horace Chrerrier, the well-known Liberal Manitoba politician, had offered to promote his now deceased brother, County Court Judge Prudhomme, to the federal bench, on payment of $10,000, presumably for the Liberal party funds.

The deceased was born in the County of Beauharnois, Que., in 1866. He came to Winnipeg in 1886, and since then has occupied many offices in the public eye, notably as member of the present Dominion Government's half-breed scrip commission.

Want a Magistrate.

Walkerville, July 4.—Residents of Walkerville are discussing the advisability of having a police magistrate. Under existing circumstances, all cases which come under the city's by-laws are tried before Justice of the Peace Reid, but the other cases must be taken before the Windsor police magistrate.

This takes time, and the Walkerville police are anxious to have a magistrate of their own.

CLIFFORD B. HARMON AND WILLIAM K. VANDERBILT JR

Mr. William K. Vanderbilt, Jr., has entered the field of aviation, though not as yet as an owner of an aeroplane but with several associates he has offered to provide a suitable field for flying near the Long Island Motor Parkway.

Although the plans are as yet in a most unsettled state, he made his appearance at the present aviation course near Minicola and, after a consultation with Mr. Clifford Harmon and Capt. T. S. Baldwin, an informal statement was given out.

It is planned to fence in part of the land adjoining the grand stand of the Motor Parkway, so that that stand, or another will be available. Mr. Vanderbilt and his associates, whose identity was not disclosed, are willing to put $20,000 int othe plan. With the enclosure fenced in and proper arrangements made for the spectators an admission fee will be charged.

One-half of the gate receipts will go to the aviators who perform and the rest will be paid to the men who build the field until the $20,000 has been collected. All the proceeds then will go to the aviators, who at present are not receiving anything for their work and who are under an extremely heavy expense.

This proposal has been put up to the men at present engaged in flying near Minicola, and it remains with them whether it will be accepted. It is a matter of much debate among them just what arrangements they would have to make.

ADVERTISE IN THE REVIEW.

MANY PERSONS MEET DEATH BY DROWNING

Canoe of Victor Kirkpatrick, of Toronto, is Found on Beach—Toronto Boy Drowned at Ottawa—Three Drowned in Thames.

Toronto, July 4.—Letters and papers found in a coat lying in a canoe stranded on the beach at Mimico, afforded mute evidence of the drowning of Victor Kirkpatrick, manager of the Deer Park branch of the Dominion Bank.

It was learned that Mr. Kirkpatrick had rented a canoe at Sunnyside about 6.30 p.m. on Saturday with the intention of paddling up the Humber. The finding of the fragile craft by Fetherstonhaugh is the sole clue to the tragedy. Owing to the murkiness of the air, occupants of other boats which were out in great numbers between Sunnyside and the Humber Saturday night, were probably prevented from seeing Mr. Kirkpatrick's plight, and the siren whistles almost constantly blowing because of the fog may have drowned any cries of distress.

Mr. Kirkpatrick, who was about 28 years of age, was appointed manager of the Deer Park branch less than two years ago. He had been in the bank's service about 15 years, and had had experience in Orillia, Lindsay and Guelph before coming to Toronto. He was unmarried and lived with his sisters, the Misses Kirkpatrick, in the Spadina Gardens. His parents, who lived at Chippewa, Ont., died some years ago. One brother is at Prescott, Ont., and the other is manager of the Saskatoon branch of the Bank of Commerce.

Property Commissioner Harris is desirous of ascertaining if a drifting canoe was observed on Saturday night with the aim of fixing as well as possible the location of the accident. It is feared the body may not be recovered.

Sylvester Johnson, 18 years, of West Toronto, is the victim of the second drowning accident of the season. He lost his life in the bay at the foot of Bathurst street at 9.30 Saturday night, as the result of a curious mishap.

He with four other young men, D. S. Robertson, 195 Osler avenue; H. Milner, 353 Howland avenue; C. W. Wardell, 1,478 Dundas street, West Toronto, and L. Armitage, 58 Annette street, West Toronto, was cruising in the bay in a gasoline launch, which had just been launched that day. Robertson dropped something on the floor of the launch and lit a match to look for it. This exploded a quantity of gasoline floating on the bilge water and, with the flash, all the young men jumped into the water.

All the others could swim, and made their way to a scow, which was anchored nearby. Johnston sank. He was missed by his friends and the body was soon recovered. It was removed to Speers' undertaking rooms at West Toronto, where Coroner Hopkins will open an inquest to-day. The launch was only slightly damaged.

Toronto Boy Drowned at Ottawa.

Ottawa, July 4.—Vernor Deer, a 13-year-old Toronto boy was drowned while bathing at Britannia Bay on Sunday. His parents only arrived at noon that day, and while they were in Ottawa he went in swimming with other boys. His disappearance was not noticed, but his body was held up at 7.30 last evening near the pier. An inquest may be held.

Bank Teller Drowned.

Alix, Alta., July 4.—Howard Frederick, son of T. Frederick of this place, paying teller in the Union Bank, was drowned while bathing in the lake on the outskirts of the town on Friday afternoon.

Three Drowned In Thames.

London, Ont., July 4.—Three young men were drowned in the Thames River yesterday while bathing, two of them in the north branch and one near the pumphouse at Springbank Park, In all three cases the men were in swimming and all apparently were taken with cramps. The dead are: Alfred Clark, aged 22, a young Englishman, who was employed at the McCormick Biscuit Works, drowned at the Adelaide street bridge; Ernest Neil, aged 22, barber at Tecumseh House, drowned at Springbank; Wm. Baker, aged 24, employed at the Gorman Eckert Spice Mills. The bodies of Clark and Baker were soon recovered.

Drowned In Bathing.

Stratford, July 4.—John Wood, son of John Wood of this city, lost his life on Saturday night by drowning. With a number of other boys he went in bathing in Victoria Lake. It is supposed he got beyond his depth. He made no outcry, and the tragedy was only revealed when his clothes were found on the shore after his companions had dressed.

McGroder thinks there was between $300,000 and $400,000 aboard the ship.

BIGGEST MEET EVER BEGINS AT RHEIMS

Paris, July 3.—The— Rheims aviation meeting probably the biggest scheduled for Europe this year, will begin to-day, with every indication that last year's remarkable success will be repeated. In the nine days of flying, prizes totaling $65,000 will be awarded, the largest list ever offered.

Nearly all the well-known men-birds of Europe have entered in one or more of the events. Among these are Rolls and Bleriot, the channel crossers; Paulhan, Farman, De Bonnet, Lambert and many others of the French flyers.

Sixty-three machines have been entered, including 40 biplanes and 23 monoplanes. The Farman biplane and the Bleriot monoplane are the favorite types. There will be 13 Farman biplanes to four of the Wright type.

For the first time the French Minister of War has delegated three army officers to take part in the meeting. These will be Capt. Eteve, in a Wright machine; Lieut. Comerman, in a Farman, and Lieut. Anquavin, in a Bleriot monoplane.

THE COUNT MAY FLY TO TORONTO

Montreal, July 4.—Count de Lesseps, the famous French aviator, has he crossed the English Channel, arrives in good shape, he will consider undertaking a flight from here to Toronto.

Though the count has done some wonderful flying durng the present meet, he has been handicapped by his machine. He has only his small one here, which he says is but a toy.

The distance from Montreal to Toronto is about 333 miles.

The aviator's route will be through the St. Lawrence Valley and along the north shore of Lake Ontario. If he covers the distance without alighting he will break all non-stop records.

Strike Averted.

Washington, July 4.—Official announcement was made Saturday night that an amicable adjustment of the controversy between the railroads in the southeastern territory and their conductors and trainmen had been reached.

The agreement signed provides for a substantial increase in wages and improved conditions and hours of labor. The adjustment also will avert a threatened strike of 10,000 men, which would have involved approximately 40,000 others.

JACK CANUCK vs UNCLE SAM

July the First is over, and July the Fourth is fast passing. With us it is the anniversary of federation of the provinces, with them it is the echo of the shout of Independence. We are hardly enthusiastic enough. They throw out flags everywhere. We do not compare well in the matter of patriotic decorations. Neither are we kind to the manufacturers of legs, arms and glass eyes, or the doctors or undertakers. They are. Toronto with its 400,000 souls had no one catastrophe. There are enough maimed, disfigured, blinded and killed each fourth of July by them to make the record of a respectable battle.

GREAT MEN

The Toronto Star well says that the contention over the naming of a successor to Goldwin Smith is foolish and that an argument might as well arise should an oak fall in the Grange, as to what oak would take its place." Whenever the man is needed he arrives. The children of Israel stood terror stricken and listened to Goliath. Then David, his five smooth stones and his sling came. Goldwin Smith was great in his line, but Goldwin Smith has not been half the benefactor to the race that Bell and his 'phone have been, or Edison and his wonderful inventions. When the hour for the discovery is ripe, there stands the discoverer. When the overthrow of some social wrong is needed, behold again the man. Is it a book to be written,—then the book is being prepared—Goldwin Smith has fulfilled his destiny and there are other great men on earth this moment who some day will be announced when the time comes.

THE UNFORTUNATE

What of the shut ins this holiday time? We go and come at will. They toss in bed. We anticipate the pleasure of the evening, set by the hour. The arrival of the set hour in their home brings the doctor, the medicine or the return of the pain, or the fever. What of those left behind? How about the one who is ever cooking, washing scrubbing, mending? We go, they remain at home. We go on the excursion or the picnic. They stay at the house. They haven t got the money, their clothes also are shabby. We are well and can walk away with the swing of a soldier. There are those whose limbs are paralyzed. It is not because of our goodness that we have escaped these things.

A REMARKABLE MAN

To-morrow just one hundred years ago one of the most remarkable men of America's history was born. On July 5th, 1810, Phineas T. Barnum saw the light of day first in a Connecticut town. Barnum was in a dozen kinds of business and was about 25 years old before he found his life work. He secured a negress and advertised her as 161 years old, and formerly the property of George Washington's father. Then he advertized. He travelled the country picking oddities here and there. His show at first was poor, but he was always a splendid advertizer. P. T. Barnum didn't care a rap whether people were pleased or vexed, so long as he had them talking about him. Charlie Stratton was engaged first for four weeks by Barnum, at $3 a week and Barnum's fortune was made. He christened the little man, General Tom Thumb, and went to Europe, where the little midget hob-nobbed at all the courts. This was the foundation of Barnum's fortune. He brought Jenny Lind to America at $1,000 a concert and cleaned up $500,000. He spent thousands of dollars in publicity before her arrival and so keen was the feeling that one man in Philadelphia paid $650 for a seat, and many others paid hundreds. Barnum knew the magic of printers ink and died wealthy. Merchants who grumble, towns that complain, should take a lesson from this old warrior. Is business dull, use printers ink. Is it good, use printer's ink. It is printer's ink that announces to the world our marriage, it's printer's ink that will tell the story of our death and funeral. There is magic in printer's ink. Do these large stores succeed. They use it and use it lavishly. Without printer's ink there can never be great success in any line of business, no matter whether it is announcing a strawberry festival on some lawn or the advantages of a city in the heart of a desirable country.

TO-DAY'S THE DAY

It isn't the prize fight that many eminently respectable people are objecting to, it's the company it keeps. It isn't the horse racing that the authorities in different parts of this hemisphere are after, it is the aggregation that follows the races, the silk hatted bettor and the loud dressed tout.

The men who promote fistic encounters are hardly the class who will live long in the mind of the race. They are furnishing much newspaper copy, and bringing in a fortune to the telegraph companies, the special writers and the two men who, at this hour, are likely punching each other for the big end of $101,000. They cannot be exactly representatives of the spirit of the day, in spite of the fact that people are eagerly reading of the preparations and will read every line about the fight.

Boxing itself is an excellent pastime, and develops a keen eye and the ability to hold one's temper. The moment a boxer loses his head he is licked. Drop the profit end out of the Reno battle, allow no betting on it and there would be no fight. Stop betting and horse races would quickly die. And by the way while horse races are fascinating, and prize fighting arouses the morbid feeling latent in us all, one would not like to marry his daughter to, or make a fine friend of a fellow who always follows this line of sport.

THE REFORMATORY AT GUELPH

Hon. W. J. Hanna is on the right track. He believes that there is good in every man and is going to give that good a chance to develop. JUSTICE—that's a very funny word. A man steals in Bingtown and is let off on suspended sentence. Another steals in Bungtown, ten miles away, under the very same circumstances, and goes to prison for a year. The digestion of the judge in Bingtown was good on the day when the offender was before him, but the Bungtown magistrate was troubled with dyspepsia.

JUSTICE IS LARGELY A MATTER OF OPINION AND OFTEN A QUESTION OF DIGESTION.

Hon. W. J. Hanna realizes this. He is also sure that the old system of high walls, and men with rifles on the four corners of them to prevent prisoners from escaping, is a relic of the past. He will take away the gun, high walls, the distinctive prison garb and hand out the golden rule. He will not put the men in cells and have them peer out as a lion or tiger. They will sleep in dormitories. They will go out to work in the fields well fed, and free to see the blue sky, sniff the fresh air and view the north, south, east and west unobstructed by bars, gates or walls. Hanna can't lose. There was once a Judas and his seed still lives, but in the most of us there is that which gives genuine response to the kindly word or action. Ninety per cent of the men and women in prison in Ontario are there through drink. They stole when drunk, they fought and were disorderly when drunk, they were sons of drunkards or are drunkards, and so for this they have been sent to prison. It wasn't them that stole, it wasn't them that fought. IT WAS ALCOHOL. The Central Prison will be no more. In its place on the banks of the River Speed, on the outskirts of the city of Guelph there will be a reformatory where men who have erred may take heart once more and go out cheered instead of sodden.

Why should a person be dressed in prison garb and placed in a cage because he has fallen by reason of alcohol which by the will of the people a man may sell and a man may drink with as much legal right as one would go in and take an ice cream soda.

THE POINT OF VIEW

A CIRCUS.

Orillia Packet.

First Methodist church, London, Ontario, had canaries on "flower Sunday" to add beauty to the choral features of the service. The whole menagerie will gradually be added, probably, and after that other features of a circus. We're getting on in Canada.

MR. WARE'S JEST.

Welland Telegraph.

C. T. Ware is credited with the statement that the universities create a class for fleecing the farmer and the Agricultural College a class for helping the farmer.

Mr. Ware, of course, made this statement in jest for it has the topsy turvy elements of humor. The real work of the O.A.C. is to teach a man to grow two stalks where one grew before. That is certainly helping the farmer.

But the farmer is not fleeced by the graduates of the universities. After a long experience with lightning rod agents we can truthfully say we never knew one who was a university graduate.

The preacher is a college man. He preaches to the farmer for six hundred per year and a horse and oats. Mr. Ware is certainly humorous when he says that is fleecing. The doctor and lawyer and the high school teacher—more college graduates, usually honest men. They give as much butter to the pound as does the average farmer and quite as few small potatoes to the bushel.

UNCLE SAM'S LAND.

Toronto World.

Will they do it?

Is that what is impending?

Or will a short sharp panic force it?

Our own belief, after watching things in the States for years, is that revaluation must and will take place, honester methods must and will take the place of high finance; and that when these two things are done the United States will get a new lease of credit, millions and millions will flow into the country, and the greatest era of industrial development known to the United States will set in. But the other thing must be done first. The question is who is to do it, how is it to be done, who is to sustain the terrible shock involved?

But this whole situation in the States is of comparatively small moment to ourselves. It means cheap American goods in Canada if we care to buy them. But if the shock were over it would mean great business all round. The energy of the United States cannot be held back for long.

Balm of Gilead.

The real balm of Gilead is the dried juice of a low scrub which grows in Syria. It is very valuable and scarce, for the amount of balm yielded by one shrub never exceeded sixty drops a day. According to Josephus, the balm or balsam of Gilead was one of the presents given by the Queen of Sheba to King Solomon. The ancient Jewish physicians prescribed it evidently for dyspepsia and melancholia.

How They Did It.

A man who had traveled much in Africa told his friends on his return that he and his servant had on an occasion made fifty Arabs run. All who heard the story were amazed.

"How did you manage it?" asked one.

"Oh, it was nothing very wonderful," replied the traveler. "We ran, and they ran after us."

Spinach derives its name from the Spanish monks, who first used it during fast days.

The Mystery of The Yellow Room

By GASTON LEROUX

COPYRIGHT, 1908, By BRENTANO'S

More than a quarter of an hour passed. I resolved under the pressing circumstances to resort to extreme measures. I threw a pitcher of cold water over Rouletabille's head. He opened his eyes. I beat his face and raised him up. I felt him stiffen in my arms and heard him murmur, "Go on, go on, but don't make any noise." I pinched him and shook him until he was able to stand up. We were saved!

"They sent me to sleep," he said. "Ah, I passed an awful quarter of an hour before giving way. But it is over now. Don't leave me."

He had no sooner uttered those words than we were thrilled by a frightful cry that rang through the chateau, a veritable death cry.

"Malheur!" roared Rouletabille. "We shall be too late!"

He tried to rush to the door, but he was too dazed and fell against the wall. I was already in the gallery, revolver in hand, rushing like a madman toward Mlle. Stangerson's room. The moment I arrived at the intersection of the "off turning" gallery and the "right" gallery I saw a figure leaving her apartment, which in a few strides had reached the landing place.

I was not master of myself. I fired. The report from the revolver made a deafening noise, but the man continued his flight down the stairs. I ran behind him, shouting: "Stop! Stop, or I will kill you!" As I rushed after him down the stairs I came face to face with Arthur Rance coming from the left wing of the chateau, yelling: "What is it? What is it?" We arrived almost at the same time at the foot of the staircase. The window of the vestibule was open. We distinctly saw the form of a man running away. Instinctively we fired our revolvers in his direction. He was not more than ten paces in front of us. He staggered, and we thought he was going to fall. We had sprung out of the window, but the man dashed off with renewed vigor. I was in my socks, and the American was barefooted. There being no hope of overtaking him, we fired our last cartridges at him. But he still kept on running, going along the right side of the court toward the end of the right wing of the chateau, which had no other outlet than the door of the little chamber occupied by the forest keeper.

The man, though he was evidently wounded by our bullets, was now twenty yards ahead of us. Suddenly, behind us, and above our heads, a window in the gallery opened and we heard the voice of Rouletabille crying out desperately:

"Fire, Bernier! Fire!"

At that moment the clear moonlight night was further lit by a broad flash. By its light we saw Daddy Bernier with his gun on the threshold of the donjon door.

He had taken good aim. The shadow fell. But as it had reached the end of the right wing of the chateau, it fell on the other side of the angle of the building—that is to say, we saw it about to fall, but not the actual sinking to the ground. Bernier, Arthur Rance and myself reached the other side twenty seconds later. The shadow was lying dead at our feet.

Aroused from his lethargy by the cries and reports, Larsan opened the window of his chamber and called out to us. Rouletabille, quite awake now, joined us at the same moment, and I cried out to him:

"He is dead—is dead!"

"So much the better," he said. "Take him into the vestibule of the chateau." Then as if on second thought, he said: "No—no! Let us put him in his own room."

Rouletabille knocked at the door. Nobody answered. Naturally, this did not surprise me.

"He is evidently not there, otherwise he would have come out," said the reporter. "Let us carry him to the vestibule then."

Since reaching the dead shadow, a thick cloud had covered the moon and darkened the night, so that we were unable to make out the features. Daddy Jacques, who had now joined us, helped us to carry the body into the vestibule, where we laid it down on the lower step of the stairs. On the way, I had felt my hands wet from the warm blood flowing from the wounds.

Daddy Jacques flew to the kitchen and returned with a lantern. He held it close to the face of the dead shadow, and we recognized the keeper, the man called by the landlord of the Donjon inn the Green Man, whom an hour earlier I had seen come out of Arthur Rance's chamber carrying a parcel. But what I had seen I could only tell Rouletabille later when we were alone.

* * * * * * *

Rouletabille and Frederic Larsan experienced a cruel disappointment at the result of the night's adventure. They could only look in consternation and stupefaction at the body of the Green Man.

Daddy Jacques showed a stupidly sorrowful face and with silly lamentations kept repeating that we were mistaken—the keeper could not be the assailant. We were obliged to compel him to be quiet. He could not have shown greater grief had the body been that of his own son. I noticed, while all the rest of us were more or less undressed and barefooted, that he was fully clothed.

Rouletabille had not left the body. Kneeling on the flagstones by the light of Daddy Jacques' lantern, he removed the clothes from the body and laid bare its breast. Then, snatching the lantern from Daddy Jacques, he held it over the corpse and saw a gaping wound. Rising suddenly, he exclaimed in a voice filled with savage irony:

"The man you believe to have been shot was killed by the stab of a knife in his heart!"

I thought Rouletabille had gone mad, but, bending over the body, I quickly satisfied myself that Rouletabille was right. Not a sign of a bullet anywhere. The wound, evidently made by a sharp blade, had penetrated the heart.

CHAPTER XXII.

I SHOOK ROULETABILLE, BUT COULD NOT SUCCEED IN WAKING HIM.

CHAPTER XXIII.

The Double Scent.

I HAD hardly recovered from the surprise into which this new discovery had plunged me when Rouletabille touched me on the shoulder and asked me to follow him into his room to think it over.

I confess I was in no condition for doing much thinking. His self control was more than I could explain. Closing the door of his room, he motioned me to a chair and, seating himself before me, took out his pipe. We sat there for some time in silence, and then I fell asleep.

When I awoke it was daylight. It was 8 o'clock by my watch. Rouletabille was no longer in the room. I rose to go out, when the door opened and my friend re-entered. He had evidently lost no time.

"How about Mlle. Stangerson?" I asked him.

"Her condition, though very alarming, is not desperate."

"When did you leave this room?"

"Toward dawn."

"Have you found out anything?"

"Two sets of footprints."

"Have they anything to do with the mystery of the keeper's body?"

"Yes; the mystery is no longer a mystery. This morning, walking round the chateau, I found two distinct sets of footprints made at the same time last night. They were made by two persons walking side by side. I followed them from the court toward the oak grove. Larsan joined me. They were the same kind of footprints as were made at the time of the assault in the yellow room. One set was from clumsy boots and the other was made by neat ones, except that the big toe of one of the sets was of a different size from the one measured in the yellow room incident.

"Still following the tracks of the prints, Larsan and I passed out of the oak grove and reached the border of the lake. There they turned off to a little path leading to the highroad to Epinay, where we lost the traces in the newly macadamized highway.

"We went back to the chateau and parted at the courtyard. We met again, however, in Daddy Jacques' room, to which our separate trains of thinking had led us both. We found the old servant in bed. His clothes on the chair were wet through and his boots very muddy. He certainly did not get into that state in helping us to carry the body of the keeper. It was not raining then. Then his face showed extreme fatigue, and he looked at us out of terror stricken eyes.

"On pressing him he confessed that he had been away from the chateau. He explained his absence by saying that he had a headache and went out into the fresh air, but had gone no farther than the oak grove. When we then described to him the whole route he had followed he sat up in bed trembling.

"'And you were not alone!' cried Larsan.

"'Did you see it, then?' gasped Daddy Jacques.

"'What?' I asked.

"'The phantom—the black phantom!'

"Then he told us that for several nights he had seen what he called the black phantom. It came into the park at the stroke of midnight and glided stealthily through the trees. It appeared to him to pass through the trunks of the trees. Twice he had seen it from his window by the light of the moon and had risen and followed the strange apparition. The night before last he had almost overtaken it, but it had vanished at the corner of the donjon. Last night, however, he had not left the chateau, his mind being disturbed by a presentiment that some new crime would be attempted. Suddenly he saw the black phantom rush out from somewhere in the middle of the court. He followed it to the lake and to the highroad to Epinay, where the phantom suddenly disappeared.

"'Did you see his face?' demanded Larsan.

"'No. I saw nothing but black veils.'

"'Did you go out after what passed on the gallery?'

"'I could not. I was terrified.'

"'Daddy Jacques,' I said in a threatening voice, 'you did not follow it. You and the phantom walked to Epinay together, arm in arm.'

"'No,' he cried, turning his eyes away; 'I did not. It came on to pour, and I turned back. I don't know what became of the black phantom.'

"We left him, and when we were outside I turned to Larsan, looking him full in the face, and put my question suddenly to take him off his guard:

"'An accomplice?'

"'How can I tell?' he replied and left me, saying he was off to Epinay."

"Well, what do you make of it?" I asked Rouletabille after he had ended his recital. "Personally I am utterly in the dark. I can't make anything out of it. What do you gather?"

"Everything, everything," he exclaimed. "But," he said abruptly, "let's find out further about Mlle. Stangerson."

CHAPTER XXIV.

Rouletabille Knows the Two Halves of the Murderer.

MLLE. STANGERSON had been for the second time almost murdered. Unfortunately she was in too weak a state to bear the severer injuries of this second attack as well as she had those of the first. She had received three wounds in the breast from the murderer's knife, and she lay long between life and death. Her strong physique, however, saved her; but, though she recovered physically, it was found that her mind had been affected. The slightest allusion to the terrible incident sent her into delirium, and the arrest of Robert Darzac, which followed on the day following the tragic death of the keeper, seemed to sink her fine intelligence into complete melancholia.

Robert Darzac arrived at the chateau toward half past 9. I saw him hurrying through the park, his hair and clothes in disorder and his face a deadly white. Rouletabille and I were looking out of a window in the gallery. He saw us and gave a despairing cry. "I'm too late!"

Rouletabille answered, "She lives!"

A minute later Darzac had gone into Mlle. Stangerson's room, and through the door we could hear his heartrending sobs.

* * * * * * *

"There's a fate about this place!" groaned Rouletabille. "Some infernal gods must be watching over the misfortunes of this family! If I had not been drugged I would have saved Mlle. Stangerson. I should have silenced him forever. And the keeper would not have been killed!"

* * * * * * *

M. Darzac came in to speak with us. His distress was terrible. Rouletabille told him everything—his preparations for Mlle. Stangerson's safety, his plans for either capturing or for disposing of the assailant forever and how he would have succeeded had it not been for the drugging.

"If only you had trusted me!" said the young man in a low tone. "If you had but begged Mlle. Stangerson to confide in me! But, then, everybody here distrusts everybody else. The daughter distrusts her father and even her lover. While you ask me to protect her, she is doing all she can to frustrate me. That was why I came on the scene too late!"

At M. Robert Darzac's request Rouletabille described the whole scene. Leaning on the wall to prevent himself from falling, he had made his way to Mlle. Stangerson's room, while we were running after the supposed murderer. The anteroom door was open, and when he entered he found Mlle. Stangerson lying partly thrown over the desk. Her dressing gown was dyed with the blood flowing from her bosom. Still under the influence of the drug, he felt he was walking in a horrible nightmare.

He went back to the gallery automatically, opened a window, shouted his order to fire and then returned to the room. He crossed the deserted boudoir, entered the drawing room and tried to rouse M. Stangerson, who was lying on a sofa. M. Stangerson rose stupidly and let himself be drawn by Rouletabille into the room, where, on seeing his daughter's body, he uttered a heartrending cry. Both united their feeble strength and carried her to her bed.

On his way to rejoin us Rouletabille passed by the desk. On the floor, near it, he saw a large packet. He knelt down, and, finding the wrapper loose, he examined it and made out an enormous quantity of papers and photographs. On one of the papers he read: "New differential electroscopic condenser. Fundamental properties of substance intermediary between ponderable matter and imponderable ether." Strange irony of fate that the professor's precious papers should be restored to him at the very time when an attempt was being made to deprive him of his daughter's life! What are papers worth to him now?

* * * * * * *

The morning following that awful night saw M. de Marquet once more at the chateau with his registrar and gendarmes. Of course we were all questioned. Rouletabille and I had already agreed on what to say. I kept back any information as to my being in the dark closet and said nothing about the drugging. We did not wish to suggest in any way that Mlle. Stangerson had been expecting her nocturnal visitor.

Arthur Rance told everybody in a manner so natural that it astonished me that he had last seen the keeper toward 11 o'clock of that fatal night. He had come for his valise, he said, which he was to take for him early next morning to the St. Michel station, and had been kept out late running after poachers. Arthur Rance had, indeed, intended to leave the chateau and, according to his habit, to walk to the station.

M. Stangerson confirmed what Rance had said, adding that he had not asked Rance to dine with him because his friend had taken his final leave of them both earlier in the evening. M. Rance had had tea served him in his room because he had complained of a slight indisposition.

Bernier testified, instructed by Rouletabille, that the keeper had ordered him to meet him at a spot near the oak grove for the purpose of looking out for poachers. Finding that the keeper did not keep his appointment, he, Bernier, had gone in search of him. He had almost arrived at the donjon when he saw a figure running swiftly in a direction opposite to him, toward the right wing of the chateau. He heard revolver shots from behind the figure and saw Rouletabille at one of the gallery windows. He heard Rouletabille call out to him to fire, and he had fired. He believed he had killed the man until he learned, after Rouletabille had uncovered the body, that the man had died from a knife thrust. Who had given it he could not imagine. "Nobody could have been near the spot without my seeing him." When the examining magistrate reminded him that the spot where the body was found was very dark and that he himself had not been able to recognize the keeper before firing, Daddy Bernier replied that neither had they seen the other body, nor had they found it. In the narrow court, where five people were standing, it would have been strange if the other body, had it been there, could have escaped. The only door that opened into the court was that of the keeper's room, and that door was closed, and the key of it was found in the keeper's pocket.

However that might be, the examining magistrate did not pursue his inquiry further in this direction. He was evidently convinced that we had missed the man we were chasing and we had come upon the keeper's body in our chase. This matter of the keeper was another matter entirely. He wanted to satisfy himself about that without any further delay. Probably it chimed in with the conclusions he had already arrived at as to the keeper and his intrigues with the wife of Mathieu, the landlord of the Donjon inn. This Mathieu later in the afternoon was arrested and taken to Corbeil in spite of his rheumatism. He had been heard to threaten the keeper, and, though no evidence against him had been found at his inn, the evidence of carters, who had heard the threats, was enough to justify his retention.

WHEN YOU ARE SICK

It doesn't take a good doctor to tell that — most any one could do tha' much, but to tell exactly the nature of the disease sometimes calls for the utmost skill of the Physician. Most anybody by a few simple tests could tell that your eyesight was defective and that you needed glasses of some kind, but to diagnose the exact trouble and fit the right glasses calls for more than ordinary skill.

We have made that one thing a study for years, and we are in business to bring wrong eyes and right glasses together. Satisfaction Guaranteed.

TWO FIRES ON HUNTER STREET

Small Blaze Last Night and Another One This Morning

Two Hunter street fires in close proximity occupied the attention of the brigade last night and this morning. The one last evening was a smouldering blaze in the premises of the empty store in which the Model laundry was formerly conducted. A lighted cigar stub thrown through the window grating was the cause.

An alarm was rung in this morning for a chimney fire at Noble's Temperance house. There was no damage in either case.

SEIZED WITH APOPLEXY AND SOON EXPIRED

James Matchette, of Otonabee, was seized with apoplexy in the C. P. R. ticket office Saturday afternoon, and died shortly afterwards. The seizure took place while he was making arrangements for the reserving of a berth on a steamer leaving for the old country. Mr. Matchett complained of feeling faint, and one of the clerks gave him a glass of water. A few moments later he fell unconscious.

Comstock's ambulance was hurriedly summoned, and the stricken man taken to the home of Mrs. Campbell, a relative on Water street. Dr. Halliday was called, and rendered all possible aid. He expired without regaining consciousness.

It was just about one year ago that Mr. Matchett was arranging for a trip to the old land to the former home of his wife in Ireland. She was to accompany him, when he was attacked in much the same way, having suffered for some years from an abscess on the brain. As a result of his former illness he lost the sight of one eye.

The late Mr. Matchett was about 65 years of age, and has been a resident of Otonabee for many years, and was a well-to-do farmer. In religion he was a Methodist.

The funeral will be held to-morrow from his home in Otonabee to Little Lake cemetery. Rev. Mr. Coon will conduct the service at both places.

HAPPY IS THE BRIDE THE SUN SHINES ON

TANNEY—JOBBITT.

The residence of Mr. George Jobbitt, 556 Charlotte street, was the scene of a very pretty wedding Saturday afternoon at 2.30 o'clock, when the marriage of their daughter, Edna E., to Mr. Harold Tanney, of Galt, was solemnized by the Rev. G. W. Henderson.

The drawing room was decorated for the occasion, and the ceremony was performed in the presence of friends and relatives of the contracting parties.

As the strains of the wedding march were played by Miss Clarry, the bride entered, leaning on the arm of her father. She was charming in an ivory satin gown with pearl trimmings, and a bridal veil caught with lilies of the valley. She also carried a large bouquet of white roses.

Miss Luella Tanney, of Galt, attired in pink silk with black picture hat, made a very pretty bridesmaid. Miss Luella Jobbitt, sister of the bride, was maid of honor, and was attired in a charming dress of white lingerie and a lace hat. Mr. Harry Widdison, of Wallaceburg, was best man, and Mr. Harold Jobbitt acted as usher.

Mrs. Jobbitt's dress was of violet silk, and Mrs. Tanney, the groom's mother, was attractively attired in a grey foulard, with black picture hat.

At the conclusion of the ceremony a dainty lunch was partaken of, after which Mr. and Mrs. Tanney left on the 4.38 train for Detroit and other western points.

Their future home will be in Galt, where the groom holds a responsible position.

The groom's gift to the bride was a pendant of pearls, to the bridesmaid a solid gold monogram brooch, and to the groomsman and usher a solid gold stick pin.

The presents to the bride and groom were numerous and beautiful, and testified to the popularity of both young people.

Some of the guests from a distance were: Mrs. Guest, of Winnipeg; Mr. and Mrs. Carroll, of Lindsay; Mr. C. F. Drader, of Victoria Road; Miss Ferguson, of Toronto; Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Janes, of Port Hope; Mrs. A. J. Hawkin, and Master Drader, of Wallaceburg; Mr. Blake Brown, of London; Mrs. Tanney and Miss Tanney, mother and sister of the groom.

SHAW—HAMILTON.

The News-Advertiser, of Vancouver, B.C., in its issue of June 26th, last says:—

"At St. Andrews' church, yesterday afternoon, in the presence of immediate relatives and friends, the marriage was solemnized of Miss Alison Hamilton, of Peterborough, Ont., and Mr. Wilfrid Shaw, eldest son of the Rev. Dr. Shaw, of the University church, Seattle. The ceremony was performed by Rev. R. J. Wilson, who was assisted by Dr. Shaw. The bride, who was unattended, wore a travelling costume of serge in chinois blue, with collar of Muscovite embroidery and floral turban of poppies to correspond. She carried pink roses. Mr. and Mrs. Shaw left town at the conclusion of the ceremony on their honeymoon tour."

THE REVIEW'S WAR REPORTER WRITES OF THE 24TH BATTERY

Camp Petawawa,
July 1st, 1910.

The boys of the 24th Battery C.F.A. are improving wonderfully every day. Their work is cut out for them and they know it but they are there every time. The last two days they have been at the ranges doing preliminary firing practice and have so far led the other corps. I overheard a remark from a prominent vet. that we had the best class of horses on the grounds. This was in front of the P. V. O.

After this morning's firing practice and upon arrival at camp, Major Young, who is brigadier of the brigade, called for three cheers for King George the Fifth, which were given lustily. Shortly after the major's arrival at his tent one of the staff sergeants presented him with a beautiful bouquet of wild flowers. It seems rather strange that none of the other corps in camp did likewise. This shows that the major is up to his business and knows how to take charge of a brigade. The men of both batteries swear by him and think he is the only "It." This afternoon should have been a similar drill as this morning's, but the major thought that as the horses and men were worked pretty hard he sent word to the commandant asking that the men should stay in camp and do light work; his request was granted and the men were greatly pleased over it and made the major even more popular than ever; no matter what trifling matter occurs and a fellow is in trouble, the usual reply is "go to Major Young, and he will see that everything is all right."

The boys are all in good health, but at times one feels sorry for them when they go to the orderly room tent asking for letters from home and the answer is "none." The mail service is wretched.

I have heard that we leave here Friday night, but perhaps it may be Saturday next. As to this you will hear later on.

We have some nice staff officers. They are boys of the "Old Brigade" among them are Major Dr. Fisher, and Capt. Adjt. Vic. Hall, lots of the Peterboronians know them well.

WAS PRESENTED WITH CLOCK

Gift to Departing Teacher—An Appreciative Address

Miss Laing, the popular teacher of S.S. No. 1, Otonabee, was presented with a clock and address by her pupils on Wednesday afternoon at the school house. Miss Laing, who has had charge of the school for two and a half years, is leaving to take up further studies.

The address was as follows:—

Dear Miss Laing,—It is with feelings of deep regret that we, your pupils, have learned of your departure from our midst.

Oftentimes, no doubt, we tried your patience to the very uttermost, yet you were ever kind and gentle, and have made every effort to guide us in the right path, which effort, in years to come, we will perhaps appreciate more fully. Before leaving this little school we would ask you to accept this small timepiece, trusting it may, as you look upon its face, recall to your memory the many faces you leave behind. And also may it bear with it our every good wish that happiness and prosperity attend you as you speed along the pathway of life.

Signed on behalf of the school:
LEONA DOBBIN,
MYRA WARD,
VERTA WARD,
MOLLIE CAMPBELL.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

The Review does not hold itself responsible for opinions expressed by its correspondents

To the Editor of the Review.

Sir,—That the beauties of nature are not appreciated at home is quite evident, when one visits Young's Point, and sees the mad rush of our citizens to the hot rocks of Stoney Lake, while nearer home, at Young's Point, we find a cooler atmosphere and better fishing. The cooler atmosphere is accounted for by the abundance of verdure and foliage on all sides at the Point, together with the spray from the dam, and its freedom from that continuous hot bed of granite to be found in Stoney Lake. Then, too, it is situated on the narrows between Katchewanaka Lake on the south and Clear Lake on the north, with no islands to intercept the breezes. In the hot summer days the wind is usually from a southern direction, and thus the breezes of the former lake are wafted over the village. As to the fishing, it never fails, for it is well known to the residents that on some days the fishing is better on the upper stretches of Clear Lake, while on others they can only be found on the lower stretches of Katchewanaka Lake both of which are equally at hand. People from abroad, however, appreciate the attraction of Young's Point, for every season the Lakeview House, kept by the Kearneys, is filled to repletion with tourists from Rochester, Buffalo, Cleveland, Pittsburg and even Toronto, as well as some of the knowing ones from Peterborough and elsewhere. Besides the hotel proper, they have the annex and a commodious cottage, and this year they have added a large brick building and store on the opposite side of the lake, which, with its sylvan environment and contiguity to the dam, makes a charming resort. The atmosphere is permeated with ozone, formed by the blending of the spray from the dam with the aroma of the immense pine grove adjoining the house, thus imparting life-giving qualities and restoring good health. It ought to be the mecca of all health seekers. I do not know of a more attractive spot for summer cottages, and had our Street Railway Company kept its promise and extended its line there, we could spend our summer nights there without interfering with business.

Yours,
PETERBOROUGH.

July 4, 1910.

Almost Frozen to Death

Last evening a north end resident in the course of a conversation over the long distance telephone with friends at Midland, was informed that they had great difficulty in keeping warm.

Those gentle breezes which were blowing here last evening, had gotten in their good work at Midland, and with the help of the surrounding water, made it feel like an early winter.

ONE HUNDRED AND TWENTY-SEVEN CHILDREN CONFIRMED

One hundred and twenty-seven children received their first communion and were confirmed at 9 o'clock Mass at St. Peter's Cathedral yesterday by His Lordship Bishop O'Connor. The Mass was sung by the bishop, who was assisted by Rev. Father McColl.

His Lordship gave the children an impressive address, in which he explained the sacred nature of confirmation.

In the afternoon at 2.30 the children again assembled in the Cathedral, where they renewed their baptismal vows and made their acts of consecration to the Sacred Heart of Jesus. The girls were exhorted by Father McColl to follow the example of the Blessed Virgin.

After this the boys, 68 in number, went in a body to St. Alphonse's Lyceum, where they joined the Toyal Abstinence Society of the church.

HAVELOCK MAN MUST FACE TWO THEFT CHARGES

James Edwards, of Havelock, who was arrested last week and brought here on a charge of stealing a boat, was to have been given his trial today, but as the prisoner, High County Constable Cochrane and His Worship County Magistrate Edmison were making for the 11.26 C.P.R. train this morning, word was received that the complainant would not be able to attend, and also that several of the witnesses had not been summoned.

Edwards is the man who was implicated in the theft of a colt and whose case was enlarged.

The second offence, it is alleged, was committed shortly afterwards.

He was brought up to the city by Elias Williams, of Havelock.

THE PRUDENTIAL OUTING AT CHEMONG ON JULY 1ST

The Prudential Insurance Company's second annual outing of the Peterborough district was held at Chemong Park on July 1st, the district being represented by Port Hope, Cobourg, Lindsay, Oshawa and Peterborough by the different assistant superintendents and agents with their friends.

Immediately after arriving at the park the sporting events were run off which resulted as follows;—The 100 yard dash won by W. H. Scott, of Port Hope; running broad jump, W. Perkins; wheelbarrow race, Chas. Green; standing back jump, Superintendent J. I. Allen; throwing the ball, was won by the agile Michael Sharp, of Homewood avenue, while the 100-yard dash for the ladies was won by Miss Edith Leadbetter, throwing the ball, Miss Day, of Port Hope, and the ladies' wheelbarrow race by Mrs. Dr Browett. The judges were Dr. Browett, of Peterborough, and F. Berbert, of Port Hope.

After the games were over they adjourned to the hotel to an elaborate dinner, which was prepared especially for them by Mine Host Rickey. After dinner cigars were passed around and arrangements for a special week to be held July 11, were made. Speeches were made by the assistant superintendents of Oshawa, Port Hope, Cobourg, Lindsay and Peterborough, and by Mr. Eastwood, of the Royal Bank, who is the company's banker, also by Mr. F. Berbert, of Port Hope, and Dr. Browett, of Peterborough.

After dinner and the speech-making was over, they adjourned to the ball field, where a contest was waged between the detached men, and of the Peterborough office, which resulted in a score of 25 to 13 in favor of Capt. Sedgwick's ball tossers. The batteries for the Peterborough's were Messrs. R. E. Sherry and J. Lonergan, the South Paw and the Smiling Shamrock, and for the detached men were Archie Seymour, well known among the Peterborough sports, and Mr. D. Morris, the famous catcher for the Oshawa team. But, however, the Peterborough staff was too much for the detached men, and, as stated above, the score resulted in favor of the Peterborough staff.

While the 100 yard dash for the men was being run off, Mr. W. H. Scott, who was taking part, fell and had his left arm broken in two different places between the wrist and the elbow. He was taken to the hospital by Dr. Cameron, where the injured member was attended to. He returned this morning to Port Hope.

THE LITTLE CANOE

A contributor to the "While Going Along" column in the Vancouver News-Advertiser breaks into poetic eulogy of the Peterborough canoe, and invokes the muse in the following:—

THE SONG OF THE PETERBOROUGH.

"At the peep of the sun my paddle dips
And into the stream goes my little canoe.
The blade swings high and the water drips
And glints in the sun on my little canoe.
My heart grows light as we dance along,
And I sing to the swing of my blade a song
The Song of the Peterborough.

When noon is high and the portage waits
Then close to the bank hugs my little canoe;
Ere the hungry rapid seals the fates
And lives of me and my little cnoe.
Then out I spring and I draw her up,
And toast her deep in a steaming cup
To the Song of the Peterborough.

When evening steals across the stream,
Hiding the lines of my little canoe;
When velvety purple shadows gleam
And glisten ahead of my little canoe;
Then snug on the shore I make her my bed
And under her shelter I pillow my head,
And this is the Song of the Peterborough."

TWENTY FIVE DOLLAR PRIZE

For Window Dressing Won by Window Trimmer for Peterboro Firm

Mr. James McNichol, the clever young window decorator of Richard Hall & Son's, has won laurels as an originator and designer of attractive window displays.

Mr. McNichol has captured the first prize of twenty-five dollars offered by the New York Idea Pattern Company, of New York, for the best exhibition of their patterns.

This contract is open to any establishment in Canada or the United States that carry their patterns in stock, and to have the distinction of winning first prize amongst the numerous contestants, speaks well for the ideas and taste of Mr. McNichol in decorative art.

The contests are held twice a year with the object of demonstrating the superiority of New Idea patterns, and Richard Hall & Son's store is the only establishment in the city that carries this line of patterns in stock.

WILD THROW TO THIRD IN THE TENTH GAVE T.A.S. THE GAME

Abstainers Took Lead in the First and Held it Till the Ninth, When P.A.C. Breezed Ahead and Made the Score Stand 10-10--First Extra Inning Contest Played This Season.

Two innings only had been played, and things were looking blue, the P. A. C. were smiling at the shoots which Quinlan threw. His arm had gone the glassy route, that Friday game was tough, the "water boys' had lost their nerve, the road looked dark and rough. The recruit team were batting hard and looked as though they might slam out enough and gallop off as winners in the strife. Quoth Quinlan as he took the bench;—"It's my day off I fear, and some one else must serve them up, who'll be the volunteer?" A dark-faced lad had just came in, from third to take a rest, said he;—"I'd like to have a chance. I'll try and do my best." This caused a smile from all the gang, the youth got mad, said he;—"I'll bet a tea-bone I can win, there'll be no swatting bee."

The last man died, and T.A.S., went out to take the field, said one, "right here we get our bumps, and just then Benton squealed, "well, whose here, our old friend 'Bat,' say fellows take it steady, just take your time for we can win, when we feel fit and ready." But strange to say the P.A.C., tried hard to get some safe ones, and while some came, they all looked tame, but few were good for runs. But when the ninth came round at last, the south end gang got sore, they tore around and only stopped when they had tied the score. This got the stand and General cried "play off the tie right now, both teams agreed, the game went on and "Bill" was called to bow. For he annexed the first base sack, then made it two and three, and then a peg above his head, gave him the home plate free. Next P.A.C. came in to bat, and Thompson got to third, but there he stopped, the last man popped the down fall of the herd.

FIRST INNINGS.

V. Corkery beat out a bunt and stole second. He was out at third on Callaghan's grounder to Thompson. Callaghan stole second. Thompson threw wild to first on M. M. O'Brien singled through third and stole second. Quinlan grounded to third and was out but O'Brien scored on Denison's high throw to third. McFadden singled, but Giroux grounded to short and W. O'Brien fanned. One run.

Anyway it was worth fifteen cents to see Benton strike out.

The league will soon have a record for freak home runs.

"Pete" Campbell had an easy time with the indicator and that's more than some others can say.

Everything was lovely, "Bill" Metheral wasn't on the grounds.

The fans didn't worry about there not being a second game.

Denison pitched nice ball and had the T.A.S. doing some tall swinging.

Ned Simmons slipped and didn't make a three bagger as his long hit looked good for.

RENO, Nev., June 26.—In considering the relative merits of the two big men who are to try conclusions a week from tomorrow it must be remembered that neither man has ever been really extended, and that neither man has ever been compelled to endure to the uttermost. Barring a lucky punch in the opening rounds endurance will play a large part in determining which man is the better. And by endurance is meant the capacity not only to assimilate punishment but the capacity to administer punishment and to keep on administering more and more punishment.

This question of endurance is worthy of analysis. Men are made differently. Some have but a slight life-grip in their bodies and muscles. Others are apparently impossible to kill. One man can walk seventy-five miles in a day and walk a second seventy-five the next day. Another man will collapse at the end of a twenty mile jaunt and be a lame and groaning wreck for a week to come. Yet both these men will be organically sound, of the same size and weight, and their chance of passing a life insurance examination would be equal.

Then what makes the difference? In the fibres of the one reside a primitive vigor and capacity for exertion that the other lacks. Their muscles may look alike, may be of the same size and tensity, yet the protoplasmic, energy-generating quality is different.

The Quality of Muscle.

Take a professional weight lifter. He may tip the scales at 160 pounds. He can elevate a 200-pound dumbbell with one hand. Another man, tipping the scales at the same mark, cannot elevate 100 pounds. He is as sound and healthy as the other man, yet he cannot do it. He may faithfully train and exercise for five years, or ten, and yet he will be unable to elevate 200 pounds with one hand. Nor has will anything to do with it. He may have ten times more will power than the other, but will power can't lift the 200 pounds for him. He lacks in the quality of his muscle, that is all.

This protoplasmic vigor may be our brute heritage, but whatever it is, it is a good thing to have whether one is a prize fighter or not. It was in describing the fight at Colma with Jimmy Britt that I pointed out the possession of this muscular quality by Battling Nelson. I called him an abysmal brute, and he never forgave me. Yet I meant it as a compliment.

Of two boxers equal to look upon in every way, equally well trained, with equal organs, equal gameness and equal will power, one will reach his limit in five or ten rounds, the other, fighting just as severely, will be able to last thirty or forty rounds, or even fifty. It was this peculiar quality that Battling Nelson possessed to such an extreme degree. Jimmy Britt did not possess it. He could outspar and outpunch Nelson, but he could not keep on sparring and punching as long as Nelson could. At the Colma fight he was not knocked out by Nelson. He was merely exhausted. He had reached his limit. He could not move any more. He lost the fight because he knocked himself out by his own exertions.

No "Line" on the Big Fellows.

Corbett lacked this abysmal brutishness to a considerable degree. Choynski had far more of it. So did Sharkey and Fitzsimmons. But when it comes to Jeffries and Johnson there is no line on them at all. They have never been called upon to demonstrate it. Neither knows that he possesses it. Neither has ever engaged in a long, hard, gruelling fight, round after round, striking and being struck, consuming energy at an enormous rate and still going on fighting furiously, on and on, endlessly.

Of the two men Jeffries has thought more about himself, studied himself more, and he has hinted that he believes he possesses it. He has called it reserve power—a sort of second wind that does not depend on the lungs, but that resides in the muscles themselves. But seeing and believing are different, and he has yet to show it to the world. Nevertheless I venture a shrewd guess that he has it. Also, he may be called upon to show it on July 4.

Nor does the world know that Johnson possesses this abysmal brutishness or lacks it. Johnson does not know himself. He has never had a chance to find out. And in this connection it is not a question of "yellow streak" or will power. No matter to what superlative degree Johnson possesses this protoplasmic vigor it will go for naught if he proves yellow. On the other hand, he has never shown any hints of the yellowness, and, it must be added, he has never been in a fight that forced a test of this particular quality.

Jeffries the More Tense.

There is one quality in which Johnson has the advantage over Jeffries and that is in relaxation. Jeffries, while cool and keen, is always more tense. The tensing of muscle consumes energy. Boxing calls for the use of all the muscles in the body, and five minutes' unnecessary tension of all these muscles out of thirty minutes of fighting means a serious consumption of energy.

This is one of Johnson's great assets. He has the art of relaxing perfectly. His fiercest rallies are always followed by intervals of repose. In a clinch, except when he is punishing, he invariably rests. It is because of this relaxing so continually that he is notorious with the sporting public as a loafing fighter. And he seems to relax in mind as well as in body. He seems to stop thinking and perceiving even, and in a clinch he goes into a sort of resting trance. His very flat footed way of fighting takes off from the tension of the legs. It is far less tiring to shuffle about flat footedly than to spring and poise with the muscles tensed from the hips down.

One thing is certain. A week from today Johnson will be compelled to put up the fight of his life. He has never in his career faced so formidable an antagonist. With Jeffries it remains to be seen whether Johnson can make him put up the fight of his life.

The Day That Tells.

Reno, July 4.—The day of reckoning is at hand. Jeffries or Johnson, the bear or the tiger, which will win? A few hours more and, unless there is a draw, or some unexpected disturbances, two words will be flashed around the world, "——— wins."

This afternoon James J. Jeffries and John A. Johnson will meet in their long-talked-of fight for the undisputed heavyweight championship of the world. Gloved fists will thud against flesh in the open arena near Reno. And the son of a slave mammy of the old south, heavyweight champion Johnson, or the son of a preacher, the undefeated Jeffries, will be declared the most perfect fighting machine in the history of the prize ring.

It is estimated that 10,000 visitors are crowded into this desert city today. From east and west the specials disgorged their loads of sporting men, many of whom have traveled from the far corners of the earth. All day big automobiles, powdered with the white dust of the desert, have chugged in from the coast cities, from the California valleys, from ranch and mining camp, even from Seattle, a thousand miles away.

LOCAL RUNNERS WERE WINNERS

At Omemee on the Holiday—Walter Cole of the Y.M.C.A. Won Five Mile Race

Walter Cole, of the Y.M.C.A. Harriers, won the five mile race Dominion Day and received the handsome silver cup donated by Dr. Mason, M.P.

The race was run on a pasture field, which was full of bog holes and which made the running extremely difficult. At the start Cole and Lowes, of Omemee, started out at a terrific pace, but Lowes could not stand the strain and fell back quickly before the mile post was reached. Then the Keene runner took second place, but was unable to get anywhere near Cole, who kept up his rattling pace to the very end, and finished with a burst of speed which made the sports sit up and take notice.

Harold Smith, the speedy short distance runner, won the 100 yards and 220 yards, and finished up by getting second place in the 2 mile, so hurrah for this Association. Mr. Thompson's effort shave not been in vain, and the boys are to be congratulated upon their splendid showing.

ATHLETICS

In the program of sports at Omemee on the holiday, a local athlete, J. Brownlee, came in second in the 220 yard dash, in the hurdle race, and came third in the one mile race and third in the running broad jump.

CRICKET

The Peterborough Cricket Club went to Campbellford on Friday and, while they were defeated, in a friendly game, the players had a very enjoyable trip. The score was 89—40. Mr. L. S. Edney played well for the locals, and Bergman and Bonnycastle were the pick of the Campbellford team. All members of the club are requested to turn out for practice at the Nicholls Oval on Monday and Wednesday nights.

OUR BOYS AND GIRLS

THE LITTLE PIG SHEPHERD

Retold from the Hungarian,

BY LOUISE SOUVAN.

(Copyright, 1910, by the New York Herald Co. All rights reserved.)

WHERE was it? Where was it not? Somewhere in the world it was. Beyond the Operents Sea, this side the glass mountains, there was an infallen, outfallen stove without a bit of a wall. Where it was good it was bad, where it was bad it was good, and yet in it doughnuts were frying in seventy-seven pans. Three gypsy lads took all the doughnuts and carried them away in their shirts. Now, more I cannot invent. It is best, perhaps, that I tell what I am going to tell right away.

Once there was a poor woman who had a son. He was set to tend pigs, but did not do it, and instead did mischief wherever and whenever he could. The poor mother tried all sorts of things, but nothing would do, for he simply did not mind anything; he did not care, and, to tell the truth, he was a miserable rascal.

Now, this good for nothing of a pig shepherd once heard that the King was going to give his daughter to the one who was able to hide himself so his daughter could not find him. "Well, little pig shepherd," he said to himself, "now get at it; much you can win with a little ability."

Immediately he packed a knapsack full of ashcake, threw his embroidered szür (the Hungarian peasant mantle) over his shoulder and started on his journey. He walked and walked, wandered over stick and stone, over mountain and valley,

"I Am Going to Eat You Up on the Spot"

through wood and plain, until the ashcake grew less and less, but the King's castle he could not find. Thus he wandered for a week. Finally he had eaten up the last piece of his ashcake and had seen nothing. Thirst, too, tormented him badly. For want of water his tongue was like a raw doughnut. What was to be done? To perish miserably? Had he known this he had never left home!

In wandering on and on he at last struck a well; upon its edge two doves were sitting.

Said the lad:—"Well, you two doves, I am going to eat you now, for I am almost dead for hunger!" "Don't eat us, little pig shepherd!" begged the little doves. "Rather pull up a pail of water, for we are very thirsty. For your good deed expect good!"

The two doves begged so piteously that he really did not eat them. He went to the well and with the pail drew up the water. After he too had refreshed himself with the good cold water he went on.

Well, now, thirsty he was no longer, but his hunger was even worse than it had been before he saw the doves.

In a desert somewhere in his wandering he met a lame fox. "Lame fox, this and that ought to happen to me if I don't eat you," said the lad. The lame fox begged and begged the little pig shepherd not to eat him. He was "just taking some food to his little sons, and for your good deed expect, good little pig shepherd, I can yet be of help to you!" said the lame fox.

She Saw the Little Pig Shepherd Stand Right in Front of Her

Although the eyes fell almost out of his head from sheer hunger, yet the lad did not do the fox any harm.

On and on jogged and staggered the little pig shepherd; over fields and seeds and stubble fields his way led. Now the last crumbs from his knapsack he had scratched together and eaten up. But what were they for a hungry boy? He tottered to the right, he tottered to the left; he truly thought he never could go on to his destination.

On the way he came to a pond. He looked around as though by chance somebody might be there, but there was nobody; so he went down to the shore and saw a little fish sprawling at the edge of the water. Eagerly he reached for it and took the little fish into his hand.

"Do not eat me, little pig shepherd!" said the fish. "I can reward your kindness some time." For a while the lad kept looking at the fish. How lovely it was, with the sun shining upon its scales, that glistened like pure silver! He had pity on it, and put it back into the water.

Now, whether you believe it or not, I tell you it's a miserable thing to be hungry! By this time the little pig shepherd was sincerely sorry ever to have left home. But, of course, it was too late to care, and if the skies tumbled down he was not going to turn back. Again he found a well with two doves sitting upon the edge. "Surely this time I am not going to be so silly," he said; "neither will I ask man or beast, but I am going to eat you up on the spot!"

Then the two doves again implored him to spare them, and not to eat them just this one time; they surely would render him a valuable service for his kindness.

"Indeed, you always try to persuade me, and I am silly enough to listen to you; but this time you don't demand—or do you—to have me starve on your account?" said the lad.

He reached for the doves, but they begged and entreated enough to melt a stone; and so at last he spared them, drew them a bucket of water, helped himself to it and went on.

But now he really thought he was about to die of hunger.

At last he reached the palace, and at the door the King was standing.

The little pig shepherd greeted him modestly and the King thanked him graciously.

"How do you happen to come to this place, where not even a bird comes?" said the King. "What are you seeking here?"

Then the little pig shepherd told him all from beginning to end and why he had come.

"All right, my son, all right," said the King; "but do you see the ninety-nine human heads upon these pales? Yours will be the hundredth if you cannot hide yourself!"

But the little pig shepherd was not to be daunted. "I'll try it anyhow," he said briefly.

In the palace the little pig shepherd told the maids how dreadfully hungry he was and asked them to give him some scraps of food, no matter what it was, and they brought him as much as he could eat.

Early the next morning the King came to him and suggested that he would better hide himself before his daughter waked up, for when once she was up he surely could not hide himself in her presence.

Hurriedly he dressed himself, and while looking by chance out of the window he saw the two doves he had first met. He opened the window and they commenced to speak:—"Come on, quickly; we'll carry you away!"

Without hesitating, the little pig shepherd confided himself to them. Wind like they flew right straight behind the sun's back.

About this time the Princess, too, got ready and went into the garden. There she picked the most beautiful rose, turned about on her heel and said:—"Come forth, little pig shepherd! There you are, behind the sun's back!"

My goodness! Did you ever see such anger as now ate up the little pig shepherd? and on top of it he was scared too; but what on earth could he do? So he crawled forth from behind the sun's back and went straight into the kitchen.

The second day dawned. The little pig shepherd got up and went to the window. There on his tiptoes was standing the lame fox, already waiting for him. Immediately the lad finished dressing, opened the window and went with the fox, who carried him seven fathoms deep under the earth.

A little later the Princess again went into the garden, picked the most beautiful rose, turned about on her heel and said:—"Come forth, little pig shepherd! You are seven fathoms deep under the earth!"

What was to be done? He crept out from there too.

The third day he went out to the little fish in the pond. To be quite sure that the hiding place would be secure the fish took the little pig shepherd into the remotest corner of the pond. "Now, here she can't find me, when even eyesight cannot reach this place," he thought to himself.

But the Princess went into the garden, picked the most beautiful rose, turned about on her heel and immediately called the little pig shepherd from out of the pond.

"Now, it's all up with me! I am lost! the hundredth pale is mine now," said the little pig shepherd to himself again and again. "Since she has found me this time, how am I to hide myself a fourth time without her finding me right away?" He lay down to sleep and to rest; but could find neither sleep nor rest. He rolled and threw himself from one side to the other all night.

The following morning at dawn he saw the two white doves at his window. When they perceived him, one flew away, while the other remained.

He let in the dove, who said, "Come quickly; you are going to turn into a beautiful rose, and so will I." So it happened.

A little later all the rosebuds opened wonderfully, and here and there flowers were blooming in the garden.

Presently the Princess came down into the garden, and searched and searched for the most beautiful rose, and just look! there were two which looked like twins. She picked both, and put them into her bodice.

Then she turned upon her heel, but the little pig shepherd was not in evidence; she turned again, but neither did she see him this time.

"Well, now, father! I can't see the little pig shepherd," said the Princess. He has hidden himself so well that I cannot find him."

"You don't say it!" cried the King. "You don't say it! Just turn about on your heel once more; perhaps you'll see him now."

So the girl turned for the third time, but she might have turned who knows how often and yet she never would have found the little pig shepherd.

Suddenly one of the roses flew up from the girl's bodice and became a dove and the other rose changed into the pig shepherd.

My, how the Princess' eyes opened when she saw the little pig shepherd stand right in front of her! Then the little pig shepherd embraced her and said:—"My beautiful darling! I am yours, you are mine. The spade only shall part us!" They embraced and kissed one another. Upon that the little pig shepherd turned into a lad a hundred times handsomer than he had been.

In fact, both looked like beautiful flowers. Then they got married and were very happy. The little pig shepherd became so elegant a man that you couldn't find a pair to him, and the girl a beau-

AN IDEAL TENT for the YOUNG CAMPER

In a permanent camp a tent need not be chosen with such care, but when two boys decide to explore unknown Canada, for instance, in an eighteen foot canoe, the matter becomes one of vital importance. On such a trip a man's tent is his house, and furthermore he must carry his house with him; therefore, three cardinal things a tent must possess are:—Warmth, lightness in weight and above all be water proof.

Formerly choice had to be made between canvas, which is heavy, but fairly waterproof, and drill, which is light, but flimsy. A 7x7 duck tent weighs nearly twenty-five pounds when dry and about half again as much when wet. It is rainproof until it is touched on the inside, when a trickle will appear at the point of contact. Taken all in all it is very unsatisfactory and no wonder that some boys prefer to knock together a bark shelter instead.

Nowadays, however, another and better material is offered by the tent makers. It is called balloon silk (because its first use was for the making of balloon bags), and for tent purposes it undergoes a further waterproofing process. A tent of the size mentioned instead of weighing twenty-five pounds, tips the scales at about seven and one-half, and as it does not absorb moisture, is no heavier when wet than when dry. One can touch the inside all he wishes and not render it pervious. The material is tough and enduring.

I have used one for three years, not only as a tent, but also as a canoe lining and a provision cover, and have used it hard. To-day it is in as good condition as ever, excepting inevitable soiling. One small patch represents its entire wear.

The proper shape for a tent is a matter of some discussion. Undoubtedly the lean-to is the ideal shelter as far as warmth goes. You build your fire in front, the slanting wall reflects the heat down, and you sleep warm even in winter weather. In practical use, however, the lean-to is not always such a joy. Flies can get in for one thing, and a heavy rain storm can suck around the corners for another. In such circumstances four walls are highly desirable.

On the other hand, a cold snap makes a wall tent into a cold storage vault. Tent stoves are useless. They are either red hot or stone cold, and even when doing their best there is always one corner that refuses to be thawed out. Then a man feels the need of a properly constructed camp fire.

For three reasons I have slowly come to think that an A or wedge tent is

PUTS BABIES ON DEFENSIVE

Writer Calls on Them to Give Reasons for Their Admission to the Country.

We desire to call attention to a flagrant violation of one of our most important statutes.

Under our immigration laws, no alien can land in this country who has no money and no capacity. If he comes from a foreign store, he must be identified and duly passed upon.

What is really happening? Every day, nay, almost every minute, in this country babies are being born who really have no right to enter our domain. Not only this, but they are calmly allowed to be here and not the slightest protest is made against them.

It is true that recently some effort has been made to discourage their presence. But this is by private individuals, and not by the authorities.

Every baby comes here from a foreign shore. He is a vagrant. Why, he hasn't even clothes on his back. In a large percentage of cases he is sickly, and ought to be kept out by quarantine authorities, if by no one else.

These intruders ought to be guaranteed under the pure infant act, or else they should be promptly shipped back to the sender, with instructions to at least provide them with the necessities of life before they land among a free people.—Lippincott's.

GOOD JOKE ON THE OFFICERS.

Long and Stern Chase of College Students That Ended in Something of a Fiasco.

Once, in a college town, the rumor that students were carrying concealed weapons reached the ears of the local police. Their chief at once issued stringent orders that the heinous practice should be stopped.

In this particular college town the students were no different from students the world over; in other words, they dearly loved to bother the police to the best of their ability. So one day a group of them nonchalantly passed a policeman, and one of the students, in so doing, put his hand to his hip pocket. Then, as if recollecting himself in time, he hastily withdrew it and looked sheepishly at the policeman.

"What have you in that pocket?" the latter asked sternly.

Instead of answering, the student and all his companions, as if panic-stricken, started to run. Immediately the policeman blew his whistle, summoned several of his companions, and started after the group. After a considerable chase in the course of which the policemen were badly winded and roused to a great pitch of anger, all the students were cornered, and summarily ordered to deliver up whatever they had in their hip pockets.

Meekly they obeyed. Each one carried a corncob. The remarks of the policemen cannot possibly be recorded.

The American Voice.

I think myself that what, as much as anything else, laid the foundation of the American voice was the nervous ill-health, lasting over three or four generations, of the American woman. Up to the middle of the nineteenth century, and even beyond, foreigners were surprised when they came across a healthy looking [illegible] an. The isolation of frontier [illegible] general tension of the Ame[illegible] mate, malaria, bad diet a[illegible] sanitation, combined to tur[illegible] the nation into semi-invalid[illegible] thin, sharp, slovenly, stac[illegible] of the American women [illegible] en as not the result of [illegible] nervous depression. I [illegible] ill-health was the sole [illegible] undoubtedly the fact [illegible] health of Americans ha[illegible] have their voices.—Lond[illegible]

The Erudite Barber.

"I don't see," said the eru[illegible] ber as he stropped his razor, "wh[illegible] customers complain that men of [illegible] profession are exceedingly loquacious. All who enter the modern barber's place of business should know what to expect. Every barber shop is a 'tonsorial parlor' nowadays. The word 'parlor' literally means 'talking room,' just as 'parliament' means an assembly of talkers. Parlor and parliament have the same root as the French 'parlez,' which means to talk, and then there is the English 'parley,' to exchange words. Moreover—"

"Moreover," gasped the victim in the chair, "I am in a very parlous position."

The Crimean Crime.

Kinglake was all for war. "He used to say," says Mme. Novikoff, "that peace would emasculate the world. 'Besides,' he continued, 'population when too dense is not at its best.'" He did not like Bright. Mme. Novikoff told Kinglake one day that Bright had made a curious remark about the Crimean statue in Pall-Mall. "The inscription," he had said, "should be altered. The 'a' should be put before the word 'crime,' and not at the end!"—London Chronicle.

Why Church Bells Any More?

Every once in a while a discussion arises as to the use of church bells. Their utility was long ago given up. Their beauty is still defended by some. But in the end the discussion comes back to the question of location. In the country, where distances are long and sounds are softened, a church bell is still enjoyable. But in a city street, where hundreds and thousands are close by, the sound is to most of them a noisy clangor.

THE LID IS OFF IN RENO; FIGHT TOWN-WIDE OPEN

Final Exercise of Wild License by the Multitude of Sports at the Scene of the Johnson-Jeffries Battle—Roulette Wheels Running in Full Blast—Gambling Going on Everywhere.

Reno, Nevada, July 4.—The biggest time which Reno has had since the bonanza days of the Comstock, 40 years ago, is now on in full blast and day and night are now a mad revel. The fight between Jeffries and Johnson brought the largest aggregation of sports ever assembled in an American city, and even yet they are pouring in by the hundreds. Everything is wide open. Saloons are running night and day and hundreds of games of chance are inviting the man with the wad to get rid of it.

The sporting element are taking advantage of the last opportunity of licensed joy under Nevada's laws. This State is the only one left which countenances prize fights of unlimited length, and it is tacitly understood that after this affair of July 4 the Legislature is going to make Nevada a sweet and good State by passing the same restrictions on boxing contests that all of the other States have on their statute books. And then on September 30 a law prohibiting gambling of any kind, which has already passed the Legislature, will be operative. Nevada is the last of the States to prohibit public gambling.

HUNDREDS OF GAMBLING PLACES

In the face of this impending moral sterilization arises the chance for the final carnival of badness. As soon as it was settled finally that the fight would take place here, the sports began to pour in, ready to be on the ground for the prosecution of business and the enjoyment and pleasure. The gambling machinery had to be oiled and made ready for the golden harvest. In three days 219 licenses for gambling games had been taken out, and nearly as many more licenses were issued Monday and Tuesday of last week. Under the law the keeper of a gambling resort must pay $100 initial license for the year and a toll of $75 a month for each game, poker excepted, or rather ignored, on each crap table, wheel or faro layout that he operates. There was not a back room that was not cleared of its rubbish, painted and furnished and crowded with layouts. Partitions were installed and extensions built, vacant stores were all snatched up and their floors scrubbed for the business. There is even a flourishing gambling place below the rooms of the Christian Science Church.

HARVEST IS ON.

Now the golden harvest is on. Money is flowing like water, and the pop of champagne bottles keeps time to the spinning of the wheels. Every kind of game that can separate a person from his surplus wealth is flourishing. Roulette wheels are busy day and night and every gambling emporium is crowded with picturesque throngs drawn from the four corners to today's great mill. Reno doesn't sleep any more.

The pulpit has been thundering its anathemas at the whole carnival in all its phases, but its words might as well have been hurled into the teeth of a cyclone. Reno is too much engrossed in the present revelry to pay heed to any moralizing. Later, it may go on a diet of sermons and soda water.

DANGEROUS DANDRUFF

Will Make Canada a Bald Headed Nation if Not Checked

M. Pasteur, the great French Physician of Paris, once said; "I believe we shall one day rid the world of all diseases caused by germs."

Dandruff is caused by germs, a fact accepted by all physicians.

Dandruff is the root of all hair evils. If it were not for the little destructive germs working with a persistency worthy of a better cause, there would be no baldness.

Parisian Sage will kill the dandruff germs and remove dandruff in two weeks or money back.

Wm. Madill guarantees it. It will stop itching scalp, falling hair and make the hair grow thick and abundant.

It puts life and lustre into the hair and prevents it from turning gray.

It is the hair dressing par excellence, daintily perfumed and free from grease stickiness. It is the favorite with women of taste and culture who know the social value of fascinating hair.

A large bottle costs only 50 cents at leading druggists everywhere, and in Peterborough by Wm. Madill. The girl with the auburn hair is on every package.

It is charged that Watterson, who is 40 years old, shot and wounded Michael Martin, a saloonkeeper, at Saugerties, Friday.

THE MONGOOSE.

If He Can't Get Snakes He Will Fill Himself With Chicken.

"The loneliest living creature in the United States is undoubtedly the mongoose," was the statement made by Raymond L. Ditmars, curator of reptiles at the New York zoological park. "I believe that there are but two or three of the beasts in this country. Mongoose society, you might say, is not teeming with members. A mongoose is a pink eyed, flexible snouted little animal with a shape like a debutante. He is chiefly waist, that is to say. He is partial to snakes as a steady diet, or perhaps it might be better to say a wriggly or unsteady diet. He was one of the original 'catch-'em-alive-ohs'. A mongoose will kill almost any sort of an ordinary sized snake. Most of the constrictor family, however, are too big for him. But he's a bold mite of a furry creature and will tackle almost anything in the serpent line. A mongoose is easily domesticated and in many respects is quite as pleasing a pet as a cat or dog.

"The single objection to him is the fact that if he can't have his snakes he is only too willing to subsist on chicken. As a raider of henroosts a Maryland darky is a neophyte compared with a mongoose. That is the reason there are so few of him in this country. There is a federal law which absolutely forbids the importation of a mongoose. It really is a pity that this most companionable of animals has to be barred from the country. But you simply couldn't keep a chicken in the same neighborhood with a mongoose, safeguard the henhouses as you might. A mongoose can go any place he chooses. If there isn't a hole he imagines one and crawls through it. I'd like to keep one in the Bronx reptile house, but I couldn't afford to. He'd dine on my rarest snakes despite anything I could do to prevent him."—New York Press.

Lockjaw.

Lockjaw, known to medical men as tetanus, is one of those terrible maladies which occasion great suffering and baffle the best attempts of the profession to successfully treat them. Commencing with stiffness of the jaw muscles, tetanus quickly goes on to produce violent convulsions, which utterly exhaust its victim's strength, while preventing him from taking food owing to his being unable to open his mouth; hence its more popular designation of lockjaw. Investigations have shown that this dreadful disease is due to a microbe which commonly exists in ordinary soil and the surface mud of the streets, which habitat explains the reason why tetanus frequently attacks persons who have been injured in street accidents and had their wounds contaminated with refuse and dust from the roadway. Although no certain cure for tetanus is yet known, progress is being made with injections of anti-tetanic serum.—London Telegraph.

The Bey's Wisdom.

A certain ruler of Tunis, Mohammed Bey, was dethroned by his subjects. He was a wise man, and he had a great reputation throughout the country and in the neighboring states. It was generally believed that he had magical powers and that he was acquainted with the secret of the philosopher's stone, by the aid of which he could turn any common metal into gold. The dey of Algiers had heard rumors of this, and, like most other people, he envied Mohammed Bey the possession of a stone so wonderful and so precious. When, therefore, he heard of the bey's downfall he plotted to obtain this stone and sent word to the dethroned ruler that he would restore him to his throne on condition that the latter should reveal to him the secret by which base things, the common earth and stones and metals, could be turned to gold.

The offer was accepted, and in due course Mohammed Bey was reinstated on the throne of Tunis. He was not forgetful of his promise. In a little while the dey of Algiers received from him a solemn deputation bearing the precious object which was to give the power of creating unlimited wealth. Imagine the dey's astonishment when he found that it was only a common plow.

Nevertheless there was great wisdom in the hint that was thus conveyed, since it is only by a well directed industry of hand and brain that man extracts the wealth which lies in common things.

Even or Odd?

This game is the most ancient, perhaps, that we know. The children who played in the streets of Athens and in the Roman Forum in early ages knew and loved it, and little children find amusement in it still. It is played in this manner: One child hides in her hand a few beans, nuts, almonds or just bits of paper and asks her companion to guess if they are odd or even.

If the playfellow guesses odd and on opening her hand the other displays an odd number she forfeits the articles to the guesser, who hides them in her turn, but if the guess is odd and the number even the guesser pays a forfeit and the first hider retains the beans, etc. The guess must be right to win.

Cinderella's Slippers.

How did it happen that Cinderella wore glass slippers to the prince's ball? She didn't. She wore slippers, but they were not of glass, according to people that have been digging into old French libraries. The story of Cinderella as we now know it is a translation made long ago from a French fairy tale. In this story the slippers that the fairy godmother gave to Cinderella were made of sable, the fur once used only by royal persons. The French word for sable is "vair," and the word for glass is "verre." The translator made a mistake, that is all. At least that is what people say.—Chicago News.

The Purple Mist.

There once was a fairy, as old folk tell,
Long and long ago,
That lived in the heart of a bright bluebell,
Long and long ago.
They say she only crept out at night,
Long and long ago,
And combed her hair by the firefly's light.
The old folk say it is so.
She wove her a veil of purple mist,
Long and long ago,
That melted away when the sun king kissed
That fairy of long ago.
And if you steal out at early dawn,
They say—but who can tell?—
That the selfsame fairy may not be gone
To the heart of the bright bluebell.
You may find her weaving the purple mist
As she did in that long ago,
Weaving and waiting there to be kissed
With the kiss of long ago.

BITTER FIGHT BEING WAGED

Chieftain of Conservative Party Issues Statement to Voters—Points to Splendid Revenue.

Winnipeg, July 5.—They're off, officially, in the provincial election campaign, nominations having taken place yesterday. The Roblin Government, which goes to the country next Monday, assumed control in the province Oct. 29, 1900. The Legislature now dissolved (the twelfth) met for the first time Jan 2, 1908, and prorogued for the last time on March 16 last. The Legislature consists of 41 members, and at dissolution it was divided: Conservatives 28, Liberals 13.

The campaign is bitter, even for Manitoba campaigning. A dead set is being made against Premier Roblin in Dufferin, where Prof. Osborne is the Liberal candidate. The Liberal leader is T. C. Norris, a native of Brampton, Ont., who is member for Lansdowne. He is a farmer.

In an address to his constituents delivered at Carman, Premier Roblin said:

"There has been a surplus every year that we have been in office, until we have piled up an aggregate of between three and four millions of dollars. Contrast with ten years' government of the Liberals in this province, in which they piled up an aggregate of deficits of over one million dollars.

"This is a crisis in the history of Manitoba. If we are beaten Manitoba is crippled, dwarfed for ever, and she shall be an inferior and unimportant province that Sir Wilfrid apparently designs she shall be, because her revenues and resources are taken from her."

Another international marriage of prominence was that of Miss Mildred Carter, daughter of John R. Carter, American Minister to Romainia, to Viscount Acheson, eldest son of the Earl and Countess of Gosford. The ceremony was solemnized in St. George's Hanover Square.

TWO TORONTO LADS LOSE THEIR LIVES WHILE CANOEING

Son of Undertaker Ellis Perishes in Lake Couchiching While Trawling—Arthur Burt, a University Student, Goes Down in Humber River.

Toronto, July 5.—"Teddy" Ellis, 18 years old, son of Harry Ellis, undertaker of College street, was drowned while paddling on Lake Couchiching, just off the Orillia Asylum, at 5.30 yesterday afternoon.

Young Ellis and a companion were trolling at the time, and were about half a mile from shore when their canoe upset. Both could swim, and the other lad succeeded in reaching the shore.

Ellis swam about half the distance, when he was apparently taken with cramps and sank. The body has not yet been recovered.

Mr. Ellis left on the early morning train for the scene, where he will personally supervise the efforts to locate the body.

Arthur Burt, a student at the University of Toronto, was drowned in the Humber about 11 o'clock yesterday morning. He was with another young man and an 11-year-old girl, named Annie Evert. The party having landed from their canoe at Dead Man's Point, Burt determined to go in bathing. The other two left him there and continued up the river.

On returning shortly afterward, they could find no trace of Burt, though his clothes were lying on the bank. Assistance was at once summoned from Devins' boathouse, but though two boats with grappling irons dragged the river all afternoon, they had not recovered the body at sundown. The dragging operations will be continued this morning.

William Mitchell Drowned.

Windsor, July 5.—William Mitchell, aged 18, was drowned in the Michigan Central reservoir at Woodslee yesterday afternoon. In company with a companion Mitchell was enjoying a swim when he was seized with cramps. He sank at once, and his comrade, who was afraid to venture beyond his depth, was obliged to look helplessly upon the death struggles of his friend. Mitchell's home was at Woodslee.

Drowned at Moosejaw.

Moosejaw, Sask., July 5.—Egerion Lemond, aged 22, formerly of Stouffville, was drowned on Saturday while bathing in the river. He had reached the middle when he became exhausted, and before help could reach him had gone down twice.

Freighter Struck Small Boat.

Windsor, July 5.—In full view of a crowd a huge freighter crashed into a sailboat in which three Americans were enjoying their Fourth of July holiday. The boat was smashed and one of the occupants drowned.

MICHAEL MANGLE INQUEST

Port Credit, July 5.—Coroner Dr. Sutton held an inquest yesterday afternoon on the body of Michael Mangle, who met his death as the result of an altercation at the St. Lawrence Starch Works, on Thursday, June 30.

The jury brought in a verdict of death resulting from a blow delivered by George Barker.

James Smith, a fellow employe of the two men was the only witness, apart from the medical men. He was an eye-witness of the whole affair and testified that the men had got into a bit of a wrangle, in which Mangle went down twice, the second blow resulting in his death.

Barker, the assailant, will come up before Police Magistrate Shaver on Monday, July 11, at Cooksville, on a charge of murder, when he will be committed for trial. The charge will probably be reduced to manslaughter.

SOUTH AFRICA TO AID NAVY

Johannesburg, July 5.—Premier Botha in a speech at Wakkerstroom said that the protection of the coasts is essential to South Africa, and all must contribute thereto. The declaration is regarded as an intimation of the intention of the Union Government to offer contribution to the Imperial navy.

Gen. French Back From West.

Ottawa, July 5.—Gen. Sir John French returned to Ottawa yesterday from the west and was in conference with the staff at militia headquarters. He goes from here to Montreal, then to Levis, and sails homeward at the end of the week.

Woman Killed by Lightning.

Ottawa, July 5.—Lightning was responsible for the death Sunday of Mrs. O. Lacrasse of this city, who was struck and instantly killed while standing in her house watching the storm. Deceased was 69 years of age and leaves fourteen children.

COUNCIL APPOINTS FOREMAN FOR SEWER CONSTRUCTION

Which Means That City Engineer's Tender is Withdrawn---Better Lighting for Several Peterborough Streets--Communications Dealt With at Last Night's Meeting.

A busy discussion on the matter of appointing a foreman for sewer construction occupied considerable time at the opening of last night's Council meeting. It will be remembered that at a recent meeting of the Board of Works City Engineer Hay stated that unless he could appoint his own foreman he would withdraw his tender. The clause regulating this reads that the foreman shall be appointed by the engineer with the chairman's approval. Ald. Hicks, chairman of the Board, said he would refuse to approve of the man the city engineer wanted to be foreman.

On motion of Ald. Duncan and Morgan Mr. Bartlett was appointed foreman. The clause by regular motion was modified before the appointment by striking out the words "with the approval of the chairman of the Board of Works."

BIRD MACHINES FOR CANADA

Montreal, July 5.—That Canada should cancel all expenditure on her navy and spend all she had to spend for defence on the development of flying machines and the training of men to run them is the opinion of Frederick Villiers, war corresponden of the Illustrated London News.

Airships are the thing of the future, he says, but Britain does not seem to realize this, and he hopes some of the colonies will, so that the Empire will not be shorthanded when the time of trial comes.

He says that of all the countries he has been in—and he has seen nearly all in the civilized and uncivilized world—he likes Canada the best, and is going to bring his family here to live for the rest of their lives.

KNOX WANTS PROF. JORDAN

Kingston, July 5.—Rev. W. G. Jordan, professor of Hebrew and Old Testament criticism in the theological faculty of Queen's University, is being sought by the authorities of Knox College, Toronto, to allow his name to be put forward as a candidate for the chair in Old Testament literature and exegesis at Knox, rendered vacant by the resignation of Prof. McFadyen.

So far as can be learned, Dr. Jordan has not yet made any answer. Being absent from the city, no definite statement can be secured.

GRIM VENGEANCE AND MUCH GUN PLAY

THREE NEGROES KILLED --- MUCH FIGHTING NOW

RIOTING AT THE CAPITAL---WAS NEARLY LYNCHED IN NEW YORK

(Special to the Review.)

New Orleans, La., July 5.—Three negroes have been killed and a dozen whites and blacks seriously injured in riots in Northern Louisiana, resulting from the Jeffries-Johnson fight, according to dispatches received here to-day. Fighting is general at many points.

AT WASHINGTON, TOO

Washington, D.C., July 5.—Two fatally hurt, two hospitals crowded with injured, and two hundred and thirty-six prisoners in city jails, summed up the results to-day of the all-night rioting here, following the announcement of the Johnson-Jeffries fight.

AT NEW YORK

New York, N.Y., July 5.—When Jack Johnson knocked out Jim Jeffries at Reno, 2,500 miles away, he started a wave of rioting in New York that kept the negro sections in tumult throughout the night, and past daylight this morning. Not till after dawn, when scores had been injured, one man killed, and a negro saved from lynching, as he was strung up by a drunken crowd of whites, did the police, heavily reinforced, restore quiet.

FAR-REACHING CLAIMS OF U.S.

London, July 5.—A Hague despatch, referring to Senator Turner's speech, says the results of the United States' contention will apparently be that the United States will be entitled to send warships into Newfoundland waters and soldiers to Newfoundland shores to protect and control inhabitants of the United States when exercising the liberties granted them of fishing in Newfoundland waters and drying and curing fish on Newfoundland shores.

Numerous questions have been put to Turner by the members of the tribunal during the course of his argument. The Senator has on several occasions at a later stage read the tribunal written answers.

Twenty-Five Killed.

Cleveland, O., July 5.—Twenty-five persons were killed and forty hurt in the wreck on the C., H. & D., twenty miles south of Dayton, according to information received here. The wrecked passenger train was the westbound twentieth century limited on the Big Four, which, on account of a wreck at Sharon, Pa., had been routed over the Cincinnati, Hamilton and Dayton. North of Middleton the passenger train collided head-on with a northbound freight train at 1.30 p.m.

LATE TICKS FROM WIRES

A settlement between the C.P.R. and its trainmen is looked for to-day.

Miss Dorothy Hobson, the victim of the Hamilton automobile accident, is not expected to live.

Sir John Murray is in Ottawa to confer with the Government regarding a survey of the lakes.

Herbert Barber fell from a rig at Guelph, striking on his head, and it is feared he is fatally injured.

Albert Proctor, aged 17, was shot and killed while playing with firearms with a companion near Clinton.

Australia has contributed $500 and New Zealand $125 towards the erection of the memorial tower at Halifax.

The steamer Baltic reached New York yesterday with a six-foot hole in her hull, caused by a collision with an oil steamer.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier expressed himself in favor of Toronto's application for the new land on either side of the western channel.

Albert Rogers of Guelph is said to have been left $40,000 by a wealthy Pittsburg man, whom he saved from drowning in Scotland some years ago.

BELL-BOY WAS THE ROBBER

Berlin, Ont., July 5—After eluding the nightly watches of the proprietor of the American Hotel, a private detective, and the chief of police, acting alternately for the past week, Jerry Strom, a bell-boy, was caught redhanded yesterday morning in the act of robbing the till. This was accomplished by means of a hole bored in the ceiling, where the vigil was kept. Chief O'Neill saw the boy take the money. In all over $200 was stolen. Strom is seventeen years old.

White Slavery In Canada.

Halifax, July 5.—"Stern logic and indisputable evidence shows the existence of the 'white slave traffic' in every part of the civilized world." So the National Council of Women were informed yesterday morning by Miss Gaulick's report. "Let us attack it at a vital point," urged the special committee.

The report from British Columbia expresses fear that it is conducted there by Chinamen. In Winnipeg a campaign, also against Chinamen, is being conducted. In Toronto 700 fallen girls were cared for in the hospitals.

THE WORLD WAGS ON

Jeffries didn't come back. We are sorry for while a black man is as good in the eyes of God Almighty as a white, yet we being white and human would have much preferred to have seen Jeff win. He has done his best and lost. He is in the ranks of a has been. He is not alone. His is the arena. His place a fallen fighter. There is the lawyer. He has been great once. He is a has been to-day. Other tongues more persuasive than his own, other minds are crowding him down and out. Take the doctor. He is getting old. His hand no longer steady, yields to the hand of the younger man. He pauses. He is a has been. The preacher, too, knows well the hand of time. He feels the day has come for him to give way to younger blood. He is a has been. In every walk from the exalted rank of ruler down to the man who holds the throttle on his special train, we are heading to the ranks of the has been, age, time, want and worry give the knock out and we are the chief attraction at a funeral, soon forgotten, and some one else takes our place, and the world wags on.

THATS GOOD

J. J. Turner & Sons announce in an advertisement in the Review that their moving pictures shown nightly in the opera house will have nothing that is not instructive. That's good. Moving pictures can either be made instructive or destructive.

TOTAL ABSTINENCE

The scene of 68 young people becoming members of the Total Abstinence Society on Sunday was an inspiring one. The Roman Catholic church of Peterborough is doing great work in this respect. If the youth of the country do not drink it is sure that the land will be a sober one. Educate, then legislate. When education regarding the drink question is looked after legislation is at once effectual. Soaks will get whiskey in spite of local option, but with the rank and file abstainers the question is at once settled. The one thousand members of the T.A.S. in Peterborough is a great tribute to those behind the movement.

NORMAL NOW

We will soon be normal. In a few days we will no longer be animals. We will become men again. The fight is over and the black man's speed has won a victory for his race. The excitement in Peterborough was intense. All classes bought the Review's extra, which was on the street three minutes after the flash from the ringside announcing that Jeffries had lost. None were more interested than the professional and business men. The telephone was constantly besieged. "How did the fight come off?" Many who asked were women. But now we are becoming more normal. Men and things will assume their proper proportions. The fighters will soon be forgotten. But the sting will remain. It will not be surprising if in their exuberance and joy some of the dusky skinned of the South became indiscreet, and the white southerners shot or burned a few of them, just to get even.

BEWARE

The editor of the Northern Advance, Barrie, openly breaks the rule of the Fourth Estate. He publishes a poem in the paper and adds a footnote that the name of the composer may be had by applying to the editor at the office. If this were the general custom what would become of 'Pro Bono Publico,' and of 'Veritas,' or 'Constant Reader,' 'Citizen,' or 'Subscriber?' The error is a grave one. Without these public dictators, who shield themselves behind pen names, things would come to a pretty pass. In many a village, town and city if Pro-Bono-Publico and his friends were not allowed to dip their pens and write without revealing their identity, the cows and geese would run at large, the young men would loaf on the corners and the grafter will graft ad libitum. The editor of the Northern Advance had better beware.

THE "I TOLD YOU SO" CLUB

There were a million wise ones in America who knew what the result of the fight would be. They belong to the society of wise men, the club of "I Told You So." Is there a municipal election "I told you so" is always busy after it is past. Does a trusted official go wrong? "I told you so" knew it. Is a business man unsuccessful, or does a church member elope with a choir girl, "I told you so" had it up this sleeve all the time. There is no city that does not possess a strong "I told you so society." There is a flourishing one in Peterborough, and it added a thousand names to its active list yesterday.

HALF GONE

The year is half gone. It has been an eventful one. The opening of the year was a signal for great success in the ranks of temperance when the life of 554 licenses was cut off in Ontario. On January 22nd, the Webbwood disaster took place at Spanish River, when Conductor Reynolds achieved fame and 30 lives were lost. Four days later the Seine in France drew the attention of the world and floods did $2,000,000 damage.

On Feb 14th, the Liberal Government over sea was sustained by a reduced majority. On February 23rd the world looked at Philadelphia for a moment as the news went out that 1,000 were injured in a street car riot. It glanced at Rogers' Pass, B.C., on March 5th, when 50 people were killed in an avalanche. On April 16th, the Miller anti-gambling bill race track bill passed.

Mark Twain died on April 21st. King Edward on May 6th. Glen Curtis flew from Albany to New York over a month ago. It doesn't seem that long, does it? Why in a year or so people will ever forget where the white man fell down before Johnson.

A LAPSE

The Montreal Witness is a splendid paper. It could be read in church without conflicting emotions or distracting thoughts. The Witness is probably the one sheet in America, with the exception of the Christian Science Monitor, published at Boston, Mass., that didn't have anything about the fight in its columns. However, it is disappointing to note that a divorce case is reported with a tell tale telegram, and the scene between husband number one and number two in the court at Montreal. It also publishes under the heading "Free fight closed game." The full details of a lacrosse scrap. This on July 4th. This is surely a lapse.

"HI JINKS"

There will be Hi Jinks at Ottawa when Earl Grey is succeeded by the Duke of Connaught as Governor-General of Canada. Of course it goes without saying that we couldn't get along without a Governor-General. Canada's growth would be retarded if there wasn't one on the job at Ottawa at $50,000, a mansion, a retinue and all expenses.

Think of the education it will give us. We are colonials. He is of blood royal. "May it please your grace," This sounds much better than "Yes my lud," "No my lud." And we must not be blind to the fact that he can show us the way to roll our trousers. The ladies with him can let their light shine also in the proper way to conduct pink teas, the latest handshake the proper words to inflict and all the fine points necessary to high society. If we must pay $50,000 let us have nothing but the very best.

THE POINT OF VIEW

RIGHT YOU ARE.
The Hamilton Times.

A New York judge has sent to jail for 15 years a man who poisoned a number of horses and who extorted $25 from a teamster by threats of poisoning his team. The punishment is a salutary one. It should have been accompanied with a few wholesome floggings.

STREET CARS IN GUELPH
Guelph Herald

Guelph street cars during the month of June carried more passengers than they ever did in one month before. Manager Hackney gave the number out this morning as 113,571, which is seventeen thousand more than the June previous. Yesterday's large traffic may be guaged from the fact that 8,000 passengers were handled during the day.

CHEW MORE—EAT LESS.
Milo Hastings in Halifax Herald.

Further experiments show that increased endurance invariably came to those who chewed more and ate less, especially meat. To-day the endurance records stand: Knee-bending test, best vegetarian, 2,400 times; best meat eater, 1,227 times. Holding out arms, best meat eater, 22 minutes; best vegetarian, 176 minutes.

Now, the vegetarians are vegetarians in name only—the vegetarian partakes freely of the product of the cow and the fruit of the hen. There seems to be a reason why meat produces more fatigue than milk or eggs or vegetables. Science cannot explain just why, but the answer lies deep in the mystery of the proteid molecule close to the secrets of life itself.—Milo Hastings.

Hogs 15c to 25c Higher at Buffalo—Cattle Firmer.

LIVERPOOL, July 4.—John Rogers & Co., Liverpool, cable to-day that trade in the Birkenhead market was firm at Saturday's quotations. There were more buyers in the market, and practically everything was cleaned up. Full quotations were: For Canadian steers, from 14½c to 15½c per pound, and for fed ranchers from 13½c to 14c.

Union Stock Yards.

TORONTO, July 4.—Receipts of live stock at the Union Yards were 113 carloads, consisting of 2323 cattle, 93 hogs, 389 sheep, and 95 calves.

Exporters.

Export steers sold at $6 to $7.15; bulls, $5.25 to $5.60.

Milkers and Springers.

Fred Rowntree reported the market for good milkers and springers as being strong, he having bought the bulk on sale at $40 to $65 each.

Veal Calves.

There was a good trade for the 100 calves on sale at $3 to $6.50 per cwt., with two choice quality new milk fed calves at $7 per cwt.

Sheep and Lambs.

Sheep and lambs sold at about the same prices as quoted for last Thursday: Ewes, light, $4.50 to $5 per cwt.; heavy, $4 to $4 50; rams, $3.50 to $4; lambs, $7.50 to $8.50 per cwt.

Hogs.

Dealers quoted selects, fed and watered, at $9 per cwt., and $8.65, f.o.b., cars at country points, but Coughlin & Co. reported a sale of a double-deck of hogs at $9.12½ per cwt., fed and watered, at the market.

Montreal Live Stock.

MONTREAL, July 4.—(Special.)—At the Montreal Stock Yards West End Market the receipts of live stock for the week ending July 2 were 2200 cattle, 400 sheep and lambs, 1500 hogs and 1500 calves. The offerings on the market this morning for sale amounted to 1075 cattle, 325 sheep and lambs, 900 hogs and 500 calves.

A weak feeling continues to prevail in the market for cattle, and prices have scored a further decline of ½c per lb. since this day week, which is attributed to the steady increase in the supply, the large percentage of half-finished stock, and the falling off in the demand from local butchers on account of the continued warm weather and the decrease in the consumption of beef.

Cables from Liverpool and London were stronger, and noted an advance in prices of ½c per lb., as compared with a week ago.

Choice steers sold at 6½c to 6¾c; good at 6c to 6¼c; fairly good at 5½c to 5¾c; fair at 5c to 5¼c, and common at 4½c to 4¾c per lb. The top figure for choice cows was 5c, and the lower grades sold at from that down to 3c per lb.

There was no change in the condition of the market for hogs to-day. Sales of selected lots were made at $9.50 to $9.75 per 100 lbs., weighed off cars. Cables from Liverpool and London on Saturday were much stronger on Canadian bacon, and noted a further advance of 1s to 3s per cwt. A feature of the market for small meats was the stronger feeling in calves. Sales of choice, milk-fed ones were made at 5½c per lb., and the commoner grades at from $3 to $5 each. The market for sheep was steady, at 3½c to 4c per lb., and spring lambs sold at from $3.50 to $5 each.

At the Canadian Pacific live stock market the receipts of live stock for the week ending July 2 were 2037 cattle for export account, and 1300 cattle, 900 sheep and lambs, 800 hogs and 900 calves, while the supply on the market this morning for sale consisted of 400 cattle, 75 sheep and lambs, 75 hogs and 100 calves.

Fur-Bearing Animals Increase.

London, July 5.—At a Hudson Bay Co. meeting, Lord Strathcona said the report indicated continued increase in the fur-bearing animals of Canada, though the shortage of rabbits for food was against the hunt. He referred to the prospective increase in the price of agricultural land. Henry Clarke protested against the changes on the board, and said it looked as if the company was to be exploited by the Stock Exchange. The report was adopted and the meeting decided to present Lord Strathcona with his portrait in oils.

London Hasn't Heard It.

London, July 5.—In the House of Commons Col. Seeley stated he had no official confirmation of the report that the United States Government authorized United States whalers to disregard Canadian jurisdiction in Hudson Bay Straits. Col. A Storekeeper Says:

"A lady came into my store lately and said:

"'I have been using a New Perfection Oil Cook-Stove all winter in my apartment. I want one now for my summer home. I think these oil stoves are wonderful. If only women knew what a comfort they are, they would all have one. I spoke about my stove to a lot of my friends, and they were astonished. They thought that there was smell and smoke from an oil stove, and that it heated a room just like any other stove. I told them of my experience, and one after another they got one, and now, not one of them would give hers up for five times its cost.'"

The lady who said this had thought an oil stove was all right for quickly heating milk for a baby, or boiling a kettle of water, or to make coffee quickly in the morning, but she never dreamed of using it for difficult or heavy cooking. Now—she knows.

Do you really appreciate what a New Perfection Oil Cook-Stove means to you? No more coal to carry, no more coming to the dinner table so tired out that you can't eat. Just light a Perfection Stove and immediately the heat from an intense blue flame shoots up to the bottom of pot, kettle or oven. But the room isn't heated. There is no smoke, no smell, no outside heat, no drudgery in the kitchen where one of these stoves is used.

Cautionary Note: Be sure you get this stove—see that the name-plate reads "New Perfection."

The Mystery of The Yellow Room

By GASTON LEROUX

COPYRIGHT, 1908. By BRENTANO'S.

The examination had proceeded thus far when, to our surprise, Frederic Larsan returned to the chateau. He was accompanied by one of the employees of the railway. At that moment Rance and I were in the vestibule discussing Mathieu's guilt or innocence, while Rouletabille stood apart, buried apparently in thought. The examining magistrate and his registrar were in the little green drawing room, while Darzac was with the doctor and Stangerson in the lady's chamber. As Frederic Larsan entered the vestibule with the railway employee Rouletabille and I at once recognized him by the small blond beard. We exchanged meaning glances. Larsan had himself announced to the examining magistrate by the gendarme and entered with the railway servant as Daddy Jacques came out. Some ten minutes went by, during which Rouletabille appeared extremely impatient. The door of the drawing room was then opened, and we heard the magistrate calling to the gendarme, who entered. Presently he came out, mounted the stairs and, coming back shortly, went in to the magistrate and said:

"Monsieur, M. Robert Darzac will not come!"

"What! Not come!" cried M. de Marquet.

"He says he cannot leave Mlle. Stangerson in her present state."

"Very well," said M. de Marquet. "Then we'll go to him."

M. de Marquet and the gendarmes mounted the stairs. He made a sign to Larsan and the railway employee to follow. Rouletabille and I went along too.

On reaching the door of Mlle. Stangerson's chamber M. de Marquet knocked. A chambermaid appeared. It was Sylvia, with her hair all in disorder and consternation showing on her face.

"Is M. Stangerson within?" asked the magistrate.

"Yes, monsieur."

"Tell him that I wish to speak with him."

Stangerson came out. His appearance was wretched in the extreme.

"What do you want?" he demanded of the magistrate. "May I not be left in peace, monsieur?"

"Monsieur," said the magistrate, "it is absolutely necessary that I should see M. Darzac at once. If you cannot induce him to come I shall be compelled to use the help of the law."

The professor made no reply. He looked at us all like a man being led to execution and then went back into the room.

Almost immediately after M. Robert Darzac came out. He was very pale. He looked at us, and, his eyes falling on the railway servant, his features stiffened, and he could hardly repress a groan.

We were all much moved by the appearance of the man. We felt that what was about to happen would decide the fate of M. Robert Darzac. Frederic Larsan's face alone was radiant, showing a joy as of a dog that had at last got its prey.

Pointing to the railway servant, M. de Marquet said to M. Darzac:

"Do you recognize this man, monsieur?"

"I do," said M. Darzac in a tone which he vainly tried to make firm. "He is an employee at the station at Epinay-sur-Orge."

"This young man," went on M. de Marquet, "affirms that he saw you get off the train at Epinay-sur-Orge"—

"That night," said M. Darzac, interrupting, "at half past 10. It is quite true."

An interval of silence followed.

"M. Darzac," the magistrate went on in a tone of deep emotion—"M. Darzac, what were you doing that night at Epinay-sur-Orge—at that time?"

M. Darzac remained silent, simply closing his eyes.

"M. Darzac," insisted M. de Marquet, "can you tell me how you employed your time that night?"

M. Darzac opened his eyes. He seemed to have recovered his self control.

"No, monsieur."

"Think, monsieur, for if you persist in your strange refusal I shall be under the painful necessity of keeping you at my disposition."

"I refuse."

"M. Darzac, in the name of the law I arrest you!"

The magistrate had no sooner pronounced the words than I saw Rouletabille move quickly toward M. Darzac. He would certainly have spoken to him, but Darzac by a gesture held him off. As the gendarme approached his prisoner a despairing cry rang through the room:

"Robert! Robert!"

We recognized the voice of Mlle. Stangerson. We all shuddered. Larsan himself turned pale. M. Darzac in response to the cry had flown back into the room.

The magistrate, the gendarme and Larsan followed closely after. Rouletabille and I remained on the threshold. It was a heartbreaking sight that met our eyes. Mlle. Stangerson, with a face of deathly pallor, had risen on her bed in spite of the restraining efforts of two doctors and her father. She was holding out her trembling arms toward Robert Darzac, on whom Larsan and the gendarme had laid hands. Her distended eyes saw—she understood—her lips seemed to form a word, but nobody made it out, and she fell back insensible.

M. Darzac was hurried out of the room and placed in the vestibule to wait for the vehicle Larsan had gone to fetch. We were all overcome by emotion, and even M. de Marquet had tears in his eyes. Rouletabille took advantage of the opportunity to say to M. Darzac:

"Are you going to put in any defense?"

"No," replied the prisoner.

"Very well, then, I will, monsieur."

"You cannot do it," said the unhappy man, with a faint smile.

"I can do it, M. Robert Darzac, because I know more than you do!"

"Come! Come!" murmured Darzac, almost angrily.

"Have no fear. I shall know only what will benefit you."

"You must know nothing, young man, if you want me to be grateful."

Rouletabille shook his head, going close up to Darzac.

"Listen to what I am about to say," he said in a low tone, "and let it give you confidence. You do not know the name of the murderer. Mlle. Stangerson knows it, but only half of it. But I know his two halves. I know the whole man!"

Robert Darzac opened his eyes with a look that showed he had not understood a word of what Rouletabille had said to him. At that moment the conveyance arrived, driven by Frederic Larsan. Darzac and the gendarme entered it, Larsan remaining on the driver's seat. The prisoner was taken to Corbeil.

That same evening Rouletabille and I left the Glandier. We were very glad to get away, and there was nothing more to keep us there. I declared my intention to give up the whole matter. It had been too much for me. Rouletabille, with a friendly tap on my shoulder, confessed that he had nothing more to learn at the Glandier; he had learned all I had to tell him. We reached Paris about 8 o'clock, dined, and then, tired out, we separated, agreeing to meet the next morning at my rooms.

Rouletabille arrived next day at the hour agreed on. He was dressed in a suit of English tweed, with an ulster on his arm and a valise in his hand. Evidently he had prepared himself for a journey.

"How long shall you be away?" I asked.

"A month or two," he said. "It all depends."

I asked him no more questions.

"Do you know," he asked, "what the word was that Mlle. Stangerson tried to say before she fainted?"

"No. Nobody heard it."

"I heard it," replied Rouletabille. "She said 'Speak!'"

"Do you think Darzac will speak?"

"Never."

I was about to make some further observations, but he wrung my hand warmly and wished me goodby. I had only time to ask him one question before he left.

"Are you not afraid that other attempts may be made while you're away?"

"No; not now that Darzac is in prison?" he answered.

With this strange remark he left. I was not to see him again until the day of Darzac's trial at the court when he appeared to explain the inexplicable.

CHAPTER XXV.

"IT IS I, M. PRESIDENT—JOSEPH ROULETABILLE!"

CHAPTER XXV.

In Which Joseph Rouletabille Is Awaited With Impatience.

ON the 15th of January—that is to say, two months and a half after the tragic events I have narrated—the Epoque printed as the first column of the front page the following sensational article:

"The Seine-et-Oise jury is summoned today to give its verdict on one of the most mysterious affairs in the annals of crime. There never has been a case with so many obscure, incomprehensible and inexplicable points. And yet the prosecution has not hesitated to put into the prisoners' dock a man who is respected, esteemed and loved by all who knew him—a young savant, M. Robert Darzac. There is no doubt in the mind of anybody that could the victim speak she would claim from the jurors of Seine-et-Oise the man she wishes to make her husband and whom the prosecution would send to the scaffold. It is to be hoped that Mlle. Stangerson will shortly recover her reason, which has been temporarily unhinged by the horrible mystery at the Glandier. The question before the jury is the one we propose to deal with this very day.

"We have decided not to permit twelve worthy men to commit a disgraceful miscarriage of justice. Up to now everything has gone against M. Robert Darzac in the magisterial inquiry. Today, however, we are going to defend him before the jury, and we are going to bring to the witness stand a light that will illumine the whole mystery of the Glandier, for we possess the truth.

"When attention was first drawn to the Glandier case our youthful reporter, Joseph Rouletabille, was on the spot and installed in the chateau when every other representative of the press had been denied admission. He worked side by side with Frederic Larsan. He was amazed and terrified at the grave mistake the celebrated detective was about to make.

"France must know—the whole world must know—that on the very evening on which M. Darzac was arrested young Rouletabille entered our editorial office and informed us that he was about to go away on a journey. 'How long I shall be away,' he said, 'I cannot say; perhaps a month, perhaps two, perhaps three. Perhaps I may never return. Here is a letter. If I am not back on the day on which M. Darzac is to appear before the assize court, have this letter opened and read to the court after all the witnesses have been heard. Arrange it with M. Darzac's counsel. M. Darzac is innocent. In this letter is written the name of the murderer, and—that is all I have to say. I am leaving to get my proofs—for the irrefutable evidence of the murderer's guilt.' Our reporter departed. For a long time we were without news from him. But a week ago a stranger called upon our manager and said: 'Act in accordance with the instructions of Joseph Rouletabille if it becomes necessary to do so. The letter left by him holds the truth.' The gentleman who brought us this message would not give us his name.

WHEN YOU ARE SICK

It doesn't take a good doctor to tell that — most any one could do that much, but to tell exactly the nature of the disease sometimes calls for the utmost skill of the Physician. Most anybody by a few simple tests could tell that your eyesight was defective and that you needed glasses of some kind, but to diagnose the exact trouble and fit the right glasses calls for more than ordinary skill.

We have made that one thing a study for years, and we are in business to bring wrong eyes and right glasses together. Satisfaction Guaranteed.

CHEAPEST ON THE CONTINENT

And Buckhorn And Burleigh Falls Will Produce 11,000 h.p. in Dry Season

Mr. J. A. Culverwell, managing director of the Central Ontario Power Company, was in town Thursday and made the following statement to us: The company own the Burleigh and Buckhorn Falls, which will produce 11,000 horse power in the dry season, these powers having a big head and large reservoirs adjoining. They are located eighteen miles north of Peterborough, the cost of transmission will be small, besides new dams are already built, and no tail races or head races are required. An eminent engineer says it is the cheapest developable power on the continent. Power can be gotten from this place much cheaper and quicker than from any other possible source. Cobourg wants this power, and no further power contentions. The Sentinel-Star congratulates Mr. Culverwell and his associates on their recent successes in the power business. Every person is congratulating Mr. Culverwell on his honorable and generous dealings with his friends, and we hear this on all sides.—Cobourg Sentinel-Star.

Mr. Turner has made arrangements for a particularly strong vaudeville bill this week, and in his booking is securing the cream of two reliable circuits.

In spite of the warm weather, the Grand continues to be excellently patronized, and the citizens evidently appreciate inoffensive, and interesting pictures and refined and clever vaudeville.

SEVEN YEAR OLD CYRIL HUGHES SAVED FROM DROWNING

Was Playing on a Log and Got Out Into Deep Water—Quick Work by Mr. Jack Riordan Brought Him to Safety

By the closest margin, little Cyril Hughes, the seven year old son of Mr. Walter Hughes, 477 Boliver street, was saved from drowning yesterday afternoon, shortly after three o'clock, and it is due to the quick work of Mr. Jack Riordan, who resides on Bethune street, and is an employee of the C.P.R. that the young lad is alive and well to-day.

Master Cyril found the weather rather warm yesterday afternoon and decided that a trip to the water would be refreshing. With another young lad, he wandered down to where the trestle bridge is situated on the C.P.R. spur line, to the Quaker Oats Co.

Not having learnt the art of swimming he did not take to the water like a number of other boys who were about, but besported himself on a log, and he was hanging on to one end with his head just above the water, when Riordan came along, from the Quaker Oats Co., where he had been checking some cars.

Fortunately he walked on the side of the track from where the boy could be seen. "I had started on the opposite side, but something told me to take the other side," said Mr. Riordan, to a Review reporter this morning, "and as I looked down, I noticed the boy hanging on to the log.

"He had his clothes on and his hat was floating some distance away. In answer to my question as to what he was doing, and whether he could swim, another young lad nearby said that he could not swim, and then he ran away."

It didn't take Mr. Riordan many seconds to jump in the water without taking the trouble to discard his clothing, and young Hughes was taken to safety just at the right moment for his hold on the log had loosened.

Needless to say the parents of the youth are grateful to his rescuer and wish to publicly thank him.

HAPPY IS THE BRIDE GLORIOUS IS THE DAY

St. James' church witnessed a very pretty wedding this afternoon when Miss Ethel Sherwood and Mr. Wm. Adams, of Buffalo, were joined in the bonds of holy wedlock, by the Rev. J. G. Brown.

Charmingly attired in a gown of chiffon taffeta silk, with silk lace yoke and pearl trimming, the bride was given away by her father, while Mendelssohn's march was played by Mrs. Rehill.

The bride carried a beautiful bouquet of white roses.

Miss Christina Sherwood, sister of the bride, was attractively attired in a point desprit gown of mauve, and made a very pretty bridesmaid.

Mr. Leonard Adams acted as groomsman.

After the ceremony a dainty wedding luncheon was partaken of.

The young ladies of St. James' church had the church very prettily decorated for the occasion with palms and flowers.

Mr. and Mrs. Adams left on the 4.38 C.P.R. for Toronto, Niagara and Detroit, the bride travelling in a braided suit of light grey material with cream lace hat.

Many out-of-town guests were present, mostly from Toronto and Buffalo.

McMOYLE—PORTER.

A very pretty wedding took place on Thursday, June 30th, at 6 p.m. at the home of Mr. Joseph B. Porter, of Bailieboro, when his daughter, Mary Frances, was united in marriage to Mr. Robert James McIlmoyle, of Fraserville. The ceremony, which was performed by Rev. D. A. McKenzie, B.A., of Centreville, in the presence of about fifty guests, took place on the lawn. The bride was given away by her father. Miss Mamie Fisher, of Fraserville, played the wedding march. The bride looked handsome in a gown of white silk mull with rose pointe lace trimming, tulle veil and crown of orange blossoms, and carried a shower of roses and carnations. They were unattended.

After congratulations, dainty refreshments were served on the lawn.

Mr. and Mrs. McIlmoyle will reside near Fraserville, and carry with them the best wishes of a large circle of friends for their future welfare.

GOOD WISHES FOLLOW OUR NEW CHIEF OF POLICE

Under the caption, "Chief Thompson leaves to-night, Woodstock loses a valuable and efficient officer," the Woodstock Express says;

The 7.38 G.T.R train for the east will carry amongst its load of passengers to-night a former official of this city, whose departure will be sincerely regretted by a host of citizens in Woodstock, in the person of Chief of Police Daniel Thompson, who leaves to take up his duties as chief of the city of Peterborough to-moorrw morning. Chief Thompson's departure certainly means a lot to Woodstock. During the three years that he has acted as chief here he has won the respect of all law-abiding citizens and with a firm hand and has had much to do with the supresion of crime in this district. It is the wish of a large majority of Woodstock's citizens that the chief may prosper wherever he may go.

Up to the present time the police commissioners have appointed no successor to Chief Thompson. It is understood that Constable Killing, who for some months has been a member of the local police force, will be given the position as acting chief for the time being at least. The commissioners have installed a telephone in his house and he will have full charge from now on. Although no names have been given out it is learned that applications are in from London, Lindsay, Whitby, Brantford and other places.

GASOLINE LAUNCH IS THE ENEMY OF THE FISHERMAN

The fishermen of Peterborough state that the happy fishing days on the Otonabee are merely reminiscences of the golden past.

The gasoline launch, with its churning and gasoline fumes, has caused the fish to seek more tranquil and homelike weed beds, and a wholesale migration to Rice Lake, where the weeds are long and the launches few, is suspected. At any rate, the fish harvest in the Otonabee this year is a very slim one, and the man who three or four years ago would regard a string of bass as a natural result of patience and knowledge of the "beds," is now tempted to keep a fish as a souvenir if he lands one.

BIGGER PARK AND PUBLIC BATHING PLACE SUGGESTED

Ald. Buller thinks the people in the south end of the town need more park breathing space.

At last night's meeting of the City Council he urged the necessity of adding more ground to the King Edward Park, and on his recommendation the matter will be fully considered.

Ald. Turner thought a bridge should be built from Riverside Park to the two small islands south of it, and a public bathing grounds made there. Ald. Graham, Turner, Bradburn and Duffus were appointed a committee to act in the matter.

MILLBROOK NEWS

Special to the Review.

Millbrook, July 5.—A rather distressing accident occurred in Millbrook the other day. Mrs. C. White and her mother, Mrs. Henderson, were driving into town, when, through the breaking of a bridle, the horse became unmanageable. After plunging around for a while it upset the buggy, throwing the occupants out. Mrs. Henderson sustained injuries which necessitated her removal to a nearby house, where medical treatment was procured. She is resting easily. Mrs. Chance White also received a severe shaking up.

A strawberry social was held at Carmel last Monday on the lawn of Norman Henry. A baseball match was pulled off between Carmel and Cavanville, the latter winning by six runs, the score being 10—4. There was a large turnout.

The First of July passed off quietly here. There was a baseball match between the Methodist team and the Presbyterians, which resulted in a victory for the former. A great number of people took advantage of the cheap rates and spent the holiday out of town.

A strawberry festival will be held at Fraserville next Thursday. The Salvation band of Peterborough will furnish music for the evening.

F. C. Cubitt will close his store Thursday afternoons during July and August.

Silver is reported to have been found near Brokenhead, Lake Winnipeg.

JOHN ARTHUR JOHNSON RING CHAMPION OF THE WORLD

JEFF. COULDN'T COME BACK FIGHT WAS ALL JOHNSON'S

Tame Fighting Marked the First Few Rounds---The Sixth Saw Jeffries Eye Closed and in the Fifteenth, the Favorite of Thousands Went to His Defeat.

Reno, Nevada, July 5.—Jack Johnson is still the world's heavyweight champion. He knocked out Jim Jeffries in the fifteenth round yesterday. The fight was one-sided from the start. The negro blocked the old champion's blows at every stage of the game and punished him severely in the last five rounds of the fighting.

At the beginning of the thirteenth round the experts at the ringside passed out the verdict that if Jeffries would simply stay and not fight he might stay the limit. As they came up for the fifteenth round, Johnson went at his man savagely. He sent Jeffries to the floor the first time with a rain of lefts and rights to the jaw, and Jeffries took the count of nine twice. Each time Jeffries fell outside the lower rope on the platform. As soon as he got up the second time and staggered for a foothold, Johnson sprang at him like a tiger, and with right and left swings to the jaw sent him through the lower ropes of the east side of the ring, where he lay until counted out.

"I am not a good fighter any longer. I could not come back, boys—I could not come back. Ask Johnson if he will give me his gloves."

As Jeffries hung through the ropes after the last knockdown a hundred of his friends rushed forward. "Please don't let the old man be knocked out. Stop it," they called.

Jeffries was not counted out. As the timekeeper's hand moved up and down, the towel was brought into the ring from Jeffries' corner. Whether counted out or not, it probably will be recorded as a knockout.

The fight by rounds was as follows:

Testing Each Other.

First Round.—Jeffries walking in and feinting. Both smiled and Jack gave ground. Johnson led a straight left and landed lightly on Jeffries' face. They were in a clinch, Johnson shoving Jeffries away. Jeffries walked in and hooked left to neck, and in clinch sent right to body. Johnson responded with a left, and they continued to stand breast to breast, trying for short inside blows. As they broke Jeffries sent a left to Johnson's neck, and the negro stepped in with a left, but missed. The gong rang when they were in a clinch. The fighting was tame, and as they turned to their corners, Jeffries tapped Jack on the shoulder and smiled.

Second Round.—Jeffries assumed his crouch, but missed first attempt. Jack forced, and Jeff stepped nimbly away. Jack sent a left to the face and then ripped in. They held together, and were willing to give each other any chance. Jeffries sent right to ribs, took left on face at close quarters. Jeffries crouched and waited for Johnson, but he was not willing. They came together without a blow, and Johnson tried his uppercut, but missed. Jeffries put his weight on Johnson and pushed him about. When they broke Johnson sent left to Jeffries' face, and tried uppercut, but missed again. There was a lot of wrestling and not much fighting. The gong rang without a good blow being struck.

Corbett Does Talking.

Third Round.—"Take it easy, Jeffries," said Corbett, as they walked to the centre. Jeffries sailed in and led for head, but missed. Johnson hooked stiff left to body and right to head, but neither blow was hard. They shoved and pushed each other about the ring, while Corbett kept up a continual flow of talk to Johnson. Jeffries hooked left to body. Jeffries stood breast to breast, and they whaled and shoved about. Johnson sent two lefts to face and tried right for chin, but missed latter. It was simply a wrestling bout thus far. The gong rang while they were in a clinch.

Fourth Round.—Jeff took his crouch position again and walked in. He missed and they came together in a lock. Johnson tried his right for chin, but missed, and they began an exchange of talk. Jeff put a left to the face and started the blood from Johnson's lip. The crowd yelled, "First blood for Jeffries!" but Johnson only smiled. As Jeffries walked in, Johnson shot a snappy left to his face, and they came to a clinch. Jeff sent left to Johnson's face and Jeff sent him to the ropes with three lefts to the body. Johnson lashed out with right, but Jeffries neatly ducked, and the round ended. Jeffries' round.

Jeffries Eye Closed.

Sixth Round.—Again Jeffries crouched. They stepped around each other, Johnson pounding in two stiff lefts to face. One of them cut Jeffries' cheek a bit. Again they lolled in each other's embrace, neither willing to take a chance. Jeffries rushed, but missed a left for the body and took a left on the chest in return. Johnson kept up a running flow of talk to Jeff when they came to a clinch, but Jeff calmly chewed gum and waded in. He missed a left and took left and right on head. Johnson shot left to Jeffries' face and closed Jeffries' right eye. Jack missed two rights. Jeffries' nose was bleeding when the gong rang. When Jeff took his seat his seconds got busy with his eye, but Jeff assured them that it was O.K., and that it only opened his face. Johnson's round.

Seventh Round.—Jeffries walked right in, but before he had a chance Jack led with right and left and missed. Jeffries' eye was closed and badly swollen; he rubbed it with his glove. He feinted a bit, tried to draw Jack on, but the negro declined. Jeffries stepped in with a left for body, but missed it, and took left on the head. Jeffries hooked left to head and Johnson laughed loudly. Johnson sent left to face twice at close range. Jeffries bulled his way into another clinch, but failed to land. He shot a left to face. Jack's lips bled. In close quarters. Jack sent his left to face twice, and Jeffries' lip bled. This round was faster.

Kidding Corbett.

Eighth Round.—"Come on Jeff!" said Johnson, as they faced each other. Jeff came on and got a left in face. He missed Johnson's body with a left and took two lefts to face. "Hello, Jimmy!" said Jack to Corbett, as he leaned on Jeff. Jeff shoved Johnson about with ease, and the gong found them locked in each other's embrace. "Come on, break!" said Jeff, as Johnson held his glove. Rickard did not touch them. Jeff missed twice with left and took left on face.

Ninth Round.—Jeffries stood up and walked into a left to the chest. "Make him fight!" yelled Corbett. "Never mind, just wait!" replied Johnson. Johnson walked in and tried for body. Jeffries got inside of it and put his head against Jack's chest and shoved the black fellow back to the ropes. Jeffries took it all calmly, and seemed to be awaiting an opportunity to land a good one. Jeffries walked into two left jabs on the face that did not damage. His wrist landed hard on the ribs, and Johnson did not appear to like it.

Tenth Round.—They came up slowly. Jack shot left to face, but Jeff brushed it away and responded with a left to body. Jack again missed a lightning right for jaw. Jeff put his shoulder against Johnson's body and shoved him back. At close range Johnson sent left uppercut to Jeff's face. Jeff got under a left lead and seemed to want to wear Jack out by bearing down his weight and shoving in. Jeff struck two lefts to face from a clinch and got one of the same kind. Jeff took two lefts on the face. When they broke he shot left to body as the gong rang. Jeffries appeared as fresh as when the gong rang for the first round.

Eleventh Round.—They walked up carefully. Jeff finally tried his left once to find it blocked. He took left on face three times, but smiled and talked to Jack. They broke away and Johnson sent stiff left uppercut to face and right to body. He kept Jeff bobbing his head to escape the right uppercut whenever they came together. In a clinch Jack sent two uppercuts to face and Jeffries appeared to tire. They shoved about, Jeff with his head on shoulder and Jack hooked left to nose, drawing blood. Jeffries appeared slow compared with Johnson. Just before the call of time Jeff sent left and right to body, but Jack was going away and was not hurt. It was decidedly Johnson's round.

Twelfth Round.—Jeffries walked forward waiting for a chance to get inside the negro's defence. Jack simply waited and then drew back or hooked left to face. "Thought you said you were going to have me wild," said Johnson to Corbett's taunts. Jeffries forced his way into close quarters, but got left on sore nose for his reward. Jeff was not worried and looked fresh.

Thirteenth Round.—Putting his right glove before his face Jeff walked into a clinch without a blow. When they broke Johnson sent a left to the body and a right uppercut to the chin. "Stick there, Jim," shouted Corbett. Jeffries stuck immediately until forced away. Then he took two lefts and a right uppercut to face. Holding him with right on the shoulder Johnson sent in three lefts to face in quick succession and then uppercut to face. Jeffries seemed tired and slow. He could not solve Johnson's defence and took all the blows that came his way. Jack swung left to face and then calmly clinched. Jeff continued to come in. The round was Johnson's. Jeff's eye was almost closed.

Jeffries All In.

Fourteenth Round.—Jeffries walked into a left to the ear. Jack tapped the big fellow on the face twice and blocked Jeffries' attempts at close fighting. Jeff took three straights to face and got in a left to the face. Jeff's lefts were blocked by Johnson before they could get within six inches of his face.

"How do you feel, Jim?" said Jack, as they stood clinched.

"How do you like them?" Jeffries was sober and made no response. He took three more lefts.

Fifteenth Round.—It was a clinch to start with. Following Jeffries' attempt to land on the face Jack forced the pace and sent Jeffries down with left and right to jaw. Jeffries got up but was sent down again for the count. The crowd yelled "Stop it," "Don't let him knock him out."

Jeffries was counted out as he hung over the ropes, going down three times. His seconds began climbing into the ring before the timekeeper could count ten.

Collars of Honor For Dogs.

In France the Society For the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals decorates dogs that have distinguished themselves by deeds of bravery with a tastefully designed "collar of honor." Among the animals decorated in this way one of the most celebrated is Bacchus, a large bulldog, whose specialty it is to stop runaway horses by jumping up and seizing them by the bridle. It is calculated that this intelligent animal has already saved the lives of eight persons, if not more. Pautland, a Great Dane, received a collar for saving his mistress from the attack of a footpad, and Turk, a splendid Newfoundland, has had similar honor for rescuing young children from drowning on several occasions.

Artificial Marble.

The Italians have devised a method of manufacturing artificial marble. Catania, the center of the industry, is overlooked by the great volcano Etna, and this mountain has furnished part of the material employed. Common white sandstone is cut into the desired shapes, and these are placed in an iron tank upon a heavy wire grating. Then the tank is filled with a molten mixture of volcanic asphalt and coal tar. This is kept boiling for thirty-six hours, when the stones are taken out, cooled, dried and polished. It is difficult, say the experts, to distinguish stones thus treated from genuine black marble, but the cost is much less.—Harper's Weekly.

Woman's World

A Baby Croesus, Grandson of the Late Thomas Walsh.

THE RICHEST BABY AND HIS MOTHER.

Once upon a time there was a little boy in Tipperary county, Ireland, a "broth of a boy," as the Irish say, who went barefooted about the green lanes, ate "praties" and drank buttermilk, learned to read and write and figure and by and by, when he was older, learned to handle carpenter's tools. Perhaps he dreamed dreams, too, dreams about making money and being a very rich man some day. Anyhow, when he was nineteen years old he came to America, which most people in foreign countries think a good place to make money in, and pretty soon he did begin to make a great deal of money. And that is why the baby in the picture is one of the richest babies in the United States. For the Irishman was Thomas F. Walsh, who died a short time ago, and Baby McLean, the fat morsel in the picture, is his only grandchild and will inherit all his money.

Wonderful things this baby will own some day—mines, out of which gold and silver are dug, far up in the mountains of the west; beautiful houses in Newport and Washington, and many stocks and bonds which, as the fathers of the little men and little women will tell them, are pieces of paper that are very useful when you want to buy some candy or an automobile or anything you happen to need. But the baby doesn't look as if he cared much about this fortune, does he? Warm milk and a rattle are much more interesting to him than automobiles and stocks and bonds. You see, he is only a few months old, and he hasn't had time to learn very much yet.

Think of the things this baby can do when he grows up with all his money. And yet perhaps he won't do half the exciting things his grandfather did when he was a poor young fellow in Colorado. Have any of you children ever read about the Leadville rush many years ago, when hundreds and hundreds of men flocked to Leadville, Colo., to hunt for the rich ore in the ground, many of them very fierce men, indeed, who carried guns and thought nothing of shooting anybody who happened to want the same mine they wanted? Grandfather Walsh, who did not dream then of being a grandfather, was all through those exciting times. First he built houses, and then he ran a hotel, and by and by he, too, hunted for gold and found it.

The mother of this baby, whose name was Evalyn Walsh, decided when she became engaged to Edward McLean that she didn't want a great big wedding, with fine clothes and bridesmaids and all that fuss, so she and Mr. McLean just ran away and got married. Grandfather McLean has a great deal of money, too, which will belong to Baby McLean some day, so that altogether he is a real little Croesus. Will he be a selfish Croesus—love the money for itself alone and hug it to himself and keep trying to get more and more? No; we'll hope better things for him. He doesn't look like that kind of baby. There is a sort of generous curve about his fat cheeks which seems to indicate that he'd just as soon give up his rattle to any baby that cried for it as not. The baby's grandfather was very generous, it is said, and used to feed ever so many poor miners who had put all the money they had into their claims, as miners call the places they select to dig for ore.

One thing the baby probably wouldn't want to give away, and that is the splendid golden cradle which was a present from King Leopold of Belgium, who was his grandfather's partner in some mining ventures. It is a gorgeous cradle, and yet, after all, do you suppose he sleeps any more sweetly in it than the baby brothers and sisters of the little ones in their cradles of wood or wicker? No, not a bit.

Smart Footwear.

With so many light gowns for morning and afternoon wear the problem of shoes is sure to confront us.

However, it is easily solved when we hear that white footwear is really the most desirable and comfortable for all around use during the summer.

For an expensive white shoe buckskin, of course, leads; but, putting the matter of price away, canvas shoes clean better and keep their really white tone far longer. White canvas shoes certainly are economical and satisfying and if well fitting cannot make one's foot appear any larger than a shoe of any other style or color.

For dress shoes of dark color the tan, gray or dark blue ooze pumps or ties are most correct, and the stockings worn should match in color, but be plain and sheer of weave.

HIBERNATING ANIMALS.

The Lethargy of Winter and the Awakening In Spring.

The sleep of hibernation is a very different matter from the sleep of repose. If it be complete, respiration can no longer be detected. A torpid bat when disturbed will heave a sigh or two and, being left alone, again to all appearances cease to breathe.

Submerged in water of a temperature slightly higher than his own, the hedgehog not only continues to live, but appears to suffer neither inconvenience nor harm. Inclosed in an air-tight receptable, his atmosphere undergoes a change so slight that it affects him slightly, if at all.

But circulation does not cease. As respiration diminishes the irritability of the muscles of the heart increases, and thus without the stimulation of oxygen, although much more slowly, the heart continues to beat. In the absence of the fresh air drawn into the lungs in times of activity, uncleansed and unreinvigorated and venous blood passes on to fill the whole system of circulation.

A profound lethargy ensues, distinguishable from death only by the slight beating of the heart. The waste is very small. The fat accumulated during the plenty of summer and autumn supplies all expenditure until the coming of spring, when earlier or later the hibernating animal, having no capital in reserve, begins to suffer the pangs of hunger. In response to the demand respiration very slowly increases. His oxidized blood flows more quickly, and his energy returns.

Then the bat flies forth once more from the hollow tree in the wood to find the warm dusk teeming with insect life, and the hedgehog comes, it may be, from the cavity under the gnarled roots below to find beetles, worms and slugs once more among the spring grass.

Hibernation has saved both from death by starvation, but if their nooks had not been snug and wisely chosen they would not have been preserved from death by frost.

The hiding place also must be secret and free from intrusion, for the hibernating animal cannot bear to be suddenly roused. Even the little dormouse, which comes out at intervals to feed, when in deep sleep must be carried indoors to the warmer temperature of a room or revived by the heat of the hand passing through the nest. He then wakes refreshed and full of activity, but he does not survive too hasty an awakening.

Of Fighting Stock.

It is fifty-eight years ago since Admiral Sir Edward Seymour, who, having attained his seventieth birthday, is compulsorily retired from the active list of the royal navy, joined as a midshipman at the age of twelve. He comes of a fighting family, for his grandfather was created a baronet for many gallant actions during the great war with France. It was one of his uncles too, Sir Michael Seymour, who commanded the Fleet in the Chinese waters at the outbreak of the second China war in 1856, in which war Sir Edward, as a midshipman, served with distinction. He was badly wounded in 1870 while rescuing an English vessel from pirates in the Congo River, and in 1860, as a mate in China, he earned the Civil medal of the Royal Humane Society for his gallant effort to save the life of a marine who had fallen overboard.

Pit Boy to Sheriff.

The sheriff of Nottingham, Councillor Thomas Ward, who was recently presented by the members of the Nottingham Board of Guardians with an illuminated address, has had a most romantic career. Mr. Ward, who is fifty-two years of age, was born of humble parents, his father being a framework knitter, and was sent to Nottingham Workhouse School. For some time he worked in a Nottingham coal-pit, and when eighteen, owing to a strike at the colliery, he obtained a Government free passage to Australia, where he worked in the goldfields. Returning to Nottingham about thirteen months later, in 1877, he secured a position as a porter in a yeast factory, and by his industry and devotion to duty he became salesman, then partner, and eventually owner of the business and factory.

The Blue of Sapphires.

Star sapphires are generally of a grayish blue tint, and the star is exhibited in its greatest perfection when looked at by the light of the sun or a candle. The sapphire is found of all tints and shades of blue, but the color which approximates to the shade formerly called "bleu do roi" is the most valuable. A really fine sapphire should appear blue by artificial light as well as by day. This stone is found in crystals generally of much larger size than the ruby. The name sapphire is perhaps the only one which runs through all languages with very slight alteration—the Hebrew name sapphir, the Chalda sapirinon, the Greek zaffiros, the Latin sapphirus, etc.

They Saw Things.

A remarkable development occurred in connection with the death of William Henry Hulsmann, a dentist, of Forestfach, near Swansea, Eng., who was stated at an inquest to have died from a morphia and atropine injection. The funeral was arranged, but was postponed on account of alleged evidences of life. The body, which had been in the coffin, was stated to have changed color, the face and lips gardually becoming pink. Doctors were called in and after a thorough test certified the man quite dead, attributing the supposed change in color to imagination.

Mount Etna.

Etna, the "burning mountain," is the mightiest volcano in Europe. It is 10,800 feet high. If you wished to walk round its base you would have to walk ninely miles. It slopes steadily on all sides up to the highest crater, which is nearly a mile broad.

The Rest Cure.

"Why do you make that patient wait three hours every day in your ante-room?"

"He needs rest," explained the doctor, "and that is the only way I can compel him to take it."

Five inches of hail fell in Lewisvide, Alberta, and did serious damage to the crops.

GOSSIP FROM CAVANVILLE

Special to the Review.

Cavanville, July 5.—Mr. Geo. Foster has purchased a water privilege consisting of a flowing spring, from Archie Kennedy, his nearest neighbor. He is having it piped into his house and outbuildings. It will take about 1,500 feet of pipe to cover the ground.

The weather has been delightfully warm this last two or three weeks—warm enough, in fact, to make one's nose and ears snap, caused by last winter's frost beginning to eke out. It has also been warm enough to cause the farmers to wear a smile of no mean proportions, which, sad to relate, is beginning to fade away on account of the continued dry spell. The crops are looking fine and the farmers are busy harvesting their crop of alfalfa.

Mrs. Harry Staples left for Winnipeg last Tuesday, where she intends visiting various other places throughout the west before her return home.

A very enjoyable excursion was held from Cavanville to Idyl Wyld on Tuesday last. It was held under the auspices of the Methodist Sunday school. About 125 people took it in, and expressed themselves as delighted with the sail.

FROM THE SUNNY SOUTH

Miss Ida Sharpe, of California, was visiting at the home of her uncle, Mr. David Sharpe, for a few days last week, after an absence of fifteen years. Miss Sharpe, who is a trained nurse, is superintendent of one of the large hospitals over there. After leaving here she will visit her mother and sister, who reside in Napanee.

A WEEK TOO SOON.

A rather disappointing incident occurred in connection with the Salvation Army band, of Peterborough, which is billed to play at the garden party next Wednesday night. They came out last Wednesday night with that intention, and, as one of the men expressed it, they were "one blooming week too soon." However, they took the matter good naturedly, and lined up at the corner and gave the villagers a few selections, which were thoroughly appreciated. "They are certainly a fine corps of bandsmen," [illegible]

Mr. Chas. McNeil, ex-warden of Durham, is engaged in building a new barn. West Fry has the contract for the job.

WEDDING.

A quiet wedding was solemnized at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Will Shields when the daughter of Mr. Robt. Sutcliffe, who has been making her home with William Shields, was united in marriage to Richard Graham, son of Wm. S. Graham, Mount pleasant. The Rev. Mr. Clarry, of Cavanville, officiated. The bride and groom left on the five o'clock train, via C.P.R., for Toronto.

Mr. Glen Sisson is home from Ottawa, visiting his parents, Mr. and Mrs. George Sisson, of Cavanville. He leaves for Ottawa next week.

Floral services were held in St. John's church, Ida, on Sunday. A large crowd was present. The Ven. Archdeacon Allen conducted the services.

WORK! WORK! WORK!

Road work is the order of the day. This is the one time of the year when the farmer has the supreme satisfaction of making it interesting for the owners of automobiles, who travel the country road. The farmers are busy throwing up entrenchments of stones and dirt, sometimes called gravel, whereupon the unwary automobilist comes along, and unless he is fortunate enough to see these earthworks and slacken his speed he runs a great danger of breaking something. One unfortunate victim of the above road was Mr. Robt. Leary, of Peterborough, who broke his steering apparatus and had to be towed back to town.

An excursion which should prove a success, will be held from Bethany to Orillia on Civic Holiday, July 3rd. It is being held under the auspices of the combined churches, and will last for two days.

Miss Elva Elliott left for Winnipeg on Tuesday last. From there she will proceed on to Calgary. Miss Elliott expects to be away about two months.

Mr. Herb Biglow has completed his new house, which is an up-to-date one in every respect.

SPORTING NEWS

"THERE'LL BE ASHES AND SACKCLOTH IN LOS ANGELES"

Said Resident of Los Angeles and Personal Friend of Jeffries to Review Last Night—Jeff's Cafe Would be About as Lively as a Morgue When the News Was Broken

"There'll be ashes and sackcloth in Los Angeles to-night," said Mr. Charley Crowe, of that city, to the Review last night.

Mr. Crowe, who is here on a visit to his brother, Mr. Joseph Crowe, knows Jeff personally and says the feeling in the exchampion's home city was naturally very strongly anti-Johnson. And what's more many substantial men in the coast city backed their opinions by very heavy wagers.

Jeffries and Jack Keefer keep the "Jeffries Cafe" on Spring street and Mr. Crowe ventured the opinion that it would be a sombre spot when word was received of the defeat by the negro of the pride and hope of Los Angeles.

Mr. Crowe states that Jeffries says the hardest blow he ever received was given him by Fitzsimmons—the punch that broke Fitz's hand.

SPORTING COMMENT

Johnson wins, in the fifteenth, flashed over the wires last evening, and in three minutes later the Review extra edition told the news to the excited crowds on the street.

It was quick work and the newsboys were kept working overtime, meeting the demands of supporters of both the negro and Jeffries.

The big press turned out in the neighborhood of eleven hundred extras and the few left over will be kept by the sporting editor for reference in the future, when forgetful ones before many moons are past will ring up with the query, "Can you please tell me where Jack Johnson and Jim Jeffries fought, who won and in how many rounds?"

The big fight is over and James J. Jeffries was not able to come back; so it will be said. But perhaps Jeffries was the same fighter as when he put Bob Fitzsimmons away, and at that the negro was the better man.

It is impossible to get away from the fact that Jack Johnson is a fighter of the first water and in his present condition is a real champion.

But perhaps not one in a hundred have stopped to consider what the result of that fight at Reno means. It may be that it is so much the better.

But that won't stop results being brought about. The question is, does the end justify the spending of so many thousands of dollars, for if it were possible to figure up the total expenditure of money, the amount would make the C.P.R. dividends look like receipts at a local city league game.

"Hard luck," said a purchaser of a Review extra, who had driven in from the country to learn the result, on being told that Jeffries had entered the list of has beens. While his sympathy in all probability was with the white man, it wasn't a case of hard luck. Johnson won on his merits.

What will the win mean to the champion? The thousands of dollars that passed to him at the end of that fifteenth round can make him independent for life, or it can bring about his downfall. His previous record is not in accordance with the former.

It would have been the event of a life time to be in Reno last night, and yet when the question was put to a local man, he answwered that he much preferred to be in his own little burg. He wasn't far out, either.

Yesterday morning a young sport from Toronto who was visiting in the city received the tip from a friend at Reno to back Jeffries to the limit as he was sure to win. He did—not.

Y.M.C.A. NOTES

To-night at the Oval the last two events in the "Stratton Cup" contest will be the running hop, step and jump, and the one mile run. Besides these events several back events will be run off so if you have any back events be sure and make it a point to get them run off to-night, as this contest closes positively on Thursday, July 7th. There is sure to be a big shake-up in the standing of the men in this contest after to-night's work. The first five men and scores follow: Hall, 680 1-2; Willis, 505; Flowers, 482; Smith, 406 1-2; Sanderson, 377 1-2.

How is it you have not been over to the river for a swim with the "Early Risers"? The water is fine, and, say, if you come over and give it a trial you will not need an invitation to come back for more. This is sure as the water is wet, so come on in, it's fine.

Everything is now ready for the Boys' Camp, and there is a good crowd of boys going. If you are thinking of going, better get your name in before Wednesday evening, or you are likely to be disappointed. The old "Shute the Shutes" will be in operation again, and you know what that means, so get in on this camp if you want to have a time.

LAWN BOWLING

The Brookside Bowling Club will be represented at the tournament at Niagara, which begins Monday, July 11, by a rink composed of Messrs. R. Kerr, R. Wadell, W. E. Talbot and B. Laster.

A German inventor has designed an electro-magnet drill, two magnets holding it [illegible]

JOHNSON NOT SHOT

A report was circulated throughout the city to-day that Jack Johnson had been shot at Reno last night. There is nothing in the report, however, although there is a possibility that he was half shot.

The feeling last evening of many who were interested in the fight, was that the champion would be a lucky man if he did not run up against a pistol or a rope before he shook the dust of the scene of his victory.

WOULD LIKE TO ASSIST ELLIS

Englishman Applies for Position of Assistant Hangman

In the batch of letters which was received in Crown Attorney Baird's office at the City Hall on Saturday was an epistle containing an extraordinary request from a man applying for the position of assistant hangman. The letter is as follows:—

"Trusting you will kindly pardon me for writing to you, but I wish to ask you if there is any possible chance for securing the position of assistant executioner, to assist Mr. Ellis in his duties.

"I have been put up twice in England for the position as assistant hangman, and my name is still on the waiting list there, but as I have come out to Canada to settle, I would be prepared to give up the post in England, if there was any chance of getting a similar position here.

"I am willing to carry out anything that the law requires in connection with the position. I am an Englishman, 34 years old, strong and possessing all kinds of nerve, all of which are absolutely necessary for the position. Thanking you very kindly in advance for any efforts put forth on my behalf."—The Globe.

TANKS SHOULD BE INSPECTED

Result of Inquest Into The Herald Building Disaster—Can Hold no One Responsible.

Montreal, July 6.—The following verdict was reached yesterday by the coroner's jury chosen to judge the case of the thirty-two victims of The Herald fire and its attending casualties.

"We find that the deceased (thirty-two victims) in The Herald disaster on June 13 came to their death as the result of the collapse of The Herald Building. We consider that no one can be held responsible, but we suggest that a bylaw be passed calling for the inspection of these water tanks every few months."

All the evidence went to show that everything had been done to avoid such accidents, and the city inspector said that he would have given the permit to erect the tank had he been asked for one. This has been the exact verdict reached in two previous cases where several people were killed by falling tanks. The friends of Mr. Brierly are well satisfied at the outcome, as it will prevent those interesting lawyers from pouncing down upon the proprietor of The Herald with all kinds of accusations, but the question remains, where will this tank business end?

Some of the most important testimony of the inquest was that of W. J. Francis, civil engineer, of Toronto University, with membership in the Canadian and American societies of civil engineers. He was of the opinion that faulty floor construction was responsible for the disaster.

Educated in Upper Canada College, Toronto, he afterwards went over to England and became a soldier. He served as a volunteer during the Fenian raids in Canada in 1866. He joined the 21st Hussars in 1869, exchanged to 12th Royal Lancers 1876, passed on to 17th Lancers in 1881, and became A.D.C. to the Lieutenant-Governor of the Northwest Provinces of India. He served during the South African war, and was mentioned in despatches. From 1903 to 1907 he acted as director of transports and remounts.

RACIAL DISTURBANCES BREAK OUT IN AMERICAN CITIES

Almost Every Place With a Negro Population of Any Size is Scene of Fatal Strife on Monday Night, After News of Result at Reno is Received.

New York, July 6.—According to despatches, serious race riots broke out Monday night in many places, due to the prize fight result.

At Ualdia, Ga., three negroes are reported to have been killed; Omaha, Neb., one killed and many injured and arrested; Little Rock, Ark., two killed; Mounds, Ill., two negro policemen killed by colored rioters; Roanoke, Va., six negroes were critically beaten; many whites arrested and saloons closed; one white shot; Tallulah, La., a negro killed conductor who demanded railroad fare; Pittsburg, Pa., scores of race riots in "Black Belt." Thousands involved. Two policemen seriously hurt. One hundred arrests made; Philadelphia, whites pursued negroes along streets, throwing bricks. Several injured. Negro paraders in Germantown dispersed by whites; Wilmington, Del., negroes attacked white man and whites attempted a lynching bee; St. Louis, Mo., riots in negro quarters; Macon, Ga., many slightly injured; Atlanta, Ga., negro ran amuck with knife, and mob tried to kill him; Cincinnati, O., negroes chased off streets for insulting remarks; Baltimore, Md., eighty arrests made. Several negroes badly cut up.

At Washington, D.C., two whites were perhaps fatally stabbed by negroes, two hospitals crowded with injured, and 236 arrests made. Riots continued all night. Clarksburg, W.V., angered by insolence of negroes, 1,000 whites drove negroes off the streets, using violence. One negro was led about the streets with a rope around his neck until saved by the police. Saloons are closed and state troops asked for. Norfolk, Va., sailors from battleships attacked all negroes on the streets. Kansas City, Mo., negroes were driven off the street cars. New York, one negro was beaten to death and scores injured in half a hundred race riots. Jacksonville, Fla., city jail is filled with rioters, the saloons all closed, and at least a dozen victims in hospitals. Columbus, O., rioting marked a parade through the streets organized by hilarious negroes; the trouble was caused chiefly by drunken whites. New Orleans, La., James Lee and Emile Thomson, two negroes, were shot and seriously wounded by two unknown white men, who approached them with the declaration "Johnson won, but we will get even with all negroes." Chattanooga, Tenn., three white militiamen from Mississippi, charged with attempting to incite a riot with negroes were turned over to an officer of their regiment. Schenectady, N.Y., a white man propelling a wheelbarrow containing a colored man through the downtown streets precipitated a riot. It was in payment of a bet as to the result of the fight. Feeling ran high for several hours and ten negroes were badly handled.

Big Fire In Lumber Yards.

Arnprior, July 6.—One of the most disastrous conflagrations in the history of Eastern Canada, outside of the City of Ottawa, occurred at Gillies Bros.' lumber yards at Braeside Monday night. A rough estimate is $100,000. In the yard there was about 60,000,000 feet of lumber, and this was completely destroyed.

Fatalities of the fourth in the United States were 28 as against 44 last year.

Governor Jared Y. Sanders has been elected U. S. Senator from Louisiana.

A $300,000 fire wiped out 60 buildings in Benton, N.J., yesterday, making 30 families homeless.

R. G. Herrguth fell from a trapeze while making a balloon ascent at Bashnell, Ill., and was killed.

A negro, who, brandishing a knife, attempted to criminally assault a young white woman, was hung by a posse.

Only one person was killed in the collapse of a bridge at Utica, Ill., Monday, though three hundred were thrown into the water.

DE LESSEP BIG "INJUN" NOW

Montreal, July 6.—Amid the welcoming whoops of Caughnawaga braves, Count Jacques de Lesseps was yesterday morning made a full fledged member of the Mohawk tribe of Indians, with all the ancient rites of the redmen. With the traditional feather and the pipe, emblematic of peace and good-fellowship, Great Chief Sakohentineha (Michael Mantour), received the scion of the ancient nobility of France into the tribe, and bestowed on him a new name, Tehanerahontsowaner, which, being interpreted into the white man's tongue, means "The man with the great wings."

Count de Lesseps will not admit that he is going to fly from Montreal to Toronto. He will return to France directly after the Toronto meet.

APOLOGIZED TO MR. TAYLOR

Woodstock, July 6.—The promised departmental investigation into the charges preferred in an article published in a recent issue of The Sentinel-Review against an officer of the Canadian immigration department, for using insulting language and ordering W. J. Taylor, the well-known newspaper and magazine publisher of this city, off the train at Windsor, was held at The Sentinel-Review office, was conducted by Mr. H. G. Herbert, traveling inspector of the immigration department, the officer against whom the charges were laid being also present.

The offending official acknowledged that he had made a mistake in addressing Mr. Taylor in the way he did, and stated that he was under the impression that he was addressing another man with whom he had an altercation a few minutes before. He tendered a verbal and written apology to Mr. Taylor.

MAY PROHIBIT FIGHT PICTURES

Baltimore, Md., July 6.—Backed by the authority of the board of police commissioners, Marshal Farman will request Mayor Mahool to prohibit the proposed exhibition in Baltimore of the moving pictures of the Jeffries-Johnson fight. The mayor says that, with formal complaint before him, he will stop the pictures.

Action by the police commissioners was taken yesterday morning, following the submission by Marshal Farman of reports showing the widespread rioting all over the country, including Baltimore, during Monday night, and the frequent clashes between whites and blacks.

Marshal Farnam said: "I am strongly opposed to having moving pictures of the Jeffries-Johnson fight shown in Baltimore. We have a large colored population here, and the exhibition of the pictures might cause racial troubles."

BAPTISTS AT AVELINA, ITALY, HAVE A NARROW ESCAPE

Infuriated Peasants Commit Serious Attack on Missionaries Who Have to be Guarded by Soldiers—Will be no Further Affairs of the Kind.

Rome, July 6.—The U. S. Ambassador, John G. Leishman, has brought to the attention of the Premier and the Foreign Office the situation arising from recent attacks made upon Baptist missionaries in the Province of Avellino.

James P. Stuart of St. Louis, representative of the American Board of Baptist Missions in Italy, had a long conference with Ambassador Leishman yesterday, and he reported details of the occurrence.

Arriving at the outskirts of the village, near the town of Avellino, Mr. Stuart, accompanied by three other missionaries, was met by the chief of police, several constables and a dozen soldiers. A howling mob of natives quickly surrounded the carriage.

So demonstrative did they become that it was only with difficulty they could be restrained by force from doing the missionaries injury. On all sides arose the cry of "Down with the Baptists!" and a shower of stones fell about the carriage. Mr. Stuart was hit on the chest, the arm and the leg, while the chief of police was slightly wounded.

The soldiers, with fixed bayonets, formed a circle around the Americans and protected them to the entrance of the Baptist church. The mob, however, stoned the church from 4 to 10 o'clock at night, breaking all the windows, but doing no serious damage. Other soldiers were called to the scene, and, according to Mr. Stuart, prevented a massacre by the infuriated Catholics, who now numbered several thousand.

The besieged missionaries were obliged to remain in the church the whole night. Eventually Mr. Stuart succeeded in sending a telegram to the American Ambassador at Rome. The following day a detail of 400 soldiers were sent to the village, and the missionaries were released from their dangerous position.

Both Premier Luzzatti and the Foreign Minister, Marquis di San Guiliano, have given assurances that measures will be taken immediately to prevent such disturbances in the future and also that an investigation of the entire matter will be made.

WILL BEGIN ON FRIDAY

Aviation Meeting in Toronto Starts a Day Later.

Toronto, July 6.—Owing to the unavoidable delay in securing the transportation of the unwieldly airships from Montreal, it has been found necessary to postpone the opening of the great international aviation meet at Toronto, from Thursday to Friday next.

The various machines, including the three Bleriot monoplanes belonging to Comte de Lesseps and the five Wright biplanes, were to have been shipped from Montreal this morning, but it was found impossible to have them prepared for shipment and to secure the large cars necessary for their transport, in time to have them ready for a flight on Thursday afternoon. The corps of aviators will reach here to-morrow morning and will go over the site selected on the Trethewey farm, near Weston.

All arrangements were practically completed yesterday for the handling of the crowds that are expected to witness the flights. A large staff of men were busily engaged in the erection of the grand stand, the fencing of the field and the construction of a restaurant on the grounds. The stands will be a new variety, there being three tiers of platforms, one above and behind the other. Each platform wil be 600 feet long, with three rows of seats, and the total capacity will be 6,000.

THE DEAD NUMBER TWENTY-ONE

Middleton, Ohio, July 6.—Three victims of the wreck of the Big Four New York flyer here Monday died from their injuries during the night, bringing the total number of dead up to 21. Reports from the hospitals in Dayton and Hamilton, where many of the 37 injured were taken, indicate that a number of these will die soon. Some of them are frightfully injured.

Officials are now engaged in trying to place the responsibility for the wreck. It is known that a misunderstanding of orders caused the catastrophe, but which train crew was at fault has not yet been learned.

It is almost certain that in addition to the coroner's inquest an investigation of the disaster will be made by the Railroad Commission.

SKULL BROKEN STUCK TO POST

Buffalo, July 6.—By sheer force of will power, George S. Whitney, 50, an American express messenger, running between Cleveland and Buffalo, on the Lake Shore road, stuck to his post Monday night after his skull had been fractured in two places by the heavy door of the car closing on it as the train pulled out of Dunkirk, N.Y. The car contained a valuable consignment of express matter, including $10,000 in currency, consigned to Buffalo, and this Whitney appeared to worry over more than his injury.

Monk on the Naval Policy.

Quebec, July 6.—It is announced that F. D. Monk will hold a grand meeting on Sunday next at Beauport, near Quebec, where he will speak on the naval policy of the Canadian Government.

Y.M.C.A. Campaign In Belleville.

Belleville, July 6.—A ten days' campaign to raise $40,000 for a new Y. M. C. A. building was commenced here yesterday. The first day netted about $15,000 towards the project.

The City Council has agreed to issue $30,000 debentures for the building of a new public school.

SIR WILFRID HAS STARTED ON TOUR

He Will Not Reach Winnipeg Until After Election.

Ottawa, July 6.—The capital promises to be a quiet place politically during the next two months. The last Cabinet meeting before the departure of Sir Wilfrid Laurier on his two months' tour of the west has been held, and Hon. Charles Murphy, and the Printing Bureau irregularities, will have the centre of the stage during the dog days of summer.

The vanguard of the Premier's party started for the West at noon to-day, when the car, carrying the press representatives, left for Port Arthur, where the first meeting will be held on Saturday night. Sir Wilfrid, accompanied by L. M. MacDonald, M.P., also left at noon, and will be joined at North Bay by Hon. Geo. Graham, and Fred Pardee, chief Liberal whip. Mr. Graham left for Brockville last night, and will proceed to Toronto to-day.

The Winnipeg meeting will be held on Tuesday next, the day after the Manitoba elections, and on Thursday, July 14, the Premier will attend the formal opening of the St. Andrew's locks on the Red River. For this occasion the Laurier party will be joined by Hon. Wm. Pugsley, Minister of Public Works, who goes west early next week.

WILL COST GALT ONLY $25,000

Galt, July 6.—The contracts for the Hydro-Electric distributing station have been let to the Packard Electric Co. and the Canadian General Electric Co. The commission will bring the line in from the transforming station at Hespeler. The incandescent system for street lighting, adopted, with the amount paid for poles and wires to the local electric company, will make the total cost to Galt for installing a service under Hydro-Electric auspices only $25,000.

The town declined to purchase the entire plant of the existing company, and thus saved a large amount which other municipalites have spent in buying out the private equipment, most of which is found unavailable.

AS BAD AS A PRIZE FIGHT

Boston, July 6.—Denouncing college football as a combination of pure brutality and pugilism, David Starr Jordan, president of Leland Stanford University, led in the discussion that followed the report made yesterday by the committee on moral education in public schools to the National Education Association in convention here.

The game, he said, arouses the same love of the sordid that focussed the interest of the country in "a ring away out in far Nevada, where a black man and a white man were pounding each other yesterday."

President Jordan favored the substitution of the English game of Rugby.

Some Trouble In Washington.

Washington, July 6.—Moving pictures of the Jeffries-Johnson fight may be barred from the District of Columbia. Police Chief Sylvester has announced that he will do his utmost to prevent the films being shown here. He fears a repetition of the race riots which took place on the streets Monday when it became known that the negro had won.

The three commissioners who are the heads of the local Government in the district have the police chief's recommendation under consideration, and expect to announce a decision to-day.

Body Taken From Niagara.

Niagara Falls, Ont., July 6.—Yesterday the body of an unknown man, apparently in good circumstances, was taken from the river at the Maid of the Mist landing. The body was fully clothed, the garments bearing the name of a Buffalo maker. It had evidently been in the water over a week, as it was in a bad state of decomposition.

RIGHTS IN LABRADOR

But Treaty Gives U.S. no Newfoundland Fishing Privileges.

London, July 6.—Speaking before The Hague Fisheries Tribunal, Sir James S. Winter, on behalf of Newfoundland, endeavored to show the hollowness of ex-Senator Turner's argument for the United States that the legislation on the Newfoundland fisheries favored Newfoundland fishermen at the expense of Americans. With regard to the herring fishery regulations, counsel observed they could not affect American fishermen, because this kind of fishing is carried out on bays, harbors and creeks of territorial waters, which Americans are not allowed to enter by the treaty of 1818. In addition, he said, Newfoundland is not opposed to a modification of any regulations which might be deemed harsh towards Americans.

He argued that Newfoundland did not infringe on the treaty of 1818 by forbidding Americans in 1905 and 1906 to buy herring in Newfoundland as bait for codfishing, and from engaging the inhabitants of Newfoundland to catch herring there. These regulations are commercial in character, he said, and with regard to the other regulations, prohibiting the use of certain nets, etc., even if American criticism justified it, which the speaker denied, that is no proof that the United States had the right to veto Newfoundland fisheries legislation which affected vital interests, and, he said, Newfoundland intended to prevent Americans from abusing their privilege by destroying the fisheries.

He then showed that the treaty of 1818 granted Americans the right to fish only in the bays, harbors and creeks of Labrador, and not those of Newfoundland.

UNEXPECTED SOCIALIST CANDIDATES

Winnipeg, July 6.—Nominations passed off quietly in Manitoba, except that three unexpected Socialist candidates put in an appearance in Centre, West and North Winnipeg. In North Winnipeg it is expected that the foreign vote will prove an important factor for the Socialist. In Assiniboia, Aime Bernard, Conservative, R. A. Bonner and John Colvin contest the seat. The peculiarity in this is that although Colvin is contesting the seat on the same grounds that Prof. Osborne is opposing the Premier, as a straight Liberal and temperance candidate, until now the Liberal press has ignored his candidature. In this constituency Bonner declared that Bernard's nomination was irregular, and will protest it.

The Socialist candidates are: Edmund Fletcher in North, Wm. Cummings in Centre, and George Armstrong in West Winnipeg. In Gimli two Liberals, W. H. Pauson and John Folumbson, have been in active canvass, and up to midnight no positive information of their election had been received. Premier Roblin and Prof. Osborne opened a series of joint meetings in Dufferin, and as there is no love lost between them, there will probably be surprises. The Telegram prints an affidavit, accusing Horace Chevrier, Liberal, who is already charged with trying to sell a judgeship, with bribing a voter in Carillon with $5.

MIRACULOUSLY ESCAPED DEATH

Brockville, July 6.—A stonemason named Hugh Walker, passing through the Grand Trunk yards had a miraculous escape from being killed, when he was struck by a light engine and hurled to one side of the tracks. He was badly cut and bruised, but will recover.

A party of 92 girls arrived here yesterday from Scotland, to the Fairknowe Orphan Homes. They range in age from 7 to 21 years, and every one has been placed.

A Fine New Ship.

Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., July 6.—The splendid new freight carrier Thomas J. Drummond, the latest addition to the Algoma Central and Hudson Bay Steamship Co.'s fleet, arrived at the docks of the Lake Superior Corporation yesterday with a cargo of pig-iron from Glasgow from the Algoma Steel Co. The event was marked by a reception and luncheon to Mayor Simpson and the Town Council. She is 256 feet long, 43 feet 10 inches beam, with a capacity of 3,400 tons, and is equipped with the latest appliances in marine architecture for handling cargo and comfort of the crew.

Thrown Down Stairs.

Windsor, July 6.—The condition of Wm. B. Malloy in Hotel Dieu Hospital remains unchanged. Malloy was thrown down a flight of stairs from the second storey of the Iroquois Hotel building late Monday night as the result of a row with a stranger. He may die. His skull is fractured, his collar bone is broken, and two ribs are fractured. The men mixed up in the deal made their escape.

Zeppelin Up Against It.

Berlin, July 6.—Count Zeppelin's prestige has suffered considerably by the wrecking of the Deutschland, the big passenger airship, on the tree tops of a forest last week, and it will be hard for him to maintain that the rigid type of airship is the best. He is still tremendously popular with the great mass of the people.

THE NEGRO PROBLEM

The Southerners say we do not understand the negro and if we lived down south we would do as they do and shoot, kill, hang or burn them, as insane fancy directs. We beg to differ with our white skinned Southerners. A dog will respond to a kindly action. So will a negro. They have been abused, called "niggers," ordered about and kept down. THE SOUTHERNER IS REAPING HIS REWARD. The negro is not naturally vicious. No race with the melody in him that a colored man has, can be black of mind and body, too. There are miserable white men, and miserable negroes, and if the colored men of the South were treated kindly they certainly would respond by kind actions toward their benefactors. It is said that the United States is the land of the free, but THOSE WHO KILL NEGROES JUST BECAUSE JOHNSON WHIPPED JEFFRIES AT RENO ON JULY 4TH, SHOW THE SMALLNESS OF THEIR NATURE IN A WAY THAT LEAVES A DOUBT AS TO WHETHER THEY SHOULD NOT BE DANGLING AT THE END OF A ROPE INSTEAD OF THE DESCENDANTS OF HAM. THEIR ONCE WHITE SLAVES.

LACK OF DISCRETION

In Preston on Sunday some of the members and officers of the Lord's Day Alliance stopped a sprinkling cart, that had been called out to lay the dust for a procession of the Independent Order of Oddfellows. This is nonsense. It is small calibre actions like this that bring ridicule and contempt upon an organization that is framed and intended for better things. ONE MAN AND A NAG AND A CART ALLAYING THE DEEP DUST THAT A HUNDRED MEN MIGHT WALK IN COMFORT AND CLEAN FOOTWEAR, AND THE ONE MAN STOPPED THAT THE HUNDRED SHOULD SUFFER INCONVENIENCE. Is this the spirit of Christ, who came to make the world a brighter, happier place? Men and women who think kindly of the Lord's Day Alliance, will not agree with this form of brief authority shown by the branch officers in Preston on this occasion. Sunday should be the most care free and happiest day of the seven. Lorenzo Losso well says:

"Not all the Lord's annointed
Are chosen or appointed.

IT IS THE PARLOR

Thirty divorce cases were tried in one day in the United States Supreme Court, and in granting the divorces the judge said that the women were as "pure as wheat," and the men "a worthless lot." This is foolish talk. This judge must have been a single man. It always takes two to fight, and a nagging woman, though she be as pure as the lily, is enough to drive a man to drink, or to some other face whose heart seems to know him better, and responds more kindly to his own. Then there is the woman who insists on having the parlor kept in faultless garb. Not a blind drawn up to let in the light. The carpets will fade. Not a sofa or a chair in is to be used unless on special occasions. The children must not intrude. Her husband must not throw down his papers in it. He must not smoke in it. IT IS THE PARLOR. "There is a place for everything," she says, and she puts everything in its place. She scolds him and whips the children if they tear their clothes or get their hands and face dirty. She may be pure all right, but she would be happier, he would be happier, and the children would be happier if she would only throw up the blinds and say to her one time lover, now husband: "Come on in, smoke in the parlor if you want to, and you can put your feet on the table, too." For every man who is a brute, it is safe to say, there is a woman who is a nagging creature with a tongue sweet in the presence of friends, but bitter in the hour with hubby alone. This is why some men drink.

"A woman's tongue can raise more clamer
Than even Vulcan with his hammer."

CHIEF THOMPSON

Judging by the newspaper reports from that western hub of Oxford county, Woodstock, they must have thought a good deal of Chief Thompson up there. They said he was a good man. That is fortunate for us. We want good men here. We have a good judge, a good magistrate, good clergymen, a good fire fighting chief, and we want a good chief of police. A chief of police who does his duty without fear or favor cannot expect to be a hot favorite with those who have no special interest in keeping the law, but, he will have the support of the right class, the class that strive for the good of the community. This, it may be observed, is an editorial handshake and a wish for success.

IS NOTHING SACRED

The Vancouver Province remarks that before we know it, some slick Yankee will lease Yildiz Palace in Turkey, turn it into a theatre and engage Abdul Hamid's scattered Harem to give ballet dances. Of course the writer is joking. All is changing, however, in the east. 'All aboard for Jerusalem," has long been a familiar cry in the Holy Land, and the locomotive robs the spot of its sanctity. The dreamy gondola of Venice will give way to the gasoline launch, and Constantinople will be riddled with the extensive trolley system. Railways are being built through Asia Minor and the romantic Bedouins are no longer terrors of the desert with their Arab steeds but navvies working with shovels. All the world will soon be within reach and all will be commonplace to the traveller. The City of the Caliphs is deafened by the roar of the locomotive. Is nothing sacred?

"The moving finger writes and having writ
Moves on, nor all
Your piety, nor wit can lure it back to cancel half a line
Nor all your tears wash out a word of it."

And yet in many a back yard is a wonder unfathomable, in many a township are marvels enough that if we only had seeing eyes and hearing ears, we would not need to go outside our home land to be re-created or entertained.

A PROTEST

Eighteen deaths from heat in a single day in American cities should make it clear that at certain times the American climate is suited neither to the strenuous life nor to the excessive clothing which custom demands. All recognize the limitations fixed by climate in India, and the torrid days should have similar recognition on this continent. —Globe.

Let us rebel.

Why should we have to wear stiff starched collars when the weather is hot.

It is an outrage.

And why a vest?

And also many other things.

Why should our lady friends have to adorn their heads with bandages, strange hair, combs and many hair pins, and why should they have to wear corsets when it is too hot almost to move without perspiring.

We repeat it, why corsets?

And many other things.

In warm lands where civilization has not reached that state of perfection that it has in America, where there they have no lynchings, shootings or the like, they do not burden themselves with starched collars and shirts, and tight bound dresses.

BUT THEY DO HERE, AND THEY ALWAYS WILL, FOR FASHION DECREES, AND WHAT FASHION SAYS GOES.

INCREASING

With the steady growth of Peterborough industrially comes the increase of school population. Trustee John Crane, chairman of the Supervision Committee, says that the King Edward school will have to be enlarged. This school is situated near the Canada General Electric Company works, which is ever increasing its business and extending its plant.

THE POINT OF VIEW

CITIES VS. CEMETERIES.
Halifax Herald.

As with individuals and countries, so with cities like Halifax. The city that employs its own capital in its own industries is bound to forge ahead and become busy and opulent.

The city that bonds over its capital to other communities to use and is content to accept 3 1-2 per cent. out of the profits, will never show growth —except in cemeteries.

THE MAN—HIS WORK.
Elbert Hubbard.

Blessed is that man who has found his work.

Fear less, hope more; eat less, breathe more; hate less, and love more —and all good things are yours.

A GRATEFUL LION.
Figaro.

The proprietor of a menagerie says that one of his lions once had a thorn taken out of his paw by a French major in Algeria. The lion afterwards ran over the list of officers belonging to the regiment of the benefactor, and, out of gratitude, devoured both the colonel and the lieutenant-colonel whose places were then filled by the good major.

THE IMMIGRANT.
G. H. M. in Toronto Star.

This is the builder of nations, this is the man;
Make him or mold him or break him,
Leave him or lose him or take him.
Thus hath it been with the world since the world began—
He, at the outer gate,
Destiny, future, fate,
Holds in his hands.
He is the builder of nations, the maker of lands.

Unlawed, unlettered and unread,
Unthinking and uncouth,
The misspent ages bow his head
And filch his phanton youth;
Adown the span of years untold
The grey ghosts flutter dim,
The lust and passion aeon-old,
To breathe and live in him.

Unlawed, unawed, untrained, disdained,
Alone, aloof, apart;
Tired are his hands, and travel-stained,
And weary is his heart.
Ah, weary is his heart, and sore,
And hungry are his eyes
To feast once more on that far shore,
His home, his paradise.

Here, at the threshold of the land,
He plucks the nation's gate,
To write her future with his hand,
And, with his life, her fate.
Yea, sick at soul, his vanguard rolls,
Across the steel-girt miles;
Where, from her wined and verdured knolls
The land's long garden smiles.

He shall be flesh of new lands' flesh
And bone of new lands' bone;
Him shall the fruit of toil refresh
In fields he hath not sown.
Unlawed, unlettered and unread,
Unthinking, unashamed,
He brings his thousands to be fed,
His hosts to be reclaimed.

This is the builder of nations, this is the man;
Make him or mold him or break him,
Leave him or lose him or take him.
Thus hath it been with the world since the world began—
He, at the outer gate,
Destiny, future, fate,
Holds in his hands.
He is the builder of nations, the maker of lands.

THE GENUINE ALWAYS SUPERIOR TO THE IMITATION

The experienced buyer never permits the shrewd merchant to convince him that an imitation is superior to the genuine advertised article. In refusing a substitute he protects himself and the manufacturers who have expended enormous sums in giving the public information regarding their products.

Advertised articles have stood the test of public approval on their merits and materials embracing their make up. The mere fact that they are imitated is competent testimony of their worth.

You are safe in rejecting the article offered as "just as good."

The Mystery of The Yellow Room

By GASTON LEROUX

COPYRIGHT, 1908 By BRENTANO'S

"Today, the 15th of January, is the day of the trial. Joseph Rouletabille has not returned. It may be we shall never see him again. The press also counts its heroes, its martyrs to duty. It may be he is no longer living. We shall know how to avenge him. Our manager will this afternoon be at the court of assize at Versailles with the letter—the letter containing the name of the murderer!"

Those Parisians who flocked to the assize court at Versailles to be present at the trial of what was known as the "mystery of the yellow room" will certainly remember the terrible crush in the courtroom.

The trial itself was presided over by M. de Rocouz, a judge filled with the prejudice of his class, but a man honest at heart. The witnesses had been called. I was there, of course, as were all who had in any way been in touch with the mysteries of the Glandier. I was lucky enough to be called early in the trial, so that I was then able to watch and be present at almost the whole of the proceedings.

The court was so crowded that many lawyers were compelled to find seats on the steps. Behind the bench of justices were representatives from other benches. M. Robert Darzac stood in the prisoner's dock between policemen, tall, handsome and calm. A murmur of admiration rather than of compassion greeted his appearance. He leaned forward toward his counsel, Maitre Henri Robert, who, assisted by his chief secretary, Maitre Andre Hesse, was busily turning over the folios of his brief.

Many expected that M. Stangerson after giving his evidence would have gone over to the prisoner and shaken hands with him, but he left the court without another word. It was remarked that the jurors appeared to be deeply interested in a rapid conversation which the manager of the Epoque was having with Maitre Henri Robert. The manager later sat down in the front row of the public seats. Some were surprised that he was not asked to remain with the other witnesses in the room reserved for them.

The reading of the indictment was got through, as it always is, without any incident. I shall not here report the long examination to which M. Darzac was subjected. He answered all the questions quickly and easily. His silence as to the important matters of which we know was dead against him. It would seem as if this reticence would be fatal for him. He resented the president's reprimands. He was told that his silence might mean death.

"Very well," he said. "I will submit to it, but I am innocent."

With that splendid ability which has made his fame Maitre Robert took advantage of the incident and tried to show that it brought out in noble relief his client's character, for only heroic natures could remain silent for moral reasons in face of such a danger. The eminent advocate, however, only succeeded in assuring those who were already assured of Darzac's innocence. At the adjournment Rouletabille had not yet arrived. Every time a door opened all eyes there turned toward it and back to the manager of the Epoque, who sat impassive in his place. When he once was feeling in his pocket a loud murmur of expectation followed. The letter!

When the trial was resumed Maitre Henri Robert questioned Daddy Mathieu as to his complicity in the death of the keeper. His wife was also brought in and was confronted by her husband. She burst into tears and confessed that she had been the keeper's sweetheart and that her husband had suspected it. She again, however, affirmed that he had had nothing to do with the murder of her lover. Maitre Henri Robert thereupon asked the court to hear Frederic Larsan on this point.

"In a short conversation which I have had with Frederic Larsan during the adjournment," declared the advocate, "he has made me understand that the death of the keeper may have been brought about otherwise than by the hand of Mathieu. It will be interesting to hear Frederic Larsan's theory."

Frederic Larsan was brought in. His explanation was quite clear.

"I see no necessity," he said, "for bringing Mathieu in this. I have told M. de Marquet that the man's threats had biased the examining magistrate against him. To me the attempt to murder mademoiselle and the death of the keeper are the work of one and the same person. Mlle. Stangerson's assailant, flying through the court, was fired on. It was thought he was struck, perhaps killed. As a matter of fact, he only stumbled at the moment of his disappearance behind the corner of the right wing of the chateau. There he encountered the keeper, who no doubt tried to seize him. The murderer had in his hand the knife with which he had stabbed Mlle. Stangerson, and with this he killed the keeper."

This very simple explanation appeared at once plausible and satisfying. A murmur of approbation was heard.

"And the murderer? What became of him?" asked the president.

"He was evidently hidden in an obscure corner at the end of the court. After the people had left the court, carrying with them the body of the keeper, the murderer quietly made his escape."

The words had scarcely left Larsan's mouth when from the back of the court came a youthful voice:

"I agree with Frederic Larsan as to the death of the keeper, but I do not agree with him as to the way the murderer escaped!"

Everybody turned around, astonished. The clerks of the court sprang toward the speaker, calling for silence, and the president angrily ordered the intruder to be immediately expelled. The same clear voice, however, was again heard:

"It is I, M. President—Joseph Rouletabille!"

CHAPTER XXVI.

In Which Joseph Rouletabille Appears In All His Glory.

THE excitement was extreme. Cries from fainting women were to be heard amid the extraordinary bustle and stir. The "majesty of the law" was utterly forgotten. The president tried in vain to make himself heard. Rouletabille made his way forward with difficulty, but by dint of much elbowing reached his manager and greeted him cordially. He was dressed exactly as on the day he left me, even to the ulster over his arm. Turning to the president, he said:

"I beg your pardon, M. President, but I have only just arrived from America. The steamer was late. My name is Joseph Rouletabille!"

The silence which followed his stepping into the witness box was broken by laughter when his words were heard. Everybody seemed relieved and glad to find him there, as if in the expectation of hearing the truth at last.

But the president was extremely incensed.

"So you are Joseph Rouletabille?" he replied. "Well, young man, I'll teach you what comes of making a farce of justice. By virtue of my discretionary power I hold you at the court's disposition. Take him away!"

Maitre Henri Robert intervened. He began by apologizing for the young man, who, he said, was moved only by the best intentions. He made the president understand that the evidence of a witness who had slept at the Glandier during the whole of that eventful week could not be omitted, and the present witness, moreover, had come to name the real murderer.

"Are you going to tell us who the murderer was?" asked the president, somewhat convinced, though still skeptical.

"I have come for that purpose, M. President!" replied Rouletabille.

An attempt at applause was silenced by the usher.

"Joseph Rouletabille," said Maitre Henri Robert, "has not been regularly subpoenaed as a witness, but I hope, M. President, you will examine him in virtue of your discretionary powers."

A pin drop could have been heard. Rouletabille stood silent, looking sympathetically at Darzac, who for the first time since the opening of the trial showed himself agitated.

"Well," cried the president, "we wait for the name of the murderer."

Rouletabille, feeling in his waistcoat pocket, drew his watch and, looking at it, said:

"M. President, I cannot name the murderer before half past 6 o'clock!"

Loud murmurs of disappointment filled the room. Some of the lawyers were heard to say, "He's making fun of us!"

The president in a stern voice said:

"This joke has gone far enough. You may retire, monsieur, into the witnesses' room. I hold you at our disposition."

Rouletabille protested.

"I assure you, M. President," he cried in his sharp, clear voice, "that when I do name the murderer you will understand why I could not speak before half past 6. I assert this on my honor. I can, however, give you now some explanation of the murder of the keeper. M. Frederic Larsan, who has seen me at work at the Glandier, can tell you with what care I studied this case. I found myself compelled to differ with him in arresting M. Robert Darzac, who is innocent. M. Larsan knows of my good faith and knows that some importance may be attached to my discoveries, which have often corroborated his own."

Frederic Larsan said:

"M. President, it will be interesting to hear M. Joseph Rouletabille, especially as he differs from me. We agree that the murderer of the keeper was the assailant of Mlle. Stangerson, but as we are not agreed as to how the murderer escaped I am curious to hear M. Rouletabille's explanation."

"I have no doubt you are," said my friend.

General laughter followed this remark. The president angrily declared that if it was repeated he would have the court cleared.

"Now, young man," said the president, "you have heard M. Frederic Larsan. How did the murderer get away from the court?"

Rouletabille looked at Mme. Mathieu, who smiled back at him sadly.

"Since Mme. Mathieu," he said, "has freely admitted her affair with the keeper"—

"Why, it's the boy!" exclaimed Daddy Mathieu.

"Remove that man!" ordered the president.

Mathieu was removed from the court. Rouletabille went on:

"Since she has made this confession I am free to tell you that she often met the keeper at night on the first floor of the donjon in the room which was once an oratory. Mme. Mathieu came to the chateau that night enveloped in a large black shawl, which served also as a disguise. This was the phantom that disturbed Daddy Jacques. She knew how to imitate the mewing of Mother Angenoux's cat, and she would make the cries to advise the keeper of her presence.

"Previous to the tragedy in the court Mme. Mathieu and the keeper left the donjon together. I learned these facts from my examination of the footmarks in the court the next morning. Bernier, the concierge, whom I had stationed behind the donjon—as he will explain himself—could not see what passed in the court. He did not reach the court until he heard the revolver shots, and then he fired. When the woman parted from the man she went toward the open gate of the court, while he returned to his room.

"He had almost reached the door when the revolvers rang out. He had just reached the corner when a shadow bounded by. Meanwhile Mme. Mathieu, surprised by the revolver shots and by the entrance of people into the court, crouched in the darkness. The court is a large one, and, being near the gate, she might easily have passed out unseen. But she remained and saw the body being carried away. In great agony of mind she neared the vestibule and saw the dead body of her lover on the stairs lit up by Daddy Jacques' lantern. She then fled, and Daddy Jacques joined her.

"That same night before the murder Daddy Jacques had been awakened by the cat's cry and, looking through his window, had seen the black phantom. Hastily dressing himself, he went out and recognized her. He is an old friend of Mme. Mathieu, and when she saw him she begged his assistance. Daddy Jacques took pity on her and accompanied her through the oak grove out of the park, past the border of the lake to the road to Epinay. From there it was but a very short distance to her home.

"Daddy Jacques returned to the chateau, and, seeing how important it was for Mme. Mathieu's presence at the chateau to remain unknown, he had done all he could to hide it. I appeal to M. Larsan, who saw me next morning, examine the two sets of footprints."

Here Rouletabille, turning toward Mme. Mathieu, with a bow, said:

"The footprints of madame bear a strange resemblance to the neat footprints of the murderer."

Mme. Mathieu trembled and looked at him with wide eyes as in wonder at what he would say next.

"Madame has a shapely foot, long and rather large for a woman. The imprint, with its pointed toe, is very like that of the murderer's."

A movement in the court was repressed by Rouletabille. He held their attention at once.

"I hasten to add," he went on, "that I attach no importance to this. Outward signs like these are often liable to lead us into error if we do not reason rightly. M. Robert Darzac's footprints are also like the murderer's, and yet he is not the murderer!"

The president, turning to Mme. Mathieu, asked:

"Is that in accordance with what you know occurred?"

"Yes, M. President," she replied; "it is as if M. Rouletabille had been behind us."

"Did you see the murderer running toward the end of the right wing?"

"Yes, as clearly as I saw them afterward carrying the keeper's body."

"What became of the murderer? You were in the court and could easily have seen?"

"I saw nothing of him, M. President. It became quite dark just then."

"Then M. Rouletabille," said the president, "must explain how the murderer made his escape."

Rouletabille continued:

"It was impossible for the murderer to escape by the way he had entered the court without our seeing him, or if we couldn't see him we must certainly have felt him, since the court is a very narrow one, inclosed in high iron railings."

"Then if the man was hemmed in that narrow square how is it you did not find him? I have been asking you that for the last half hour."

"M. President," replied Rouletabille, "I cannot answer that question before half past 6!"

The president had certainly been impressed by Rouletabille's explanation of Mme. Mathieu's part.

"Well, M. Rouletabille," he said, "as you say. But don't let us see any more of you before half past 6."

Rouletabille bowed to the president and made his way to the door of the witness room.

* * * * * * *

I quietly made my way through the crowd and left the court almost at the same time as Rouletabille. He greeted me heartily and looked happy.

"I'll not ask you, my dear fellow," I said, smiling, "what you've been doing in America, because I've no doubt you'll say you can't tell me until after half past 6."

"No, my dear Sainclair, I'll tell you right now why I went to America. I went in search of the name of the other half of the murderer!"

"The name of the other half?"

"Exactly! When we last left the Glandier I knew there were two halves to the murderer and the name of only one of them. I went to America for the name of the other half."

I was too puzzled to answer. Just then we entered the witness room, and Rouletabille was immediately surrounded. He showed himself very friendly to all except Arthur Rance, to whom he exhibited a marked coldness of manner. Frederic Larsan came in also. Rouletabille went up and shook him heartily by the hand. His manner toward the detective showed that he had got the better of the policeman. Larsan smiled and asked him what he had been doing in America. Rouletabille began by telling him some anecdotes of his voyage. They then turned aside together, apparently with the object of speaking confidentially.

WHEN YOU ARE SICK

It doesn't take a good doctor to tell that — most any one could do that much, but to tell exactly the nature of the disease sometimes calls for the utmost skill of the Physician. Most anybody by a few simple tests could tell that your eyesight was defective and that you needed glasses of some kind, but to diagnose the exact trouble and fit the right glasses calls for more than ordinary skill.

We have made that one thing a study for years, and we are in business to bring wrong eyes and right glasses together. Satisfaction Guaranteed.

THE FISH CAME UP TO LISTEN TO THE SOUND OF THE MUSIC

The picnic of the most looked for men in town is over.

And who are they?

The postmen, of course.

It was a fine night.

The boat was filled to capacity.

There was music and dancing, the rippling water, the stars o'er head.

What more could be asked?

Simply nothing.

The first annual outing of the postmen of Peterborough was held last night on the steamer Stoney Lake and the few lines above reveal to the reader what a bang up success it was.

Devey's orchestra was there.

That means good music.

Many young men and maidens also.

That means dancing.

So they danced and swung partners till the fishes came up, listened, and the moon was sorry he couldn't get out and look.

Refreshments were served in the bow of the boat by a couple of the mail carriers.

They had little rest.

The boat got in in good time and the dancers were sorry when it tied up.

MORE NOTICE

Teachers Must Give Three Months Notice to Board

Moved by Mr. D. W. Dumble, seconded by Mr. W. H. Hill, that in all contracts made between the Board of Education and teachers, such contract cannot be terminated by either party without three months' notice, and such engagement to terminate only at the then current term.

The above motion was carried, two resignations on the teaching staff being directly responsible for such action taken.

Mr. Arnott M. Patterson, who was appointed junior science teacher at the Collegiate Institute at the last meeting, sent in his resignation. He stated that he had not signed any agreement, and the reason for such action being taken by him was that he had received a more lucrative appointment.

Miss Sloan asked to be relieved of her position on the teaching staff of the public school, although admitting that she was not adhering to the rule in regard to tendering her resignation. She was behind time in her notification.

DISAPPROVAL.

Much disapproval was expressed by the members of the Board at the action of the teachers in both cases. Mr. Patterson put himself about and also several of the members, in order to secure the position. His communication was received, but not accepted as a resignation in the true sense of the word.

Regarding Miss Sloan's case, it was moved by Mr. Hill, seconded by Mr. Dumble, that her resignation be not accepted, and that the secretary notify her accordingly.

Mr. Hill—"It was after the proper time, and it is about time we put a stop to this sort of thing."

Mr. Dumble—"I'd insist on her keeping the engagement."

COMMITTEE ON APPOINTMENTS.

To the Chairman and Members of the Board of Education:

Gentlemen,—Your Committee on Appointments beg leave to report and recommend as follows:

MR. SMITH'S SUCCESSOR

1. That Mr. W. J. Neale, of Cayuga, be appointed to fill the position on the public school staff rendered vacant by the resignation of Mr. Wm. Smith, at the minimum salary of $850, increasing according to schedule, and duties to start 6th September, 1910. That he be placed on the staff of the Normal Training School and be paid the special government grant of $100 per year.

2. That Miss Sadie E. Carmichael, of Jarratt, Ontario, be appointed on the public school staff, to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Miss Watt, at the minimum salary of $450, increasing according to schedule, and duties to start 6th September, 1910.

3. That clause 6, of the contract of hiring, be amended by striking out therein the word "two" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "three," and that this amendment take effect 1st September, 1910, and to be applicable to all new appointments made on the staff, as well as to the teachers at present in the service of the Board, whose services are continued after 1st July, 1911.

4. Your committee ask that they be authorized to advertise for an assistant science master at the Collegiate Institute to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Mr. Arnott M. Patterson, with power to act.

Mr. Patterson was appointed permanently on the staff at the last meeting of the Board, but has since resigned to accept a more lucrative position.

Respectfully submitted.

W. H. HILL, Chairman.
—Adopted.

ACCOMMODATION

More Room Needed at the King Edward School

The necessity for more accommodation at the King Edward school was emphasized in the report of the Supervision Committee, read by Mr. John Crane, and which was as follows:

To the Chairman and Members of the Board of Education:

TENDER AWARDED.

Gentlemen,—As authorized, your committee advertised for tenders for text books and supplies, also for the Collegiate Institute supplies, and we have awarded the contract to Mr. R. J. Soden, his being the lowest tender.

Your committee wish to draw the attention of the Board to the necessity of having the class rooms in the upper flat of the King Edward school finished and furnished; the southern portion of the city is filling up very rapidly and the school will undoubtedly be overcrowded. While the situation may be overcome during the fall term, your committee are strongly of the opinion that some action must be taken in the very near future.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

JOHN CRANE, Chairman.
—Adopted.

Board Decides to Meet Claim of Ashcroft Boy

The account of $13.75, the same being for medical expenditure by the parents of young Ashcroft, who was injured about the face through falling from a fence at the Central school, will be paid. The Board felt that they were justified in meeting this account.

Mr. D. W. Dumble moved that the account be paid, and Mr. W. H. Hill seconded.

ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

Mr. Wm. Smith wrote to thank the Board for their kindness to him on the occasion of his retirement from the position of principal of the Central school.

S. H. Knox & Co's Store will close on Thursday's at one p. m., during July and August.

Chief Thompson Presented With Suit Case by Woodstock Police

A pleasant event took place this forenoon in the police court, when the members of the county constabulary and the city police force met and presented the departing chief, D. Thompson, with a very handsome suit case as a mark of their esteem. Regret at his departure was expressed by members of the forces, and Chief Thompson briefly thanked them for their kindly words and generous gift.—Woodstock Sentinel-Review.

F. C. Cubitt will close his store Thursday afternoons during July and August.

NO OTHER CIRCUS IN SIGHT YET

The rumors that another circus will visit Peterborough this season do not seem to be well founded.

Mr. F. J. A. Hall, secretary of the Fair, has had no requests for the use of the grounds and City Clerk Armstrong says he has heard nothing of the coming of another circus.

CLOSE RACE IN Y. M. C. A. SPORTS

Last night at the Oval was a busy place when several of the local athletes got busy and ran off several of their back events in the Stratton cup contest. This, along with the hop-step-and-jump, and mile run, made a busy time for some of them. The hop-step-and-jump was won by S. Hall, with a jump of 41 feet 1 inch. M. McCarroll was second with 37 feet 2 inches, and N. Rae third with 35 feet. The mile was won by Willis in 4 min, 43 1-2 seconds. E. Currie was second in 5 min. 29 3-5 seconds.

Thursday night will see the finish of this contest, and the winner will be announced. The contest is becoming more keen as it progresses. The first seven men are pretty well bunched, and all have some back events to get off Thursday, so there is likely to be something doing.

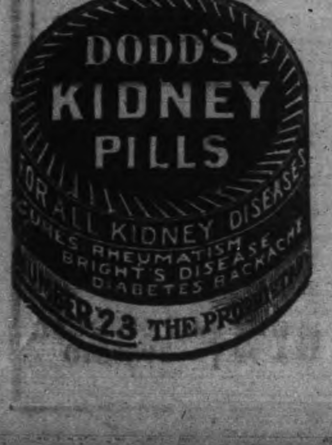
The following scores will show the closeness of the contest:—

Hall	783
Willis	662
Rae	650
McCarroll	596 1-2
Smith	553 1-2
Flowers	538 1-2
Currie	487

ANNUAL HORSE RACES MAY BE HELD HERE

The annual horse races which are held in Port Hope every year, will likely be held in Peterborough next year.

The reason for this is that considerable dissatisfaction exists in Peterborough owing to the way several local horses, which were sent there on the 1st of July to race, were handled. One local horse dealer stated emphatically that it was time for a change. Six horses were taken down on the 1st of July to compete, and as the Port Hope officials depend on Peterborough horses for their races, it is only reasonable that they should be accorded satisfactory conditions under which to race.



SPORTING COMMENT

Jack Johnson, as his reward for his victory over Jeffries, has increased his bank account by $145,000. This is a large sum.

It is worth mentioning that in the hour of his triumph the colored fighter did not forget his mother. If no other credit is given him, the smallest of us can at least commend him for this quality.

The sending of a telegram to his mother in Chicago was the first action taken by Johnson after he left the ring, and she was at a theatre listening to the returns of the fight.

And now the test will come. It remains to be seen to what extent is the attachment between son and mother. If the champion is wise he will allow the signature of Mrs. Tiny Johnson to be affixed to his money bag, and allow her to be his trainer while he is being besieged by "his many friends."

Jeffries, as his share of the receipts, gets $192,066. In both cases the amount includes a small fortune from the moving pictures and during the training period.

And now we have heard of some of the results. The white man and the black are at war. Some have been killed, and the end has not yet come.

It is just possible that the moving pictures of the big fight will not be shown in some of the large American cities where the negro race is largely represented. It is felt that trouble would arise.

APSLEY NEWS

Special to the Review.

Apsley, July 6.—On Wednesday, 29th June, a very pretty wedding was solemnized at St. George's Anglican church, Apsley, when Miss Ellen Tanner, daughter of Mr. Thomas Tanner, of the township of Chandos, was united in the bonds of holy matrimony to Mr. George Ruben Johnson, son of Mr. Peter Johnson, of the same township. The ceremony was performed by the rector, the Rev. C. Lord.

The bridesmaid was Miss Sarah Tanner, sister of the bride, while the groom was supported by his brother, Mr. Robert Johnson.

The church was tastefully decorated for the occasion, the choir being in attendance and during the ceremony sang the following hymns:—"The Voice That Breathed O'er Eden," "O Perfect Love," and "At Thy Feet, O Christ."

The many useful presents they received showed the popularity of the young couple.

Mr. and Mrs. George Johnson intend to make their home on the shore of Loon Lake.

Montreal Builders Having Troubles.

Montreal, July 6.—There is evidently going to be a bitter struggle between the building employers and the 1,500 strikers. The point in dispute on the side of the builders is an open shop, first, last and always, while the men are fighting for the principles of the union.

All work is suspended on the large buildings. The strikers have organized a picket system, and will keep a sharp lookout for people crossing the lines.

Shot His Chum.

Clinton, July 6.—Two boys, Albert Proctor, aged 17, and his nephew, J. Palmer, aged 13, were playing burglar and policeman at the former's house on Sunday, and as a result Proctor was shot in the heart and killed instantly.

One had a rifle, the other a shot gun.

There is no doubt that it was a mere accident, as the boys were good chums.

GROCERYMEN IN RESIDENTIAL SECTIONS FOR EARLY CLOSING

The merchants in the residential sections of the city are trying to arrange a half holiday on Thursdays. In the south-west the campaign is being carried on under the canvas of Mr. R. C. There are only a couple of merchants who have not expressed their willingness to the plan, and it is expected that these may agree later.

PORCUPINE'S FATAL VISIT TO THE GAY WHITE WAY

A porcupine in urban Peterborough is a much more unconventional and surprising sight than the wild man in the side show.

Last evening about 6.30 one of these bristly fellows was seen ambling along on Water street, and was treed near St. Paul's church.

A member of the porcupine posse climbed the tree and despatched the four-footed burr with a club.

It will take 100 men two years to break up the old British battleship Thunderer, which has been condemned, for the metal she contains.

LINDSAY BOARD GETS ROUGH TREATMENT ALSO

The Lindsay Board of Education, according to the papers of that town, are having much the same trouble regarding the resignations of teachers, as the local Board. Two cases are cited where, after the Board had been put to considerable trouble, two teachers were appointed and then shortly after notifying the Board of their acceptance, each asked to be relieved of the position, so that they might remain in their own towns.

In both cases the Board in the place where the teachers held positions, had increased the salary, and this brought about their resignation of the position in Lindsay.

The two teachers are Mr. I. Clarke, of Bracebridge, and Mr. Mott, of Belleville.

It is likely that the Department of Education will be notified.

IN TIME OF SWEET PEACE PREPARING FOR WAR

The first indoor target shooting practice at the Peterborough Armouries was held last evening on the two rifle ranges, installed there.

These practices will be held twice a week, Tuesdays and Fridays, and the officers, commanding each company will take charge of hi smen and instruct them.

There was a large turnout last evening and when the finals are contested for the names of each of the contestants will be published.

A particularly suitable feature of the Armouries is that a person while actually firing at a target but twenty-five yards away is in reality firing at it from a distance of 200 yards at least he would be in actual outdoor shooting.

This difference is obtained owing to the size of the target.

The rifles are equipped with the Sutherland sight, which makes them easily adjusted for any distance shooting.

One range is 25 yards in length and the other fifty yards.

CAME FROM VANCOUVER TO WED INDIAN BRIDE

An interesting event took place at the Chemong Indian Village Methodist church on Saturday, July 2nd, when Mr. Don Fairman, of Vancouver, B. C. was united in marriage to Miss Rose Prosser, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Prosser, of the village. The bride wore a costume of cream satin and wore the bridal veil. She was given away by her father, and the church was beautifully decorated for the occasion by the friends of the bride. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Mr. Cragg, of Lakefield.

Many guests were present and the number included Mr. and Mrs. A. Whipple, the latter a sister, of Meadville, Penn.

The happy young couple, amidst showers of rice, and best wishes, left for Toronto, and will reside in Vancouver. The bride's father was for years a teacher among the Indians.

G.T.P. MEN AWARDED BETTER PAY BY CONCILIATION BOARD

Decision of the Committee is That the Telegraphers on the New National Transcontinental Should Get as Good Terms as Men on Other Lines.

Toronto, July 7.—Better conditions, better pay and better hours were granted the Grand Trunk Pacific telegraphers by the conciliation board, whose report was made public yesterday. The telegraphers applied for a schedule similar to the one in force on the Canadian Pacific and the Canadian Northern. Heretofore there has been no schedule on the G.T.P. There were 30 articles considered and there was a disagreement in the board over three or four. The duties of the board were to define the regular duties and classifications of the employes and the rates of wages to be paid telegraphers, station agents, track despatchers and agents at terminal points and the wages of linemen. The new schedule will take effect as from May 1 last.

The three main branches of the dispute were these: The hours of labor, the question of track despatchers, linemen and agents at terminal points being brought within the schedule of rates, and the rates of wages of telegraph despatchers. One of the great victories won by the men was on the second point, on which the chairman disagreed. But the result of that victory is that all three have been brought within the schedule.

Telegraphers who are agents on main lines will receive $80 per month; on branch lines $66 per month. This is a large increase on what they have received in former years. Relieving agents will receive $66 a month on both main and branch lines. Telegraphers who are train despatchers will receive $131 a month the first year, $136 a month the second year, and $148 a month the third year. Relieving despatchers receive $119 a month. After one year's accumulative service they will receive $131 a month. Linemen will receive $75 a month. There can be no change in these rules without 30 days' notice.

There are several clauses such as provision of free transportation for telegraphers traveling on boards of adjustment; that no telegrapher is required to teach telegraphy; telegraphers working at wrecks or washouts provided with shelter; telegraphers exempt from shoveling snow, sifting ashes or scrubbing stations; and relating to Sunday labor.

EIGHT EMPLOYEES OF FACTORY AT LONGFORD MILLS INJURED

Escaping Gas at the Plant of the Standard Chemical Co. is Believed to be Responsible for an Explosion Which Blows off Part of Roof.

Orillia, July 7.—Longford Mills, near this town, was the scene of a serious explosion at 3.30 yesterday afternoon, which wrecked one of the buildings of the Standard Chemical Co., and injured every one of the eight persons who were in at the time, one of them fatally.

The cause of the disaster is somewhat in doubt, but it is suggested that some of the gases were escaping, and the workman, in opening one of the tanks to ascertain the cause, let more gas out. One of the men was working repairing some tools at a fire just outside the door, and the gases may have become ignited from this, causing the explosion.

The building, which was used for the manufacturer of acetone, was badly wrecked by the explosion. The roof was partly blown off, and fire broke out, completing the work of destruction. There was not much chance of saving the structure, owing to the lack of efficient fire-fighting apparatus.

John McCauley, one of the workmen, was too severely injured to be move, and no hopes are held out for his recovery. Messrs. Coulbrough and McNaught, two of the managers, were quite severely burned, but will recover. Rev. W. H. Smith, Presbyterian minister at Longford Mills, who happened to be in the building at the time, was burned about the hands and face, but his injuries are not considered serious. The others injured, Jack and Ed. Smith, William Heslin and Jack Hynes, were all workmen, employed in the building. They will recover.

Four doctors and a number of hospital nurses were rushed over from Orillia and some of the injured were brought to the hospital here by the evening train.

GREAT CANADIAN PRELATE AND SCIENTIST PASSES AWAY

Geologist, Who Ranks With Sir William Dawson, and Who Loved Research Better Than the Pomp of Position—Was Adviser to Cardinal Taschereau for Many Years.

Quebec, July 7.—The scientific world of America is in mourning today. One of its eminent and most justly appreciated members disappeared at noon yesterday, when Mgr. Joseph Clovis Kemner Laflamme, died in the Quebec Seminary, in the 61st year of his age. Mgr. Laflamme was a professor in Laval, Quebec, from 1892 up to two years ago, then he had to give up all work. He was a member of the Geological Society of France, of the Geological Society of America, of the French Society of Physics, and of the Royal Society of Canada.

He was born in Dorchester County in 1849, was ordained priest in 1872, and following that date was one of the faithful advisers of the late Cardinal Taschereau in all those troublesome questions, such as the division of the diocese of Three Rivers, the Laval University troubles at Montreal, and the famous Jesuit question.

He was a great geologist, standing on the same level as Sir William Dawson, and a narrow element at Quebec denounced him as scarcely orthodox, but he always had the confidence of his superiors. He refused the nomination as Bishop of Chicoutimi saying that he found more pleasure in looking for knowledge amongst the rocks of the Laurentians and the libraries of Laval than in even wearing a mitre of the mother church.

Mgr. Laflamme was one day asked what he thought of the future of the French-Canadian race, and he replied: "If the clergy of this province are properly educated, the future of the French race is assured, but if their education be neglected, as has been the case at certain periods, I can already see the beginning of the end."

"But is there not a great improvement, Monsigneur?"

"Yes," he replied, "there is an improvement, and I do hope it will be all right with my people."

WANT RIGHTS TO POWER

Special to the Review.

Ottawa, July 7.—A deputation of people along the Trent Valley Canal to-day waited on Deputy Minister Campbell for the purpose of securing rights to the water powers developed by the dams along that waterway. There are several interests contending for the rights, and no action will be taken for some time.

ON HIS WAY TO THE WEST

Special to the Review.

Ottawa, June 7.—Sir Wilfrid Laurier left on his Western tour this afternoon. He was accompanied by Senator Gibson and E. M. McDonald, M.P. He will be joined further west by Hon. Geo. H. Graham Mr. F. F. Pardee, who are going on from Toronto. The Premier delivers the first speech of his tour at Winnipeg July 12th ,day after the Manitoba election.

WILL NOT STAY ACT

Vancouver, July 7.—Notwithstanding local and the wired criticism from the east, the Provincial Government will not stay the operation of the Companies' Act, Premier McBride transmitting to the Victoria Board of Trade his reply to their representations adverse to its enforcement, so far as it applies to the registration or license of all companies doing extra-provincial business.

It is understood that the Premier's reply affords no consolation to the objectors. There will be no suspension of enforcement of the act, nor is it anticipated by the Government that the far-drawn cases of possible special injury to trade in the working out of this statute will be realized in practice.

INVESTIGATING HANGING OF SCHOOLBOY

Boston, July 7.—Before the investigating committee of the Legislature Tuesday two physicians swore positively that John Newman, the Lyman School inmate, had been hanged by someone at the school. They pointed out that it was impossible for the boy to tie the rope into the knot by which he was killed. Further, they swore that the bruises and wounds on the boy's body must have been received at least a day or so before death.

MURDERED AT NIAGARA FALLS

Niagara Falls, N.Y., July 7.—The first clue to the brutal murder about two months ago was found yesterday when the body of a woman was taken from the big intake to the power house of the Niagara Falls Power Co. on the upper river above the falls.

The fact that the woman wore an automobile veil over her head leads to the belief that she was taken for an auto ride, murdered, and her body tossed into the river.

Afloat All Night In Small Boat.

New York, July 7.—Four men in a small boat, survivors of the wreck of the two-masted schooner Garfield White from Nova Scotia, which sunk seven miles east of the Ambrose Channel Lightship, were rescued yesterday by the Rockaway Beach life savers. The men, who had drifted about all night in their small craft, were exhausted.

Storm Wrecked Circus.

St. Paul, Minn., July 7.—A special from Watertown, S.D., says: One dead and a score more or less injured, the main tent and menagerie tent of a big circus in ruins, and two horses killed, is the result of a cyclonic storm here Tuesday night.

Ottawa, July 7.—The British Admiralty has given its consent to have the plans for the Canadian naval vessels sent to Canada under guard. The successful negotiations were conducted through Lord Strathcona.

SCARCITY OF PAPER

Saratoga, N.Y., June 7.—The increased price and diminished supply of news print paper was the principal subject of discussion before the representatives of the associated dailies of New York State, who met here yesterday in connection with the annual meeting of the New York State Press Association, which opened its annual convention yesterday. Discussion was led by John Norris of New York City, of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association. Mr. Norris said in part:

"Within three years we have had three print paper famines. In twenty months the print paper makers of the country have kept the stock of paper on hand for all the newspapers of the country to an average supply of less than eight days.

"The mill owners admit that they have produced only 92 per cent. of their capacity."

PERMANENT BOARD OF ARBITRATION

Montreal, July 7.—A permanent board of arbitration has been appointed for five years to deal with disputes raised by the longshoremen here. The Shipping Federation is represented by Secretary J. H. Lauer of the Builders' exchange, the men by G. H. Brunet, and these two yesterday selected ex-President Farquhar Robertson of the Board of Trade as third member and chairman. They will meet at once and continue until all present disputes are cleared up.

Details Practically Decided.

Montreal, July 7.—The conference between the officials of the C.P.R. and the representatives of the trainmen on the eastern portion of the system, are still continuing, and the details of the final agreement were practically decided upon yesterday. The announcement of a final settlement is expected to be made this week.

CONDITION OF WESTERN CROPS

Winnipeg, July 7.—Despite the assurance that present crop conditions warrant the uneasiness which appears to prevail among a certain section of the farming community, some pessimism will exist, notwithstanding the reports which have been issued by the railway companies regarding the weather and wheat fields along their respective lines. These reports show that the conditions generally are all that can be expected. And, providing favorable weather reigns, there is no reason, it is claimed, that the crop this year will be as big, if not bigger, than any previous year's season.

Gorst Will Remain.

London, July 7.—Replying to a question in the House of Commons, Sir Edward Grey, the Foreign Secretary, stated that Sir Eldon Gorst would remain in Egypt as the British diplomatic agent and consul-general.

EXCUSES FOR DISORDERS

London Paper Suggests That America Needs Roosevelt's Advice.

London, July 7.—While deploring the American race riots that followed the Jeffries-Johnson fight, London newspapers yesterday unexpectedly offered excuses for the disorders, and generally admitted that Europeans have little idea of the race situation in the United States.

The usually anti-American Evening Globe, referring to the attempts to lynch a negro in New York City, declares:

"Really our sympathy runs more to the men with the rope than to the blatant blacks. It is against human nature to expect the whites to accept the negroes' insolent assertion that Johnson's victory established the supremacy of the blacks without instant protest."

The Evening Star seizes the occasion to make fun of Col. Roosevelt and his Guild Hall speech. It recites Roosevelt's contention that the first duty of a civilized nation must be to preserve order, and then says that "his complacency must indeed be shaken."

"We wait to see whether he will apply his criticisms of England in her conduct of affairs in Egypt to his own country," The Star adds. "It is a pity that Americans are not cultivated in the art of taking defeat in sports in a dignified way, and of minding their own business politically.

L.O.L. NO. 321 TO HOLD MEETING

The Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Co. has applied for a subsidy on a floating drydock of the second class at Prince Rupert. It will have a lifting capacity of 20,000 tons, and cost about $1,500,000.

SARCASTIC ABOUT FIGHT

Paris, July 7.—Under the caption of "civilized savages," Henri Rochefort, the noted political writer and satirist, in yesterday's La Patrie blames the white race in America for the negro riots following the Reno fight. In ironical vein, Rochefort suggests that "since the fight was made largely a race question, nations henceforth adopt the prize fight method of settling their disputes."

"Let each nation choose its champion pugilist," he suggests, "and pit him against other champions whenever international disputes arise. In this we can avoid the maintenance of armies and navies and save millions of dollars and thousands of lives."

RESCUED BOY FROM DROWNING

Cornwall, July 7.—Wm. S. Hollister, butcher and quartermaster sergeant of the 56th Regiment, earned a Royal Humane Society's medal yesterday afternoon. A seven-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Jerome fell into the canal and would have been drowned but for the efforts of Hollister, who, by the way, cannot swim a stroke. He waded into the canal and collared young Jerome with a boat hook.

Winnipeg, July 7.—The declaration of the returning officer for Beautiful Plains that, owing to irregularities in the Liberal nomination papers, Hon. J. H. Howden is elected by acclamation, promises to be followed by bitter litigation.

The latest sensation in Manitoba elections is the attack by the Conservative paper at Brandon, The Times, on Hon. G. R. Coldwell, Minister of Education, and candidate for Brandon. It has for years been the Conservative organ, and its shift has created a sensation.

It is claimed that Donald Ross, Liberal candidate of Springfield, grafted while a member of the Winnipeg Parks Board, in the sale of sites, getting $500 for his influence.

DASHED THROUGH FAMES AND SMOKE

Pittsburg, July 7.—While firemen poured powerful streams of water upon him, W. A. Weaver, superintendent of the Atlantic refining plant of the Standard Oil Co., dashed through flames and smoke early yesterday and shut a valve which prevented fire spreading from a burning still of benzine to great tanks of oil nearby.

Royal Muskoka Hotel, July 7.—Canadian electrical men, gathered from all parts, are in session here for a three days' convention. The question of satisfactory power at systems for central stations to adopt was entered into fully and many suggestions offered. Further action will be taken in this matter before the convention is finished. Prominent among the day's speakers were: Frederick Nicholls, R. G. Bloch, R. E. Pack, W. A. Bucke, A. F. Mudge, Toronto; Mr. Doane, Cleveland; C A. Littlefield, A. T. Holbrook, New York.

In the afternoon a canoeing regatta was held. Frederick Nicholls of Toronto presented cups for competition.

A GRUESOME DISCOVERY

Chatham, July 7.—The lifeless body of Mrs. John Illingsworth, aged 65, was found huddled behind a bed in her home, 238 Lacroix street, by a policeman at 10.45 yesterday morning. Dr. Bray, coroner, who was hurriedly summoned to the scene, pronounced death as resulting from heart failure. The investigation that led to this discovery was caused by a rumor on the street yesterday morning that Mrs. Illingsworth had not been seen since Monday night. She had evidently fallen out of bed after an attack of heart failure. The body was badly decomposed.

She had been living alone for some time, her husband living in Detroit. She was a sister of Andrew R. Coltart of this city, whose wife died in the public General Hospital Tuesday.

RELIGIOUS DEBATES RAGING IN SPAIN

Madrid, July 7.—Religious debates are raging in both Houses of Parliament. The Bishop of Madrid, leading the attack in the Senate, claimed that the laws of the church are the laws of the country, because the constitution makes Catholicism the state religion.

Canalejas, in reply, declared that the invasion of state sovereignty by the church was no longer tolerable. "I know that a conspiracy exists to accomplish my downfall," he said. "Whether it succeeds or not does not matter, as the time has come when Spain will place herself abreast of modern nations."

Auto Driver Killed.

Indianapolis, Ind., July 7.—Thomas Kincade, a well-known automobile driver, was killed at the Indianapolis motor speedway yesterday afternoon. He was on the track in trial practice when the car, a National, ran off the high embankment at the southeast corner of the course. He was caught beneath the wreck.

TRY A REVIEW WANT AD.

A SANE AND SOBER PEOPLE

London, July 7.—Earl Grey, in this week's Standard of Empire, gives a statement of his hopes and convictions regarding Canada. He says the Canadians are a sane, sober, strenuous, earnest people, a patriotic and invincibly industrious people, worshipping no false gods, following no will-o'-the-wisps, but steadily and surely with their eyes wide open alike to opportunity and dangers are building up between the Atlantic and Pacific the greatest nation that has ever been within the greatest Empire that has ever been.

BEATING A WIFE BEATER HONORABLE

Oyster Bay, L.I., July 7.—To beat up a wife beater is an honorable act, according to Col. Theodore Roosevelt, former President of the United States. A newspaper man who went out yesterday to Sagamore Hill to interview the colonel, wore bandages on one of his hands. The colonel asked how the member had been injured, and was told that the reporter had severely sprained his hand whipping a foreigner who had struck his wife at the Oyster Bay depot.

"Fine, just fine," shouted Col. Roosevelt, "that's an honorable wound. I'm proud of you. American men will not permit wife-beating."

WILL BUILD DAM A MILE LONG

Detroit, July 7.—To prevent a possible reduction of levels in the upper lakes and rivers, resulting from enlarging the outlet of the Detroit River by the construction of the new Livingstone channel, the United States Government will build a dam nearly a mile long, from Bois Blanc Island, a point near the edge of the new Rock Cut channel. Permission has been asked from the Government for the erection of the dam.

Berlin, July 7.—About four o'clock yesterday morning fire broke out in the furniture factory of Baetz Bros & Co., and the plant was completely destroyed. Changed Their Plans.

Big Jobs Still Tied Up.

Montreal, July 7.—P. Lyall & Sons received an offer of 200 bricklayers yesterday from outside points, while other builders claim that they have men. This does not alter the fact that all the big jobs are tied up. The builders all refused to sign individual contracts with the union.

SUICIDE

Suicide is growing with our civilization and when the statistics for 1910 have been gathered, it will be found that the number who, by their own hand, have left reality for mystery, will be an alarming one. Culture and suicide seem to go hand in hand. In olden days suicide was defended and Marcus Arelius is stated to have once said that a man had as much right to leave this world as to leave a room filled with smoke. There are many remarkable suicides recorded. Portia learning that Brutus was slain at Philippi, swallowed red hot coals. Empedoc'es, a poet and philosopher, who lived five hundred years before Christ, threw himself into a crater, while twenty-three hundred and twenty years later an unknown Englishman died in a similar way at Mount Vesuvius. In Europe three men formerly suicided to one woman, but the proportion is growing less as woman's feeling of independence is growing greater.

Bachelors grow weary of life more often than married men, in spite of all the cares of being a benedict, and widows shuffle off more frequently than widowers. Saxony leads in the percentage of suicides per 100,000, having 31.1 to her discredit with Denmark at 25.8. The United States shows but 3.5, the German Empire 14.3 per cent. England and Wales 6.9. Ireland and Russia show 1.7 and 2.9 respectively. Spain makes the best showing, happy, indolent Spain 1.4 is her place. Jews seldom suicide. Judas' example is not followed, as less than a dozen cases are on record in over 4,000 years. The United States census officer deals with over 20,000 cases. Poison was the path by which over six thousand ended it all. Five thousand shot themselves to death three thousand hung themselves, about fifteen hundred smothered themselves, eleven hundred cut an artery; a thousand jumped in the drink, two hundred and fifty leaped from high places, less than a hundred plunged beneath cars and fifteen hundred had various ways suitable to the end in view.

We are growing more civilized and more expert in manner and method of ending it all, in so far at least, as this life is concerned.

THE RAIN

Man is mighty small. There were many who looked to the sky in the evening times gone by. No sign of rain. So came the forest fires and hung a pall of smoke over us. The soil in the gardens hardened, the fields became baked. The plants, the little plants, withered, and the trees by the street side were heavy with dust. All nature drooped. Man who can girdle the earth with a telegram and cable, who can send a message through the other was baffled. He who can explore the sea with a submarine and fly the air, could not produce a single drop of rain. He was powerless. But while we slept the clouds gathered, the rain came, the sewers were cleansed, the trees were cleaned, the flowers, the garden revived, and the fields of the farm land lifted their heads again, and all nature was glad.

MOVE THEM ON

Chief Thompson will confer a favor upon the citizens if he will see that the obstructions on the street corners are removed. These are not posts or boxes, but men who have nothing to do but stand and spit and remark. Sometimes the remark is personal, sometimes it is profane, it is seldom worth while. These men are not bad men, just idlers who have no purpose in view, except to size up the passers-by, to smoke and decorate the pavement with tobacco juice. To move them on will be an act much appreciated by the women of Peterborough.

GARBAGE

Where is the garbage system for the 18,000 souls of Peterborough? A thousand housewives are asking, and one million flies are anxious lest their breeding spots in the hundreds of back yards should be disturbed. It is time something should be done. What will be done? Stinks and smells of all flavors are in the air, and decayed matter of various kinds is lying around. Peterborough is up to date in other things, why not be alive in this important question, the disposition of garbage. It is not a luxury, but a necessity that the refuse of the city should be taken away and properly disposed of.

THE FIRST HALF-HOLIDAY

To-day many clerks are enjoying an outing. Some are fishing, others are fixing up the lawn or resting at home. It is the first mid-week, midsummer holiday for the down-town clerks. They deserve it. It is dull work waiting in stores when the glass is hugging 90. The clerks in the outlying districts as well as most of the storekeepers, are also anxious for this Thursday half-holiday and it is hoped that they will come to some agreement whereby all may enjoy the relaxation, the same as their fellows down town.

THE TWO MEN

It was a sad sight at the police court yesterday to see a self-confessed soak and a young man, bright with the bloom of youth on his face, as they sat side by side in the dock. One man's life was all in the past, the other ahead. One had met old John Barleycorn often, and fallen often in the struggle. To the other it was a new experience. The rattle of the cell door was not strange to the man whose life was behind him. It was horrid to the man whose life was ahead. "The cold, grey dawn of the morning after is no time for mirth or laughter." The morning after! What a tongue; what a head. It was a new feeling to the man whose life was before him. To the man whose life was behind it was an old story. But the old man was not always this way. He was once as pure, as innocent, and happy as any bright-eyed boy who toddles the streets of Peterborough. He drank himself to the cell. Yes, and many whose god is their belly, gorge themselves to that narrow eternal cell, the grave. But what of the young man?

GLASS HOUSES

Mr. Rogers S. Pease, one of the oldest glass makers in thhe United States, predicts that in ten years glass houses will be common. Then no one can throw stones. But Mr. Pease was in earnest. He described the house. The foundation will be of concrete, the walls and ceilings and roof of wired glass, the floors of tile. This building would be practically indestructable; requires no painting, can be made any color, is sound proof, moisture proof and fire proof. To be fully equipped, then the man of the future will have to possess a glass house, an automobile and a flying machine.

THANK GOD

"Ragtime songs and music have about served their purpose, and are gradually going out of popular esteem," according to J. L. Tindale, president of the Music Publishers' Association of the United States, which held its annual session in New York last week. In his annual address President Tinsdale declared that public taste will henceforth require compositions of more solid nature.

"Ragtime of the trivial sort and the ordinary slangy music of the popular sort will be a thing of the past in five years," he said. "It is hard to understand why barroom quips and the slang of the streets should be perpetuated in music, and such goods ought not to be offered for sale or taken into our homes for fireside entertainment."

It is to be hoped that Mr. Tinsdale knows what he is talking about. We are sick of the silvery moon, the man and the maid and the heartaches, the tears and gush and fuss and feathers. Can no genius rise to the occasion and give us a new line? We are tired of the stuff that is being warbled now-a-days. Awake! dip the pen in the ink pot and tear off something worth while, only please leave out the moon.

RECORD OF SCANDALS

The Government record since the election of 1908 is about as follows:

1. Mr. Pugsley has had registered against him the sawdust wharf transaction; the giving of $4,425 rake-off to an Ottawa middleman in connection with the renting of buildings for the Government, and every one of the numerous New Brunswick dredging contracts investigated has proved to be a scandal.

2. The Department of the Interior has been caught with the goods in the sale of the St. Peter's Indian reserve for the benefit of Liberal speculators.

3. The Department of Justice showed up very badly in regard to the strange and suspicious escape of Bill Miner from the New Westminster penitentiary.

4. The Department of Railways and Canals has had the case of Clarry, the solicitor who acted for and against the Government simultaneously in adjusting damage claims.

5. The Transcontinental Railway Commission has had its own chief engineer resign on the ground that stealing was going on.

6. It has turned out that the Quebec Bridge Company mismanaged the contract with the great bridge company which handled the structure which fell down, so that the contract was with a dummy company, from which nothing could be recovered.

7. And now there have been heavy stealings at the Printing Bureau, which would have been nipped long ago had the Conservative demand for a general overhaul been granted.

IN SPAIN.
Montreal Gazette.

The Canalejas Cabinet of Spain has sent to the Vatican what is practically a defiance, and will go forward with its programme to reduce the number of religious establishments by suppressing those not under legal authorization and by abolishing the exemptions from taxation and military service accorded to monastics. The crisis should not be long in coming, and will break somebody. Seemingly Canalejas cannot bend, and the Vatican will not.

HEART-BEATS.
Chicago News.

By using a stethoscope and a sensitive telephone relay the heart-beats of a patient in London were transmitted to the home of John Milne, the noted seismologist, on the Isle of Wight.

The heart throbs were heard by four physicians over an ordinary telephone, and so clear was the transmission that it was possible to diagnose the heart troubles.

It is expected that this use of the stethoscope with a telephone relay will enable physicians to keep in touch with their patients.

Official Admits He Was Wrong

Sentinel-Review.

The promised departmental investigation into the charges preferred in an article published in a recent issue of the Sentinel-Review against an officer of the Canadian Immigration Department for using insulting language and ordering Mr. W. J. Taylor, of this city, off the train at Windsor, was held yesterday afternoon. The investigation, which was held at the Sentinel-Review office, was conducted by Mr. H. G. Herbert, Travelling Inspector of the Immigration Department, the officer against whom the charges were laid, being also present.

The inspecting officer had in his possession a written statement from an eye-witness of the affair, which tallied with the account as outlined by Mr. Taylor. Before the investigation closed the offending official acknowledged that he had made a mistake in addressing Mr. Taylor in the way he did, and stated that he was under the impression that he was addressing another man with whom he had an altercation a few minutes before. The offending officer consequently tendered both a verbal and written apology to Mr. Taylor for his conduct on the night in question and for the remarks made on the occasion referred to. The report of the investigation is being forwarded by the inspecting officer to the Department at Ottawa. What action the Department will take remains to be seen.

It is to the credit of both the Prime Minister and the Department of the Interior that such prompt action was taken. The official who had charge of the investigation showed a keen desire to get at the bottom of the whole affair, and the investigation was from start to finish conducted in an earnest and businesslike manner. At the conclusion of the investigation Mr. Herbert made the statement that while the regulations must be enforced at the border, nevertheless the officials entrusted with the delicate task of putting the regulations into force must do their work in a manner to cause as little annoyance as possible to the travelling public, and it is the intention of the Government to see that the immigration officers conduct themselves in a becoming and gentlemanly manner.

Ottawa building permits for the first half of this year total $1,300,300.

The Mystery of The Yellow Room

By GASTON LEROUX

COPYRIGHT, 1908 By BRENTANO'S

On the stroke of half past 6 Joseph Rouletabille was again brought in. It is impossible for me to picture the tense excitement which appeared on every face as he made his way to the bar. Darzac rose to his feet, frightfully pale.

The president, addressing Rouletabille, said gravely:

"I will not ask you to take the oath, because you have not been regularly summoned, but I trust there is no need to urge upon you the gravity of the statement you are about to make."

Rouletabille looked the president quite calmly and steadily in the face and replied:

"Yes, monsieur."

"At your last appearance here," said the president, "we had arrived at the point where you were to tell us how the murderer escaped and also his name. Now, M. Rouletabille, we await your explanation."

"Very well, monsieur," began my friend amidst a profound silence. "I had explained how it was impossible for the murderer to get away without being seen. And yet he was there with us in the court."

"And you did not see him? At least that is what the prosecution declares."

"No! We all of us saw him, M. le President!" cried Rouletabille.

"Then why was he not arrested?"

"Because no one besides myself knew that he was the murderer. It would have spoiled my plans to have had him arrested, and I had then no proof other than my own reasoning. I was convinced we had the murderer before us and that we were actually looking at him. I have now brought what I consider the indisputable proof."

"Speak out, monsieur. Tell us the murderer's name."

"You will find it on the list of names present in the court on the night of the tragedy," replied Rouletabille.

The people present in the courtroom began showing impatience. Some of them even called for the name and were silenced by the usher.

"The list includes Daddy Jacques, Bernier, the concierge, and Mr. Arthur Rance," said the president. "Do you accuse any of these?"

"No, monsieur!"

"Then I do not understand what you are driving at. There was no other person at the end of the court."

"Yes, monsieur, there was, not at the end, but above the court, who was leaning out of the window."

"Do you mean Frederic Larsan?" exclaimed the president.

"Yes, Frederic Larsan!" replied Rouletabille in a ringing tone. "Frederic Larsan is the murderer!"

The courtroom became immediately filled with loud and indignant protests. So astonished was he that the president did not attempt to quiet it. The quick silence which followed was broken by the distinctly whispered words from the lips of Robert Darzac:

"It's impossible! He's mad!"

"You dare to accuse Frederic Larsan, monsieur?" asked the president. "If you are not mad, what are your proofs?"

"Proofs, monsieur? Do you want proofs? Well, here is one," cried Rouletabille shrilly. "Let Frederic Larsan be called!"

"Usher, call Frederic Larsan."

The usher hurried to the side door, opened it and disappeared. The door remained open, while all eyes turned expectantly toward it. The clerk reappeared and, stepping forward, said:

"M. President, Frederic Larsan is not here. He left at about 4 o'clock and has not been seen since."

"That is my proof!" cried Rouletabille triumphantly.

"Explain yourself," demanded the president.

"My proof is Larsan's flight," said the young reporter. "He will not come back. You will see no more of Frederic Larsan."

"Unless you are playing with the court, monsieur, why did you not accuse him when he was present? He would then have answered you."

"He could give no other answer than the one he has now given by his flight."

"We cannot believe that Larsan has fled. There was no reason for his doing so. Did he know you'd make this charge?"

"He did. I told him I would."

"Do you mean to say that knowing Larsan was the murderer you gave him the opportunity to escape?"

"Yes, M. President, I did," replied Rouletabille proudly. "I am not a policeman; I am a journalist, and my business is not to arrest people. My business is in the service of truth and is not that of an executioner. If you are just, monsieur, you will see that I am right. You can now understand why I refrained until this hour to divulge the name. I gave Larsan time to catch the 4:17 train for Paris, where he would know where to hide himself and leave no traces. You will not find Frederic Larsan," declared Rouletabille, fixing his eyes on M. Robert Darzac. "He is too cunning. He is a man who has always escaped you and whom you have long searched for in vain. If he did not succeed in outwitting me he can yet easily outwit any police. This man, who four years ago introduced himself to the police and became celebrated as Frederic Larsan, is notorious under another name—a name well known to crime. Frederic Larsan, M. President, is Ballmeyer."

"Ballmeyer!" cried the president.

"Ballmeyer!" exclaimed Robert Darzac, springing to his feet. "Ballmeyer! It was true, then!"

"Ah, M. Darzac, you don't think I am mad now!" cried Rouletabille.

Ballmeyer! Ballmeyer! No other word could be heard in the courtroom. The president adjourned the hearing.

Those of my readers who may not have heard of Ballmeyer will wonder at the excitement the name caused. And yet the doings of this remarkable criminal form the subject matter of the most dramatic narratives of the newspapers and criminal records of the past twenty years. It had been reported that he was dead and thus had eluded the police as he had eluded them throughout the whole of his career.

Ballmeyer was the best specimen of the high class "gentleman swindler." He was an adept at sleight of hand tricks, and no bolder or more ruthless crook ever lived. He was received in the best society and was a member of some of the most exclusive clubs. On many of his depredatory expeditions he had not hesitated to use the knife and the mutton bone. No difficulty stopped him, and no "operation" was too dangerous. He had been caught, but escaped on the very morning of his trial by throwing pepper into the eyes of the guards who were conducting him to court.

He left France later to "work" America. The police there succeeded in once capturing him, but the extraordinary man escaped the next day. It would need a volume to recount the adventures of this master criminal. And yet this was the man Rouletabille had allowed to get away! Knowing all about him and who he was, he afforded the criminal an opportunity for another laugh at the society he had defied! I could not help admiring the bold stroke of the young journalist, because I felt certain his motive had been to protect both Mlle. Stangerson and rid Darzac of an enemy at the same time.

The crowd had barely recovered from the effect of the astonishing revelation when the hearing was resumed. The question in everybody's mind was, Admitting that Larsan was the murderer, how did he get out of the yellow room?

Rouletabille was immediately called to the bar and his examination continued.

"You have told us," said the president, "that it was impossible to escape from the end of the court. Since Larsan was leaning out of his window, he had left the court. How did he do that?"

"He escaped by a most unusual way. He climed the wall, sprang on to the terrace and while we were engaged with the keeper's body reached the gallery by the window. He then had little else to do than to open the window, get in and call out to us, as if he had just come from his own room. To a man of Ballmeyer's strength all that was mere child's play. And here, monsieur, is the proof of what I say."

Rouletabille drew from his pocket a small packet, from which he produced a strong iron peg.

"This, monsieur," he said, "is a spike which perfectly fits a hole still to be seen in the cornice supporting the terrace. Larsan, who thought and prepared for everything in case of any emergency, had fixed this spike into the cornice. All he had to do to make his escape good was to plant one foot on a stone which is placed at the corner of the chateau, another on this support, one hand on the cornice of the keeper's door and the other on the terrace, and Larsan was clear of the ground. The rest was easy. His acting after dinner as if he had been drugged was make believe. He was not drugged. But he did drug me. Of course he had to make it appear as if he also had been drugged so that no suspicion should fall on him for my condition. Had I not been thus overpowered Larsan would never have entered Mlle. Stangerson's chamber that night and the attack on her would not have taken place."

A groan came from Darzac, who appeared to be unable to control his suffering.

"You can understand," added Rouletabille, "that Larsan would feel himself hampered from the fact that my room was so close to his and from a suspicion that I would be on the watch that night. Naturally he could not for a moment believe that I suspected him. But I might see him leaving his room when he was about to go to Mlle. Stangerson. He waited till I was asleep and my friend Sainclair was busy trying to rouse me. Ten minutes after that mademoiselle was calling out 'Murder!'"

"How did you come to suspect Larsan?" asked the president."

"My pure reason pointed to him. That was why I watched him. But I did not foresee the drugging. He is very cunning. Yes, my pure reason pointed to him, but I required tangible proof so that my eyes could see him as my pure reason saw him. The day following the incident of 'the inexplicable gallery' I felt myself losing control of it. I had allowed myself to be diverted by fallacious evidence, but I recovered and again took hold of the right end. I satisfied myself that the murderer could not have left the gallery, either naturally or supernaturally. I narrowed the field of consideration to that small circle, so to speak. The murderer could not be outside that circle. Now, who were in it? There was, first, the murderer. Then there were Daddy Jacques, M. Stangerson, Frederic Larsan and myself—five persons in all, counting in the murderer. And yet in the gallery there were but four. Now, since it had been demonstrated to me that the fifth could not have escaped, it was evident that one of the four present in the gallery must be a double—he must be himself and the murderer also. Why had I not seen this before? Simply because the phenomenon of the double personality had not occurred before in this inquiry.

"Now, who of the four persons in the gallery was both that person and the assassin? I went over in my mind what I had seen. I had seen at one and the same time M. Stangerson and the murderer, Daddy Jacques and the murderer, myself and the murderer, so that the murderer, then, could not be either M. Stangerson, Daddy Jacques or myself. Had I seen Frederic Larsan and the murderer at the same time? No. Two seconds had passed, during which I lost sight of the murderer, for, as I have noted in my papers, he arrived two seconds before M. Stangerson, Daddy Jacques and myself at the meeting point of the two galleries. That would have given Larsan time to go through the 'off turning' gallery, snatch off his false beard, return and hurry with us as if, like us, in pursuit of the murderer. I was sure now I had got hold of the right end in my reasoning. With Frederic Larsan was now always associated in my mind the personality of the unknown of whom I was in pursuit—the murderer, in other words.

CO-OPERATIVE EGG CIRCLES AND "CHICKENLESS" EGGS

What The System Means to the City Man's Breakfast Table—Wagons Busy Collecting Eggs for Gunn's Warehouse, Simcoe Street — Five Circles Established in Peterborough County

The Co-operative Egg Circles in this district are now in good working order, and eggs are being delivered twice a week at Gunn's warehouse, Simcoe street.

Mr. H. C. Duff, the district representative of the Department of Agriculture, stated in an interview with the Review last night that there were many difficulties to overcome in connection with the introduction of the system, but said most encouraging progress had been made and the circles were proving mutually satisfactory to the sellers and buyers.

THE CONSUMER PROTECTED.

The method of selling eggs on the Co-operative plan is one that is not of interest to the rural population alone, but is also of immense benefit and importance to the people of the towns and cities. With the system in vogue the man at the breakfast table need not be timid in chipping the end off the egg for fear that he will cut the head off a chicken, for the eggs will be perfectly fresh and the greatest discrimination will be shown by the buyers before the eggs are taken from the farmer.

EGG WAGONS CALL REGULARLY.

Drivers of the wagons will call periodically at the farmers' homes and purchase the the farmers' homes and purchase the fresh eggs. All the eggs are marked, and when the housewife buys a marked egg she knows that it is a co-operative egg and that trade mark is a guarantee of quality, as the advertiser would say.

FIVE CIRCLES FORMED.

Egg Circles in Peterborough district are established at Pine Grove, (Lakefield), Zion (Smith) Central Smith, Stewart's Corners (Otonabee), and North Monaghan. The first three are on a particularly good working basis, and the other two will soon be also.

Steps will be taken shortly for extending of the system in other parts of the county.

GENERAL CO-OPERATIVE SELLING.

Mr. Duff has made a close study of co-operative work, and confidently expresses the opinion that in three years or so the co-operative system will be in operation in all parts of the Province of Ontario, and will embrace the whole Dominion in a short time.

"It will not be confined to eggs alone," he predicted, "but all the produce of the farm". It is in force all over Denmark, and the excellent results obtained have given that country an international reputation as having a thoroughly satisfactory method from all standpoints for the commercial handling of agricultural products."

W. J. FRANCIS REPORTS ON HERALD DISASTER

Manufacturers and owners of business buildings all over the country are interested in and the jury empannelled to enquire into the cause of the disaster to the Herald newspaper building in Montreal, on June 13th, last.

On Wednesday the jury returned its finding as follows:—"We consider that no one can be held responsible, but we suggest that a by-law be passed calling for the inspection of these water tanks once every few months."

The enquiry was very full and complete, and an earnest endeavor was made to get at the facts, so far as the condition of the collapsed building would permit.

Prominent among those testifying was Mr. W. J. Francis, C.E., formerly of Peterborough, and known all over the continent as an expert in steel and concrete construction, and largely responsible for the successful erection of the famous hydraulic lift lock here. Mr. Francis made very careful examination of the ruins, and in his evidence expressed the opinion that poor construction in the building was the main factor in impelling the collapse. A Montreal dispatch reports Mr. Francis' evidence as follows:

Mr. Walter J. Francis, civil engineer Commercial Union building, with twenty years' experience, said that in his opinion the collapse was due to faulty floor construction, which no one could foresee. Ten days after the collapse he had examined what remained of the building, and found that the floors were in part supported by two rows of cast-iron pillars and the centre brick wall. Transverse beams ran from these columns with longitudinal beams front to rear. At the top of each pillar was a floral capital of rough casting, and in the beam resting on this cap a square plate, cast-iron, also rough. Upon this plate was a ten-inch, cast-iron rod, which supported a like square plate, which carried the pillar on the floor above. A very "tippy" construction, which he likened to an irregularly built column of children's toy blocks. Any fracture in this hidden detail might cause the collapse of the floors and carry down the centre wall.

Regarding the weight of the tank on the centre wall, the greatest strain would be at the ground floor, where, in addition to the bulk of the tank, the proportionate strain of each floor had to be borne as well. This base portion of the wall was still standing when he went over the ruins.

WINNIPEG CREW CAPTURED THE CUP

Special to the Review.

This win by the Canadians is a great triumph. The Winnipeg crew won all along in the events and rowed their way in this the final, in a manner which gave them a decisive victory

TWO BIG EVENTS OF A LIFE TIME---BE THERE

Saturday at the ball lot Strathconas will be at home to the T.A.S., and the affair promises to be one of the big events for July.

At the last afternoon meeting of the two clubs, the aerialists weren't very well pleased at the treatment they received, but all has been forgotten.

On account of the big crowd expected, no invitations have been issued. Those attending will confer a favor on the officials by not crowding on to the base line.

The Dark duo will have all the arrangements in hand.

Immediately at the conclusion of this function there will be another reunion.

The gentlemen from the West End and Park street Athletic Clubs are billed to do the entertaining.

The last reception held was something unlooked for and it is understood that the chickens are busy hatching up something new.

'Fish' Haney, 'General' Tighe, "Mabel' Shaw, and others or more or less note will be there.

That Mighty Right and Left

Dick McBride is the authority for the statement that the pictures of the Jeffries-Johnson fight will not be allowed to be shown in this city.

And now that the meeting between the representatives of the white and black races is over, local sports can redeem themselves by taking a chance to pick the winners of the Saturday City League games. Bill Metheral will supply any sure tips required.

The burg's been full of "sure thing" dope,
Like other towns we know,
But had we done less guessing
We'd all been out less dough.

Moving pictures of a prize fight are subversive of morality when these pictures represent the triumph of the black race over the white.

If Jeffries had won the fight the various civic authorities of the United States would not have dared to come between the people and their desire to witness a reproduction of the scene at Reno.

Agitations against the exhibition of moving pictures of prize fights made no real headway until a white American was humbled by an Afro-American. Therefore the great republic begins to show signs of a conviction that fight pictures are "subversive of morality." There is one championship the white race is in danger of losing—the hypocrites' belt will never pass from the keeping of the people who could ease their eyes on moving pictures of a white man hammering a black man and turn away in horror from moving pictures of a black man hammering a white man. — Toronto Telegram.

Cook in Comfort You no longer need wear yourself out with the weakening heat of an intensely hot kitchen. You can cook in comfort.

Here is a stove that gives no outside heat. All its heat is concentrated at the burners. An intense blue flame (hotter than either white or red) is thrown upwards but not around. All the heat is utilized in cooking — none in outside heating.

New Perfection
WICK BLUE FLAME

entirely removes the discomfort of cooking. Apply a match and immediately the stove is ready. Instantly an intense heat is projected upwards against the pot, pan, kettle or boiler, and yet there is no surrounding heat — no smell — no smoke.

Why? Because The New Perfection Oil Cook-Stove is scientifically and practically perfect. You cannot use too much wick — it is automatically controlled. You get the maximum heat — no smoke. The burner is simple. One wipe with a cloth cleans it — consequently there is no smell.

The New Perfection Oil Cook-Stove is wonderful for year-round use, but especially in summer. Its heat operates upward to pan, pot, or kettle, but not beyond or around. It is useless for heating a room.

It has a Cabinet Top with shelf for keeping plates and food hot.

It has long turquoise-blue enamel chimneys. The nickel finish, with the bright blue of the chimneys, makes the stove ornamental and attractive. Made with 1, 2 and 3 burners; the 2 and 3-burner stoves can be had with or without Cabinet.

MAKES HAIR GROW

Wm. Madill Has an Invigorator That Makes Hair Grow in Abundantly or Money Back

If your hair is thinning out gradually it won't be long before the bald spot appears.

The time to take care of the hair is when you have hair to take care of.

For thin falling hair the best remedy known to mankind is Parisian Sage. It is compounded on scientific principles and furnishes to the hair root a nourishment that acts quickly and promptly and causes the hair to grow.

But remember this: It kills the dandruff germ, the pest that appropriates all the natural nourishment that should go to the hair root.

Parisian Sage is sold by Wm. Madill under a positive guarantee to banish dandruff, stop falling hair and itching scalp in two weeks or money back.

It gives to women's hair a lustre and radiance that is most fascinating and causes it to grow abundantly.

Parisian Sage is now sold in every first-class town in Canada. A large, generous bottle costs 50 cents, and the girl with Auburn hair is on every bottle.

System In Farming.

No other business in the world would stand the amount of mismanagement and nonmanagement that the farmer's does. It is time for the farmers to study modern business methods and put them in practice. This is a time of wonderful prosperity on the farm, but greater things are ahead if the farmer will make systematic use of his opportunities.

IN FASHIONLAND.

The Odd Bodice Cool For Summer Days.

SIMPLE LINGERIE BLOUSE.

Though by no means occupying the first place of interest, the odd bodice is still a very important adjunct to a comfortable wardrobe.

It is absolutely required for the street suit of coat and skirt, and fashion requires that the smart bodice match the gown material in color and be made with the utmost care.

White waists are plentiful, materials in these ranging from the coarsest linen to the most diaphanous nets, laces and gauzes, yet even these charming garments, while gaining prestige, fail in the elegance that the gown colored waist will give.

Thin stuffs are the favorite for this waist, such fragile textures as chiffon, crepe de chine and net being used, the garment showing what may be dubbed a tailored finish.

A decided feature with the new waists on shirt waist lines is the horizontal trimming, this being shaped with bands of lace or embroidery between tucks.

Such up and down lines replace the yoke effects to a great degree, and as they induce the slim look still required for all raiment these trimmings are likely to have great vogue.

For all waists, whether practical or fine, the belt is a needed detail, and since the beaded and plain rubber ones fit any figure and hold the waist snugly they are in great demand, exquisite ones in evening shades appearing as frequently as the graver day effects.

The wide, soft ribbon or bias of velvet that fastens with a jaunty bow or rich buckle of some sort is the species of girdling most used, however, for the dressier waist, and there is no end to the pretty possibilities of this style.

Extreme Fashions.

It is to be hoped girls who belong to the business world will not adopt extreme styles of clothes for wear during office hours. For example, however pretty the square or round "Dutch" necks may be, they are entirely inappropriate for wear in an office. And if Dame Grundy does not approve of these for working hours how much more sternly must she frown upon the exaggerations of the style that are sometimes seen, when the Dutch becomes almost decollete, so much below the throat line is it cut. To tell the truth, no girl of refinement would wear one of these extreme models in the street. She knows that such an exposure of neck is suitable only for the house, and her sense of fitness of things would be sadly jarred at appearing so gowned elsewhere.

The girl who goes downtown to business must dress conservatively unless she wishes to be seriously misjudged, for, though she may only be called silly because of the fashions that she adopts, it is far nicer to be treated with dignified consideration than to be the butt for office jests.

It must not be thought that because girls work in offices they are not to have the pleasure of wearing soft and dainty articles. The fact that they do work should make it possible for them to buy pretty dress accessories, but the time to wear them is not in office hours. They have evenings and Sundays to wear fripperies and to "dress."

Conservatism in dress for business hours does not mean unattractiveness or dowdiness. On the contrary, nothing is more becoming and smarter than a plain frock immaculately clean, well put together and worn with distinction. A girl so attired attracts desirable attention by her air of good breeding and style.

The Sunbonnet Babies.

The newest in china dishes for children's use are the sunbonnet designs. The pictures of the little sunbonnets are familiar to us, though no one has ever caught a glimpse of the faces beneath. Neither are they revealed on the cups, plates, etc., but the pictures are there in all their bright colorings, and the little figures will, I am sure, be pleasing to the youngsters using them.

An oatmeal set is only 25 cents, cups and saucers, also mugs the same price. Sugar and cream sets are 50 cents, plates 35 cents and large bread and butter plates 50 cents each.

Peter Kinesale, one of the oldest residents of North Bay, is dead, aged 78.

WEDDINGS.

A quiet wedding took place in St. John's church, Peterborough, on Wednesday last, when Mr. Harry Mellmoyle and Miss Annie Stockdale were united by the Rev. Canon Davidson. Congratulations.

Another wedding took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Pavey, when their daughter, Lillian, was united in marriage to Mr. Roy Northey by Rev. Cruickshanks, of Bridgenorth.

A Courtier's Retort.

Queen Bess had a pretty wit, they say, which she was by no means loath to exercise upon her subjects. She got the worst of it in one verbal duel at least. Observing in the garden a courtier to whom she had promised promotion that had not yet been realized, Her Majesty thrust her head out of the window and called to him:

"What does a man think of, Sir Edward, when he thinks of nothing?"

"Of a woman's promise, your majesty," was Sir Edward's response.

DELIGHTFUL TRIP TO JUBILEE ST. LUKE'S ANNUAL PICNIC

The annual Sunday school picnic of St. Luke's church, was held yesterday to Jubilee Point on the steamer "Otonabee." The weather was delightful, and the whole day and trip proved to give much enjoyment. Jubilee Point was reached about noon, and luncheon was then partaken of. About 2 o'clock the games and races began. The baseball match provoked much excitement and merriment. The captains were Wilfred Adams with Dr. Langfeldt, H. G. Dudiy, Hugh Stewart, A. Lipsett, Will Thompson to assist, and Harold Adams, assisted by H. Phillips, P. B. Doupe, Thos. Starr, Merton Adams, G. Wyatt and A. Thompson. After hard work and excellent batting the first team, under the able leadership of Captain Wilfred Adams, won, the score being 9—6.

Ald. Turner made a most efficient and accomplished umpire, and performed his duties in all cases of disdutes, and his decisions were received with great satisfaction.

The races were classified according to the age of the children, and the following prizes were won.

First prizes—Greta Gill, Douglas Hay, Florence Adams, Ernest Legon, Margaret Turner, Deynecourt Wyatt, Mildred Curtis, Bert Lipsett, Ada Adams and Arthur Lipsett.

Second prizes—May Phillips, Alan Langfeldt, Clara Barton, Otto Langfeldt, Dorothy Langfeldt, Lionel Lipsett, May Cook, Brier Carpenters, Lizzie Manice and M. Adams.

Biscuit race—1, Wilfred Adams; 2, Marjorie Hutchinson.

Boot race—1, Hugh Stewart and Eunice Curtis; 2, Harold Adams and Dorothy Langfeldt.

Young ladies' race—Lizzie Maurice.

Three-legged race—Merton Adams and Hugh Stewart.

Long distance (1-4 miles) race—1, A. Lipsett; 2, M. Adams; 3, Harold Adams.

Quarter mile race—1, Deynicourt Wyatt; 2, Lionel Lipsett; 3, H. Adams.

The prizes were distributed on the homeward trip, which was begun about 5.15, the boat arriving at the lock at 8 o'clock.

BELMONT CLUBHOUSE FORMERLY OPENED WITH BRILLIANT DANCE

The new Belmont clubhouse on the Otonabee was auspiciously opened last night, when a brilliant and successful dance was given by the club to two hundred and fifty guests.

The brilliantly illuminated and beautifully decorated clubhouse made an attractive picture to the large audience of spectators in canoes and launches that idly floated in front of the pavilion during the dance.

The clubhouse was handsomely adorned with bunting, flags and the club colors of mauve and purple, and glittered with the light of myriads of Chinese lanterns. It was surrounded by lanterns also, and lines of them extended as far as the street railway wharf. Streamers were strung across both the pavilion and downstairs ceilings, the dance being held on the two floors, as the dance floor proper was not large enough to accommodate the large number of guests.

One of the most agreeable and highly appreciated features of the dance was the superior music supplied by Mr. Chas. Bodley, of Toronto, who was at the piano in the pavilion, and splendid music was also given by the pianists who played for the dancing on the lower floor.

Preliminary to the dance brief speeches were made by Mr. J. R. Stratton, M.P., and Mr. J. H. McClellan, both gentlemen speaking in congratulatory terms of the excellent arrangements in connection with the event. Mr. Stratton was presented with a silver key to the clubhouse. The Belmont ribbons were attached to the key.

Mayor Morrow and Mr. T. E. Bradburn, M.P., were to have spoken also, but owing to absence from the city were unable to attend.

Dancing was commenced at a quarter to nine, and was continued till 11.30, at which hour refreshments were served in the large buffet tent on the club's property west of the clubhouse. Mr. W. Gray, steward of the club, was in charge of the buffet service and catered in a most acceptable manner.

Dancing was again resumed at 11.45, and continued till 1.30, when the guests left on the special cars.

Much credit is due the committee of the whole club, of which Mr. W. T. Belleghem was the honorary secretary, for the satisfactory and thorough way in which the arrangements were carried out, and for the very enjoyable dance provided.

The patrons and patronesses were Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Stratton, Mr and Mrs. R. Denne, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. McClellan, Mr. and Mrs. F. S. Schnieder and Mayor Morrow.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

The Review does not hold itself responsible for opinions expressed by its correspondents

To the Editor of the Review.

Sir,—There is an editorial in last evening's Review which unjustly attacks the people of the Southern States over recent rioting. The public press reports as many more riots in the north. The writer of it has never been south of the Mason and Dixon line, and hence is not familiar with the race question. I venture to say that twelve months' residence in the black belt of the cotton south would give him a race prejudice that even Ben Tillman would rebuke him for the intensity of. At least Yankees become as pro-southern in their views as any southern born man when they live south.

You say: "The negroes have been abused, called 'niggers,' kept down," etc."

They are not abused to-day in the south, and nearly always were well treated, even in slvery. They have more rights than the Indian. I'll admit they are called "niggers." And why not? They call themselves by that name.

They are kept down as far as social equality is concerned, but who wants to entertain them at their home? Who wants a daughter, or a son, or a sister, or a brother, to marry a negro? Not even their so-called friends in the north, whose friendship is largely in words.

Race prejudice, I am well informed, prohibits negro barbers in Boston, but these people who do not want negro artisans north desire "colored gentlemen" for statesmen down south.

"Why say "The southerner is reaping his reward?" He cannot be blamed for having owned slaves fifty years ago any more than an Englishman can for having owned them seventy-five years ago.

The Yankee is more to blame. It was they who largely brought them from Africa, swapped them for southern tobacco, which was exchanged in England for goods, etc., and then in turn were exchanged for rum. So the trade went merrily on

New England had to be allowed to do this till 1808 to get her to join the Union

Slavery was not profitable in the north and their slaves were sold to the southerner. This was discovered, a writer informs us, after 1808, and only then it was revealed that slavery was wicked.

Many prominent southerners, Washington, Jefferson and Clay, were opposed to slavery. The very year the New England Emancipation Society was formed representatives of 85 southern—mark you—Abolition Societies met in Baltimore to devise ways and means to free the negro.

But New England meddled and the south became pro-slavery. The great Lincoln expressed contempt for the negro and his death was a severe blow to the stricken south. Fanatics like Thaddeaus tSevens got control of the government and enacted that awful reconstruction regime, which is one of the greatest blots on the Anglo-Saxon race.

Negroes are lynched in the north as well as the south, but in the south its generally for that great crime so often committed by the colored people, and I doubt if we had as many of the same number of blacks per thousand we would be much better under the circumstances.

However, there are many southern people opposed to it, and it's unfair to put them all in the same boat.

I do not want to get into a newspaper correspondence over this, and I won't, but I could not allow unjust remarks to pass without notice. Let every white man thank the Lord that we have not several hundred blacks per thousand here.

Yours, etc.,

"DIXIE."

SLEUTHS ON THE TRAIL

Tactics Employed to Find a Wife Who Was Missing.

A man's voice, husky with anxiety, called up police headquarters the other night at about 2:30 a. m. It was a distraught husband begging the police to help him find his wife, who had been missing since 8 o'clock in the evening.

"What's her description," asked the official at the phone—"height, weight?"

"Er—er—about average, I guess," stammered the husband.

"Color of eyes?"

A confused burring sound came back over the wire.

"Blue or brown?" prompted the official.

"I—I don't know!"

"How was she dressed?"

"I guess she wore her coat and hat—she took the dog with her."

"What kind of a dog?"

"Brindle bull terrier, weight fourteen pounds and a half, four dark blotches on his body, shading from gray into white; a round blackish spot over the left eye; white stub of a tail, three white legs, and the right front leg nicely brindled all but the toes; a small nick in his left ear, gold filling in his upper right molar, a silver link collar with"—

"That'll do!" gasped the official. 'We'll find the dog!"—Puck.

Too Late.

At luncheon at Buckingham palace one of the young sons of the Prince of Wales excitedly said to the king, "Oh, grandpapa," when the king interposed with some severity: "Little boys should be seen and not heard. Go on with your luncheon and don't talk."

The small prince collapsed. Presently the king said to him, relenting, "Now you can say what you were going to say."

The little prince, with a world of meaning, said: "Too late, grandpapa. It is too late."

The king said: "Nonsense! If it was worth saying five minutes ago it is worth saying now."

"No, grandpapa," said the little prince. "There was a big green worm in your salad, and you've eaten him."—Ladies' Home Journal.

Hunting For Trouble.

A traveler stopped at a country hotel in Arkansas. There was no water in his room when he arose in the morning, and he went downstairs and asked for some.

"What for?" the landlord asked.

"I want to wash my face."

The landlord directed him to a creek near by, and he went there for his ablutions, followed by several children, who stared at him in amazement.

The traveler washed his face and combed his hair as best he could with a pocket comb.

The children circled about him with wide open eyes. Finally the largest boy said, "Say, mister, do you all take all that trouble with yourself every day?"—Saturday Evening Post.

According to Her Count.

"Yes," said the young wife, "Philip and I have lived together a whole year, and we've never had the slightest quarrel."

"What are you talking about! You and Philip were married seven years ago!"

"To be sure we were, but you forget that he's a traveling salesman."—Chicago Tribune.

As to the Singer.

Tess—She had the nerve to tell me some professor had told her her voice was very good.

Jess — Well, you can never tell. Things are sometimes deceptive.

Tess—What are you talking about?

Jess—Why, her voice may really be better than it sounds.—Catholic Standard and Times.

CANADIAN RIFLEMEN ARE FIRST IN BIG BISLEY EVENT

They Have a Lead of 41 Points in Important Event, With Scotland Second—Sergt. Freeborn of Hamilton is High Man of the Canadian Team.

Bisley, July 8.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—The Canadian team yesterday afternoon won the Mackinnon Cup by 41 points, with Scotland second.

During the competition, Sergt. F. H. Morris, 46th Regiment, Bowmanville, was the only one to make a possible, scoring 10 bull's-eyes at 800 yards, and Sergt. James Freeborn, 13th Regiment, Hamilton, was high man with 146 out of a possible 150.

The competition for the cup was open to teams of twelve from the various parts of the Empire. The cup is a challenge one, given by the late Col. Mackinnon. The distances were at 800, 900 and 1,000 yards, each competitor to have ten shots.

A special commemorative silver bowl will be given by the National Rifle Association to the captain and adjutant and to each member of the Canadian team.

The standing of the teams at the finish was as follows: Canada, 1,567; Scotland, 1,526; England, 1,495; Ireland, 1,492; Australia, 1,483; Guernsey, 1,452; Malay States, 1,449; India, 1,447.

The individual scores made by the Canadians are as follows: Crowe, 139; Clifford, 120; Forrest, 127; Freeborn, 146; McInnes, 124; McHarg, 133; McKie, 133; Morris, 131; Mitchell, 131; Russell, 131; Steele, 114; Steck, 140.

Major Varley of the English team and Private Gray were the only competitors except the Canadians who used the Ross rifle.

Last year Canada won with 1,609, the team including Forrest, Freeborn, Morris, Mitchell, McInnes and Russell, who shot yesterday.

Capt. Crowe and Privates McKie and Steele are from Guelph; Pte. Clifford belongs to the 10th Grenadiers, Toronto; Capt. Forrest is from Vancouver; Sergt. Freeborn and Sergt. Mitchell, 13th Regiment, Hamilton; Sergt. McInnes, Edmonton; Capt. McHarg and Sergt. Morris, Bowmanville; Sergt. Russell is from Ottawa, and Sergt. Steck is from Truro, N.S.

HUBERT LATHAM HAS THRILLING EXPERIENCE IN HIGHER AIR LEVELS

Paris, July 8.—Paulhan's record for the highest flight, 4,250 feet, made at Los Angeles, was beaten yesterday at Bethany Plain, Rheims, by Hubert Latham, who attained a height registered by the barometer on his machine as more than 5,000 feet, and by officials on the ground, who were unable to see the aviator during long periods when he was hidden by clouds, as 1,384 metres (4,540 feet).

Latham announced his intention of reaching 1,500 metres. He made the attempt as the evening fell, rapidly ascending in a gusty wind. Another aviator, M. Morane, went after Latham to contest for a special prize of $1,000.

Morane's ascent was a remarkably quick one. He shot up on his Bleriot monoplane to a height of more than one thousands feet in two and a half minutes, and continued climbing steadily, though more slowly, till he was a tiny spot against the darkening sky. When his barometer showed that he had attained a height of 1,100 metres (3,600 feet) Morane came down in a long sweep.

Latham, meanwhile, continued circling high until he vanished, leaving the spectators without sight of him for fifteen minutes. The rocket announcing the close of the flying was exploded at 7 o'clock, but the sky was still invaded by a daring mortal. Then one man with glasses descried a dark object on the horizon. It was Latham, speeding from the direction of Rheims and gliding earthward like a bird seeking its nest.

On landing near his shed Latham said:

"I came down because I lost my way and all sense of the horizontal. It was all right when I was in the air above the clouds, because, seeing them beneath me, I was able to tell whether my planes were level, but when I got into a fog I had not an idea where the earth lay nor my position in relation to it, so I began to descend, and, emerging from the fog, I found the city of Rheims beneath me."

Another record made at Rheims yesterday was for the longest flight without a stop. This was achieved by M. Olieslagers, a Belgian, who flew 256 kilometres (158 miles) in three hours and twenty minutes. The previous record for an aeroplane flight without a stop was Henry Farman's 234 kilometres.

Olieslagers had a narrow escape from death or injury soon after completing his long flight. While starting a new flight one of the wheels of the machine broke and the aeroplane turned completely over, burying the aviator beneath it. A minute later he emerged, smiling and unscathed.

CANADIANS ARE VICTORIOUS WIN STEWART CUP AT HENLEY

The Four That Experts Said Broke all the Rules That Made for Good Rowing Easily Beats the Mainzer Crew—Big Reception Planned for Victors.

London, July 8.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—In the Henley Regatta yesterday, the crew of the Winnipeg Rowing Club defeated the Mayence, Germany, crew in the final for the Stewards' Plate by two lengths. The time was 7 minutes and 52 seconds.

Capt. Riley of the champion crew, in an interview said he was hopeful of a victory all along, and after a rest in England they will go back to Winnipeg with the Stewards' Cup. The foremost English rowers have showered congratulations on the crew.

In the final heat of the Diamond Sculls, Kinnear, Kensington, beat Lucas easily in 8 minutes 51 seconds.

The Pegs won their heat from the Thames' crew yesterday. It was windy and rough, but the westerners shot right to the front, and, taking no chances, won all the way.

At Henley yesterday morning there was much despondency in English rowing circles, arising from the fact that in all races wherein there were foreign entries the foreigners would contest in the finals. In one, viz., the Stewards' Cup, there were no English crew at all, and the home-bred oarsmen were taken to task for not training until 10 days or a fortnight before such an important event as Henley week. Altogether the critics, influenced perhaps by the depressing weather, prepared themselves for the worst. Fortunately, the worst did not happen, as Kinnear of Kensington easily beat Lucas of Germany in the Diamonds' final, and the Leander couple outpaced the Dutch crew for the silver Randolph goblets. In the Stewards' Cup race the English crew had no show, yet easily the next best thing happened, and the Winnipeg four quite outclassed their gigantic German rivals, and victory, at all events, rested within the Empire.

On starting the Canadians struck a stroke of 44 to the Germans 41, and were first to show ahead. Leaving Temple Island, they led by a quarter in the next furlong, but then steered a bit queerly and the Germans caught them at Fawley court, which they reached in three minutes 45 seconds. Just as the Germans were making another spurt the pace told on their number three, Corder, who "cracked" and the Canucks went home with swinging stroke, not in the least distressed, amid as much enthusiasm as the chilled rain bedraggled spectators could achieve.

It is interesting to note that the trophy leave England for the first time.

The press is immensely pleased at Winnipeg's success, pointing out that the race presented many features in addition to it being the first time that the cup will leave England.

The Germans were the heaviest crew that ever rowed in the event, and they previously had an unbesmirched record. Prior to the race they were very optimistic concerning their chances. They were twelve stone in the aggregate heavier than the Canadians. The difference between the crews is perhaps aptly described by the expression "fat" and "fit," but Mayence in form at Henley is certainly able to beat any other crew that entered.

The hearty congratulations which the victors received are consequently all the more cordial and deserved, and the hope is widely expressed that Canada will continue to send crews to Henley, where they may be assured of a warm welcome.

In respect to the criticism of Winnipegg's style, which proved woefully baseless by their crisp, clean action in the race, it is pointed out that instead of 21-inch slides, of which they only used 18 inches, they have a slide of 28 inches and use 24, probably more than any other crew which competed at Henley.

PICTURES PROHIBITED

Order-in-Council is Passed Barring Cinematograph Reproductions of the Reno Mill Being Shown in the Province.

Toronto, July 8.—The Jeffries-Johnson fight pictures and all other of a pugilistic nature are banned from this province. An order in council was passed by the Ontario Cabinet yesterday afternoon, amending the police regulations to prohibit them.

Sir James Whitney said: "The matter was taken up by the Cabinet this afternoon, and considered, along with certain other questions, for the first time, and the regulations with relation to moving pictures have been amended so as to prohibit pictures of prize fights."

Copies of the new regulation will be sent out to the heads of the various police forces in the province, as well as to the owners of moving picture shows. The penalty for a breach of the regulations in this respect is a fine of $50, and an additional fine of $25 for each subsequent day the pictures are shown, and in default of payment the offender goes to jail for three months. There is the further penalty for violations of the regulations that the owner of the show will lose his license.

Chatham, Ont., and Lynchburg, Va., and most of the towns of Kentucky have been added to the list of cities which have barred the fight pictures. Agitation against them are also being waged in Washington, Memphis, Pittsburg, Boston, Philadelphia, Niagara Falls, Calcutta, India, and London, Eng.

The loss to the moving picture industry is placed at $2,000,000.

An endeavor is also being made to keep Johnson off the vaudeville stages.

TOO WEAK TO DO THE WORK

Ottawa, July 8.—In the annual report of the directors of surveys of the geological branch of the Department of Mines, just issued, the statement is made that the staff of the survey branch is too weak to cope with the pressing work of such an extensive country as Canada. In order to overcome the difficulty it has been necessary to engage outside experts.

During the past season D. D. Cairnes discovered a new occurrence of coal in the Whitehorse district of British Columbia. D. B. Dowling found a new and apparently important coal basin in Alberta.

W. H. Collins has reported on Montreal River district, which includes Gowganda and Maple Mountain districts. He states that the outlook appears to be satisfactory, though not equal to the sanguine expectations. The widespread distribution of ore offers serious disadvantages to economical mining. In regard to the Larder Lake district, M. E. Wilson reports that gold values are confined almost entirely to stringers of quartz, which in many instances contain no gold, or too little for profitable mining.

REGIMENTS MUST RECRUIT

Kingston, July 8.—Something will be doing next year in military circles if half strength regiments are brought into Barriefield camp, as they were this year. Commanding officers must get busy and keep their regiments up to strength, or else they may be asked to turn their duties over to others.

Another Cancer Cure.

Rome, July 8.—Prof. Fichöra has announced to the Institute of Experimental Hygiene the discovery of a cure for cancer. The cure consists of injections of serum from a human embryo.

Pioneer Dead.

Peterboro, July 8.—Yesterday morning A. H. Peck died, aged 89. For years he was treasurer of Ashburnham and was a brother-in-law of the late Judge Armour.

HIS SPOUSE RAN AWAY

Montreal Man Traced Her to Trenton—Shot Her and Her Lover.

Trenton, N.J., July 8—Aristide Cournoyer, a French-Canadian moving picture owner, who lives in Montreal, last night shot his wife, Marie, 32 years of age, and Charles Horn, aged 42 years, with whom she eloped last December. Horn will die, according to the physicians of St. Francis Hospital, where the couple were brought, and but little hope is held for the recovery of the woman. Mrs. Cournoyer is the mother of two boys, aged 8 and 9 years. Horn has a wife and family living in Montreal.

After the shooting Cournoyer declared: "I shot them because they broke up my pretty home. It was an act of justice and mercy. I am satisfied."

Cournoyer tells a pathetic story. He was married about ten years ago, and not until his wife eloped with her paramour last December did he suspect that anyone but he was in her affections.

FAMOUS PAPER IN DIFFICULTIES

Boston, July 8.—On petition of the International Paper Co., Judge Colt, in the United States Circuit Court yesterday appointed John M. Morris of New York, an official of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, and Charles F. Weed, an attorney of this city, receivers of The Boston Herald Co. Including a bond issue of $1,700,000, the indebtedness is about $2,200,000.

The court authorized the receivers to issue $50,000 in certificates, to enable the business to be continued.

For many years The Boston Herald was one of the best known newspapers in the country. It was established in 1846.

Air Line Will Continue.

Frankfort, July 8.—The directors of the Passenger Airship Co. has decided that the Zeppelin VI., now at Friedrickshafen, be transferred to Baden-Baden, to carry out the program for passenger trips during the summer. A substitute for the destroyed Deutschland will be constructed as quickly as possible.

DISASTER IN TRAIL OF FIRES

Port Arthur, July 8.—In spite of improved weather conditions, reports are still coming in that bush fires are burning. The total damage will run into hundreds of thousands for this district alone.

From Ombabika, on the line of the National Transcontinental Railway, Chief Fire Ranger Bliss reports the following damage by forest fires: Pembick Contracting Co. at Trout Lake, two camps destroyed, one powder houes with much powder and dynamite, Anderson & Mann, contractors, at Tunnel Lake, two camps burned, team horses suffocated, all supplies burned. Harvey & Bloomfield, contractors, powder house destroyed, Morris & McCaskill, contractors, storehouse and thirty thousand in supplies burned. Nepigon Construction Co., camp burned. At Camp Creek, camps of Simmons and of Murray & Co. destroyed.

Fire rangers in O'Connor and Conmee Townships have also compiled lists of losses by settlers. These number 25, individual losses running as high as $3,000.

DECLARATION BILL TO BE PASSED

London, July 8.—In the Commons, Premier Asquith announced that the declaration bill would be passed before the House rose. The nonconformist members of the House, numbering one hundred, decided to present a memorial to Asquith, and to repeat their declaration that they think it sufficient that the King should declare his adherence to Protestantism, not to the Church of England.

In the Church of the Blessed Sacrament, New York city, recently, Senorita Juana Rubio, daughter of Senor Pedro V. Rubio, was married to Senor Carlos Ernesto Ferreyros. The Rev. Dr. Matthew A. Taylor performed the ceremony.

The bride, who had no attendants, entered the church with her father. She wore a gown of white satin, draped with white chiffon, and a tulle veil, and carried a bouquet of lilies-of-the-valley. Mr. Frederick Bergman, of New York, was best man. After the ceremony there was a reception at the home of Senor Rubio, No. 100 West Seventy-sixth street.

Senor Ferreyros, who is Secretay of the Peruvian Legation in Panama, was at one time stationed at Washington. He left New York with his bride on June 30th for Panama.

PRIEMER'S START WAS VERY QUIET

No Public Send-off Given Laurier at Ottawa,

Ottawa, July 8.—The departure of Sir Wilfrid Laurier on his two months' political trip to western Canada yesterday afternoon was a quiet affair, no attempt being made at a demonstration; that is reserved for the return to the capital early in September.

The party at the station was not a large one. It included Lady Laurier, who accompanied Sir Wilfrid to the station in their auto, the Ministers of the crown still in the city, a number of close personal friends of the Premier, and a group of press correspondents. Lady Laurier will go to Banff at a later date and return east with Sir Wilfrid in September.

Sir Wilfrid's habit of remembering everybody was quite in evidence. As he shook hands with the newspaper men present, he expressed to each a word of regret that they were unable to accompany him, and, just before boarding the car, he remembered that he had said good-bye to everybody but his chauffeur, so back he came off the steps of the car, and going up to the lad with the peaked cap he said, "Good-bye, Charlie, be a good boy until I come back."

Sir Wilfrid was accompanied by Senator Gibson and G. M. Macdonald, M.P. He will be joined at Port Arthur by Hon. Geo. P. Graham and Fred Pardee, chief Liberal whip.

Members of the technical education commission spent the day working out the details of their Canadian itinery. It was decided to make a start at Halifax on July 15. About 25 industrial centres in the Maritime Provinces will be covered, and the commission will jump to Toronto in order to be there during exhibition week.

COFFIN MADE FROM PET TREE

Muncie, Ind., July 8.—A giant oak tree that had been watched from a sapling 75 years ago to its present size, will encase the body of Cary Fenwick, aged 77. His sons yesterday cut down the great tree that grew in the dooryard of the family homestead, and they are fashioning it into a coffin. Upholsterers will smooth off the roughness of the interior, but the outside and the lid will be of the unfinished wood.

Fenwick, who was a prosperous farmer, had always loved the giant oak, and his will made the request that he be buried in a coffin made from the tree.

SMALL BOY WAS DROWNED IN POND

Toronto, July 8.—Eleven-year-old Louis Howard, 278 Jones avenue, was drowned in a large pond in the Russell brick yards on Blake street at 7.30 last night. Coroner Pickering may hold an inquest.

The lad, with others, was bathing in the pond, which is caused by a spring in a disused clay diggings. When some distance from the end he cried out and sank. The other youngsters shouted for help. J. Lebarr, 436 Jones avenue, drew the body from the water, and with Mrs. Chapman, who lives nearby, worked on the lad, but could not revive him.

70 THOUSAND GO ON STRIKE

New York, July 8.—Obeying the strike order issued by their leaders, thousands of women cloak and garment workers in this city struck yesterday afternoon for higher wages and improved working conditions. The strike order went into effect at two o'clock, and an hour later it was said at the union headquarters that the call to walk out was being generally observed. The prediction was made that 70,000 operators would have quit work.

MANITOBA ELECTIONS

Winnipeg, July 8.—The features of the past couple of days' campaign in Manitoba is the stumping tour of R. A. Bonnar, solicitor of the Grain Growers' Association and Independent candidate in Assiniboia, in the interests of the Liberals.

Bonnar claims that the Government is insincere in its policy of Government ownership of elevators, and at the close of the elections will abandon the scheme. Bonnar has always been a Conservative and was spoken of as a Conservative candidate for Winnipeg at the last Dominion elections. Bonnar says that he was offered a Conservative nomination, but refused.

Last night Hon. Robert Rogers vigorously denied this and said that Bonnar had come to him and offered himself, "body, soul and breeches," provided they would see that he was not defeated in Assiniboia.

ONE MAN DIES FROM INJURIES

Orillia, July 8.—John McAuley, who was injured in the explosion of the Standard Chemical Works at Longford Mills, died yesterday morning. He was too severely hurt to be taken to the hospital here.

A. G. Peuchen, president of the Standard Chemical Co., interviewed regarding the fire says: "We wish to state that there was no terrific explosion, and that the loss has been only $500 on the building, $700 on the machinery and one small tank of material, valued at less than $500. There was only one man seriously injured, and the rest are getting along nicely."

FIVE HUNDRED MEN ARE OUT

Winnipeg, July 8.—Five hundred C.N.R. carmen joined the ranks of the strikers yesterday just before noon, quitting work quietly and without any demonstration. Immediately after they left a large squad of police arrived on the scene, but no trouble is anticipated. The carmen ask for increased wages and the restoration of several minor privileges, including a half hour monthly for the cashing of pay checks, one hour off on Saturday and time and a half for work on Sundays and holidays, enjoyed while the road was operated by the Northern Pacific, and which was guaranteed to them, but cancelled.

Shot Her Husband.

Chicago, July 8.—Mrs. Henry Mulsaw, goaded to desperation by the alleged brutality and unfaithfulness of her husband, a street car conductor, yesterday shot and fatally wounded the latter and their three-year-old daughter and then killed herself by taking carbolic acid.

Heavy Earthquake Shock.

Washington, July 8.—A severe earthquake shock, continuing from 12.01 to 12.93 yesterday morning, was recorded by the Georgetown University Observatory. The chief motion was east and west and was the heaviest recorded since Jan. 1.

Open Naval Academy Oct. 1.

Ottawa, July 8.—Arrangements are being made to open the Naval Academy at Halifax about Oct. 1.

WILL TRY NORTHWEST PASSAGE

Montreal, July 8.—The Arctic will not sail until Saturday to allow Hon. L. P. Brodeur to say God speed to the northern adventurer. There is greater significance to the trip than is generally supposed. The Arctic is sailing under sealed orders from the Government. But enough is known to say tha among other things attempted will be the navigating of the northwest passage to find out if this channel from the Atlantic to the Pacific is possible for ships of any size.

First Blood for Strikers.

Montreal, July 8.—The striking masons and bricklayers won first blood yesterday, fifty small contractors having signed a two years' contract with the men, some 500 thus going back to work. The larger contractors declare their intention of holding out.

APPROVES JAPANESE CONVENTION

St. Petersburg, July 8.—The Nova Vremya, in a leading article, expresses great expectations from the Russo-Japanese convention. The Vremya considers it a foundation for durable peace in the Far East, serving as a barrier against encroachments of outsiders in that sphere. Russo-Japanese neighborly relations will relieve Russia and Japan of the burden of heavy armaments, enabling Russia to complete the Amur Railroad and continue colonization on a vast scale.

MRS. A. JONES MYSTERIOUSLY DISAPPEARS

Salisbury, July 8.—Great excitement prevails at River Glade, a village near here, over the disappearance yesterday morning of Mrs. Alfred Jones, a highly-respected woman. Mrs. Jones arose about 3.30 yesterday morning, procured some milk, filled her baby's bottle and fed it. She then partially dressed herself and went out. Her husband, missing her shortly after, went in search. He traced her by the dew on the grass to a point in the woods where the trail was lost.

Tried to Kill Foreman.

Cobalt, July 8.—Fire completely gutted the cookhouse of the Nipissing mine early yesterday morning.

It is reported that seven Finlanders, who were discharged from the Quinlan property in South Lorraine, returned yesterday and attacked the foreman with intent to kill. Constable McKay and deputies rushed to the scene in a special speed launch.

New Duration Record.

Bethany Plains, Rheims, July 8.—M. Olieslagers yesterday broke the record for duration and distance at the aviation meeting in progress here. He remained in the air two hours thirty minutes and 39 seconds and covered a distance of 158 35-100 miles. During the speed contest Leon Morane, the French aviator, covered 20 kilometres (12.42 miles) in 12 minutes and 42 seconds.

FRIDAY, JULY 8, 1910.

THE NEGRO

No, they don't want the fight pictures. But had James J. Jeffries landed on Johnson's jaw, they would have been sufficiently edifying to have been allowed. Last night a gentleman signing himself Dixie took exception to the editorial in these columns that took the part of the negro in his miserable condition generally, and said that Uncle Sam was reaping what he had sown. He went back a hundred years to try and disprove a present day argument, that kindness is effectual, and that the negro is what he is because he has been denied proper privileges and and generally abused.

The United States is a poor colonizer. Old England quietly rules over her hundreds of millions, the mistress of the world. The United States had a tremendous time with the Phillipinos, and the negro problem has scarcely commenced. They will not always be cowed and kept off the sidewalk in life's great way. The Americans need not marry them into their families, or invite the dusky maidens to five o'clock teas. It is perhaps much better to marry gout and a title but they can apply the golden rule. That never failed and never will, no matter whether it is extended to an elephant, an Hottentot, to a Hindu, or a negro. We must admit that the United States is a great country, however, and that it never does things by halves. There were only 28 killed and 1,785 injured on the glorious Fourth celebration this year, as compared with 44 killed and 2,361 injured last year.

OPPORTUNITY

There is an advertisement lying on the desk—"Opportunity knocks but once." That is what it says. Don't take any stock in that, for opportunity is always knocking. The trouble with most of us is, that we spend so much time regretting past and lost opportunities that we do not hear the knock to-day. Each morning's sun brings with it some chance to us all. It may be that our opportunity reaches no further than our home, our work bench, or our place in the store, but opportunity is in these places, and so is joy, recreation, peace, power and happiness. We do not see our growth. Can we hear the trees grow? Can we see the fruit ripen? Can we observe it take on color and form. It is quietly accomplished. Many of us are not content unless we hear the noise. There is no noise in the wheat field, yet by it the world is fed. There is little noise in the real accomplishment. In the wars of history the noise is in the battle, but in the quiet alone are the preparations made by the general and staff. We are too discontented. Opportunity is here, there, everywhere, every day of the year.

And our holidays, we do not need to go to Europe to enjoy them. At our door is beauty of field and wood, of lake and river. In another column of the Review is a letter from a German in eulogy of Stoney Lake and Mount Julian. He has travelled the world over. We see little beauty in the homeland, our minds lose much of the present and nearby pleasure in yearning for the uncertainties of the far away.

MIDY

A POLITICIAN'S FOLLY

The Montreal Witness is a solid Liberal newspaper, but it has recently been driving one more nail into the coffin that holds the idea that the eastern extension of the Transcontinental Railway is likely to be anything but a politician's folly. In its article, which appeared on June 22, the Witness gave the distances from Montreal to various ports reached by the G.T.R. as follows:

To Portland	297 miles
To Boston	335 miles
To Providence (nearly)	400 miles

It then continued as follows:

"Contrast these distances with those of the Grand Trunk Pacific and Intercolonial Railway from this city to St. John, N.B., and the irony of the whole G.T.P. contract shows itself. Being built primarily to develop Canadian winter ports, the Grand Trunk Pacific can hardly overcome the enormous difference in mileage from Montreal or Quebec to St. John—about 759 miles from Montreal and nearly 600 from Quebec, as compared with 481 miles via the I.C.R. from Montreal and St. John, and 297 from Montreal to Portland, and 335 or 340 miles from Montreal to Boston, via the Grand Trunk Railway. In addition to this the building of the eastern division of the G. T. Pacific may, and probably will, take practically all the traffic the Intercolonial Railway now obtains from the Grand Trunk at Montreal; and, to crown all this, the Government has paid half cost of double-tracking the Grand Trunk between St. Lambert and St. Rosalie Junction, a distance of thirty-one miles, for the mutual benefit of the I.C.R. and G.T.R., but which, as far as the former is concerned, as we have said, can be of little use as soon as the Grand Trunk Pacific starts to cut into the I.C.R. traffic.

"The Government can hardly control the traffic over the Grand Trunk Pacific, should a shipper route his goods, and this is where the criticism of the leader of the Opposition will make itself felt in the minds of those who have all along claimed that the eastern division of the Grand Trunk Pacific was being built by the Government, not for commercial but for political purposes. If in winter a shipper in Winnipeg routes his goods for export via the Grand Trunk Pacific and Grand Trunk, the goods will go via Portland; if in summer, they will come to Montreal, probably by the Great Lakes from Port Arthur to Midland or Depot Harbor and Grand Trunk to Montreal. The same applies on westbound traffic. The Government can only control traffic that is not routed. The Hon. Mr. Fielding, however, believes that the patriotism of Canadian business men will furnish the line with lots of traffic, but patriotism is not all.

HE SPEAKS AGAIN

Dr. Osler has spoken again. This eminent Canadian, it will be remembered, once said in jest that men over sixty years of age should be choloroformed. He was famous before, and this added noteriety, as well as fame. Dr. Osler speaks this time on faith. He says that it always has been an essential factor in the practice of medicine. Phenomenal, even cures that could be called miraculous, he says, are not uncommon. He says:—

"Faith has always been an essential factor in the practise of medicine. One good result of the recent development of mental healing has been to call attention to its great value as a measure to be carefully and scientifically applied in suitable cases. My experience has been that of the unconscious rather than the deliberate faith healer. Phenomenal, even what could be called miraculous, cures are not very uncommon. Like others, I have had cases, and one of which under suitable conditions could have been worthy of a shrine or made the germ of a pilgrimage." The important thing seems to be the faith on the part of the patient, and it does not seem to make much difference whether the faith is excited by the doctor or his medicine, a shrine, a relic or a medicine woman.

But when Dr. Osler speaks of cures by faith we know at once that his authority ceases. The life of Muller was a life of faith, and the supporting of the hundreds of orphans at Bristol. The lives of hundreds of noble men and women, marvelous for their faith, would be too deep by far for sounding, for this eminent man, who, while he understands anatomy and human ills and pains, yet is on the level with the humblest when he approaches the mysterious connection with the unknown world about us.

WE DON'T LIKE IT

Peterborough is thus far without improved roadways, but the baby city is waking up. The party left last night for London, and will go on to Detroit to see how roads are kept in those cities.

This interesting bit of news is clipped from the Toronto World. Some of these Toronto reporters give us a pain. They blow in from the village and give the city editor many uneasy hours before they are rid of the hayseed. The fellow who wrote this never was in Peterborough. Peterborough has the best roads of any city in the Dominion, bar none. Nature is in league with us, and, aided by common sense, the highways are a pleasure to drive upon. We have the prettiest park in Canada for any city or town anything like its size. Victoria Park is the name. We have splendid stores, large factories, good health, much water power, and all the rest, and we don't appreciate this statement handed to us through the bullheadedness of that reporter on the Toronto World a little bit.

A LIVE ISSUE

We are glad to know that Peterborough officials have gone abroad to look into the question of the best kind of a road. But once more we would ask, what about the garbage system? This is a live issue.

In Camden, N.J., recently, Chancellor Pitney in chambers rebuked a law firm for charging a fee of $75,000 in a case involving $40,000. Perhaps the law firm was innocent. It might have been given to understand that the case involved $75,000.

B. C.
Halifax Herald.

An old negro preacher in Kentucky was dilating upon events in the Bible which had a zoological trend. Then he discussed the incident of Jonah and the whale, Balaam's ass, and finally the exploit of Daniel, who entered the den of lions and emerged unharmed.

Finally one of the younger negroes rose up and inquired:

"Say, parson, wuz dem lions jest like the kind we has now?"

"Cose not, cose not," retorted the preacher, irritated at having his discourse interrupted. "Dey was B. C., meaning befo circuses."

AT INTERESTING TOUR

Montreal Gazette.

Sir Wilfred Laurier to-day starts from Ottawa on a trip through the western provinces. He will leave a capital engaged in discussing the most recent exposure of graft in the administration of a government department. He will reach Winnipeg about the time a close has been put to a local election campaign in which a prominent place was given to the discussion of allegations of attempted graft in connection with the appointment of judges, made by members of his party in regard to members of his party. At St. Boniface he will see the terminals of the National Transcontinental Railway, built on land for which the country paid a high price to men who just a little time before had bought it from the original owners at a low price. Going farther west he will pass the homesteads of settlers whose owners paid a big price for the land on which they are built, though it was sold by the Government at a low price to the men who sold it to the settler and grew rich in the process. The houses he will see will, in many cases, be of timber cut on limits, the transfer of which to their present holders under his government was attended by circumstances that gave rise to charges of misconduct against his officials, which charges were never explained away. Among the foothills of the Rockies he will come upon ranches for the leases of which the country received a small bonus through the holders, dealing with favored middlemen, had to pay a heavy bonus. If he takes a trip through the Crow's Nest country he will come across coal mines on lands given as aid for the construction of a railway, which lands did not go to the company which did build the railway, but were held to make rich some men whom he personally knows. In Alberta he may meet the man he may be said to have selected to form the first Government of the new province, but who had to resign because he was not capable of grasping the questions submitted to him, and the people decided that he should be replaced. In British Columbia Sir Wilfrid Laurier will be welcomed by a provincial premier who is where he is because he opposes the policy the Ottawa Government represents. Sir Wilfrid Laurier will also meet many people who admire him and will cheer for him. If, amid their acclaim, he thinks of what is here referred to, and there is much more of the same kind, he may find in it material for some quiet and profitable thinking and may understand why so many, of the east as well as of the west, think it is time he and his colleagues gave way to men who, for a time at least, will be likely to make a record in which there will be fewer things to cause people shame.

The Mystery of The Yellow Room

By GASTON LEROUX

COPYRIGHT, 1908 By BRENTANO'S

"That revelation staggered me. I tried to regain my balance by going over the evidences previously traced, but which had diverted my mind and led me away from Frederic Larsan. What were these evidences?

"First.—I had seen the unknown in Mlle. Stangerson's chamber. On going to Frederic Larsan's room I had found Larsan sound asleep.

"Second.—The ladder.

"Third.—I had placed Frederic Larsan at the end of the 'off turning' gallery and had told him that I would rush into Mlle. Stangerson's room to try to capture the murderer. Then I returned to Mlle. Stangerson's chamber, where I had seen the unknown.

"The first evidence did not disturb me much. It is likely that when I descended from my ladder, after having seen the unknown in Mlle. Stangerson's chamber, Larsan had already finished what he was doing there. Then, while I was re-entering the chateau, Larsan went back to his own room and, undressing himself, went to sleep.

"Nor did the second evidence trouble me. If Larsan were the murderer he could have no use for a ladder, but the ladder might have been placed there to give an appearance to the murderer's entrance from without the chateau, especially as Larsan had accused Darzac and Darzac was not in the chateau that night. Further, the ladder might have been placed there to facilitate Larsan's flight in case of absolute necessity.

"But the third evidence puzzled me altogether. Having placed Larsan at the end of the 'off turning' gallery, I could not explain how he had taken advantage of the moment when I had gone to the left wing of the chateau to find M. Stangerson and Daddy Jacques to return to Mlle. Stangerson's room. It was a very dangerous thing to do. He risked being captured, and he knew it. And he was very nearly captured. He had not had time to regain his post, as he had certainly hoped to do. He had, then, a very strong reason for returning to his room. As for myself, when I sent Daddy Jacques to the end of the 'right' gallery I naturally thought that Larsan was still at his post. Daddy Jacques in going to his post had not looked when he passed to see whether Larsan was at his post or not.

"What, then, was the urgent reason which had compelled Larsan to go to the room a second time? I guessed it to be some evidence of his presence there. He had left something very important in that room. What was it? And had he recovered it? I begged Mme. Bernier, who was accustomed to clean the room, to look, and she found a pair of eyeglasses—this pair, M. President!"

And Rouletabille drew the eyeglasses, of which we know, from his pocket.

"When I saw these eyeglasses," he continued, "I was utterly nonplused. I had never seen Larsan wear eyeglasses. What did they mean? Suddenly I exclaimed to myself, 'I wonder if he is long sighted!' I had never seen Larsan write. He might then be long sighted. The police would certainly know and also know if the glasses were his. Such evidence would be damning. That explained Larsan's return. I know now that Larsan or Ballmeyer is long sighted and that these glasses belonged to him.

"I now made one mistake. I was not satisfied with the evidence I had obtained. I wished to see the man's face. Had I refrained from this the second terrible attack would not have occurred."

"But," asked the president, "why should Larsan go to Mlle. Stangerson's room at all? Why should be twice attempt to murder her?"

"Because he loves her, M. President."

"That is certainly a reason, but"—

"It is the only reason. He was madly in love, and because of that and—other things he was capable of committing any crime."

"Did Mlle. Stangerson know this?"

"Yes, monsieur, but she was ignorant of the fact that the man who was pursuing her was Frederic Larsan; otherwise, of course, he would not have been allowed to be at the chateau. I noticed when he was in her room after the incident in the gallery that he kept himself in the shadow and that he kept his head bent down. He was looking for the lost eyeglasses. Mlle. Stangerson knew Larsan under another name."

"M. Darzac," asked the president, "did Mlle. Stangerson in any way confide in you on this matter? How is it that she has never spoken about it to any one? If you are innocent, she would have wished to spare you the pain of being accused."

"Mlle. Stangerson told me nothing," replied M. Darzac.

"Does what this young man say appear probable to you?" the president asked.

"Mlle. Stangerson has told me noting," he replied stolidly.

"How do you explain that on the night of the murder of the keeper," the president asked, turning to Rouletabille, "the murderer brought back the papers stolen from M. Stangerson? How do you explain how the murderer gained entrance into Mlle. Stangerson's locked room?"

"The last question is easily answered. A man like Larsan or Ballmeyer could have had made duplicate keys. As to the documents, I think Larsan had not intended to steal them at first. Closely watching mademoiselle with the purpose of preventing her marriage with M. Robert Darzac, he one day followed her and monsieur into the department store. There he got possession of the reticule which she lost or left behind. In that reticule was a key with a brass head. He did not know there was any value attached to the key till the advertisement in the newspapers revealed it. He then wrote to mademoiselle, as the advertisement requested. No doubt he asked for a meeting, making known to her that he was also the person who had for some time pursued her with his love. He received no answer. He went to the postoffice and ascertained that his letter was no longer there. He had already taken complete stock of M. Darzac, and, having decided to go to any lengths to gain Mlle. Stangerson, he had planned that, whatever might happen, M. Darzac, his hated rival, should be the man to be suspected.

"I do not think that Larsan had as yet thought of murdering Mlle. Stangerson; but, whatever he might do, he made sure that M. Darzac should suffer for it. He was very nearly of the same height as M. Darzac and had almost the same sized feet. It would not be difficult to take an impression of M. Darzac's footprints and have similar boots made for himself. Such tricks were mere child's play for Larsan or Ballmeyer.

"Receiving no reply to his letter, he determined, since Mlle. Stangerson would not come to him, that he would go to her. His plan had long been formed. He had made himself master of the plans of the chateau and the pavilion, so that one afternoon while M. and Mlle. Stangerson were out for a walk and while Daddy Jacques was away he entered the latter by the vestibule window. He was alone and, being in no hurry, he began examining the furniture. One of the pieces, resembling a safe, had a very small keyhole. That interested him! He had with him the little key with the brass head and, associating one with the other, he tried the key in the lock. The door opened. He saw nothing but papers. They must be very valuable to have been put away in a safe the key to which he knew to be of so much importance. Perhaps a thought of blackmail occurred to him as a useful possibility in helping him in his designs on Mlle. Stangerson. He quickly made a parcel of the papers and took it to the lavatory in the vestibule. Between the time of his first examination of the pavilion and the night of the murder of the keeper Larsan had had time to find out what those papers contained. He could do nothing with them, and they were rather compromising. That night he took them back to the chateau. Perhaps he hoped that by returning the papers he might obtain some gratitude from Mlle. Stangerson. But whatever may have been his reasons, he took the papers back and so rid himself of an incumbrance."

Rouletabille coughed. It was evident to me that he was embarrassed. He had arrived at a point where he had to keep back his knowledge of Larsan's true motive. The explanation he had given had evidently been unsatisfactory. Rouletabille was quick enough to note the bad impression he had made, for, turning to the president, he said, "And now we come to the explanation of the mystery of the yellow room!"

• • • • • • •

A movement of chairs in the court, with a rustling of dresses and an energetic whispering of "Hush!" showed the curiosity that had been aroused.

"It seems to me," said the president, "that the mystery of the yellow room, M. Rouletabille, is wholly explained by your hypothesis. Frederic Larsan is the explanation. We have merely to substitute him for M. Robert Darzac. Evidently the door of the yellow room was open at the time M. Stangerson was alone and that he allowed the man who was coming out of his daughter's chamber to pass without arresting him—perhaps at her entreaty to avoid all scandal."

"No, M. President," protested the young man. "You forget that, stunned by the attack made on her, Mlle. Stangerson was not in a condition to have made such an appeal. Nor could she have locked and bolted herself in her room. You must also remember that M. Stangerson has sworn that the door was not open."

"That, however, is the only way in which it can be explained. The yellow room was as closely shut as an iron safe. To use your own expression, it was impossible for the murderer to make his escape either naturally or supernaturally. When the room was broken into he was not there! He must, therefore, have escaped."

"That does not follow."

"What do you mean?"

"There was no need for him to escape—if he was not there!"

"Not there!"

"Evidently not. He could not have been there if he were not found there."

"But what about the evidences of his presence?" asked the president.

"That, M. President, is where we have taken hold of the wrong end. From the time Mlle. Standerson shut herself in her room to the time her door was burst open it was impossible for the murderer to escape. He was not found because he was not there during that time."

"But the evidences?"

"They have led us astray. In reasoning on this mystery we must not take them to mean what they apparently mean. Why do we conclude the murderer was there? Because he left his tracks in the room! Good! But may he not have been there before the room was locked? Nay; he must have been there before. Let us look into the matter of these traces and see if they do not point to my conclusion.

"After the publication of the article in the Matin and my conversation with the examining magistrate on the journey from Paris to Epinay-sur-Orge I was certain that the yellow room had been hermetically sealed, so to speak, and that consequently the murderer had escaped before Mlle. Stangerson had gone into her chamber at midnight.

"At the time I was much puzzled. Mlle. Stangerson could not have been her own murderer, since the evidences pointed to some other person. The assassin, then, had come before. If that were so, how was it that mademoiselle had been attacked after, or, rather, that she appeared to have been attacked after? It was necessary for me to reconstruct the occurrence and make of it two phases, each separated from the other in time by the space of several hours—one phase in which Mlle. Stangerson had really been attacked, the other phase in which those who heard her cries thought she was being attacked. I had not then examined the yellow room. What were the marks on Mlle. Stangerson? There were marks of strangulation and the wound from a hard blow on the temple. The marks of strangulation did not interest me much. They might have been made before, and Mlle. Stangerson could have concealed them by a collaret or any similar article of apparel. I had to suppose this the moment I was compelled to reconstruct the occurrence by two phases. Mlle. Stangerson had, no doubt, her own reasons for so doing, since she had told her father nothing of it and had made it understood to the examining magistrate that the attack had taken place in the night during the second phase. She was forced to say that; otherwise her father would have questioned her as to her reason for having said nothing about it.

"But I could not explain the blow on the temple. I understood it even less when I learned that the mutton bone had been found in her room. She could not hide the fact that she had been struck on the head, and yet that wound appeared evidently to have been inflicted during the first phase, since it required the presence of the murderer! I thought Mlle. Stangerson had hidden the wound by arranging her hair in bands on her forehead.

"As to the mark of the hand on the wall, that had evidently been made during the first phase—when the murderer was really there. All the traces of his presence had naturally been left during the first phase—the mutton bone, the black footprints, the Basque cap, the handkerchief, the blood on the wall, on the door and on the floor. If those traces were still all there they showed that Mlle. Stangerson, who desired that nothing should be known, had not yet had time to clear them away. This led me to the conclusion that the two phases had taken place one shortly after the other. She had not had the opportunity, after leaving her room and going back to the laboratory to her father, to get back again to her room and put it in order. Her father was all the time with her, working. So that after the first phase she did not re-enter her chamber till midnight. Daddy Jacques was there at 10 o'clock, as he was every night, but he went in merely to close the blinds and light the night light. Owing to her disturbed state of mind she had forgotten that Daddy Jacques would go into her room and had begged him not to trouble himself. All this was set forth in the article in the Matin. Daddy Jacques did go, however, and in the dim light of the room saw nothing.

NOW AND THEN

How dear to my heart goes the song of the bucket, but the bucket's outdated, the new song brings cheer, For the song of the trip to the big city's white way, is the song that is famous—they're singing it here. While buckets remind us of bare feet and gambols, those days have long passed, our feelings are big and we'd rather have fun where we wear shoes and collars and we say of the old lanes we don't care a fig. We'd rather go boating, and spend pleasant hours, and also spend money we need for a suit. We'd rather go strolling from morning till evening, and take in the headache that's given to boot. But some day we'll change and go back to the sonnet, for then we'll be old and our thoughts back will stray, not back to the days when we hit all the high spots, but back to the time when we romped in the hay.

AT REST

The remains of the late Joseph A. Warner, of Cobourg, who died suddenly at that place on Wednesday, from an attack of apoplexy, arrived in this city this morning on the train from Port Hope and were taken to the Little Lake cemetery for interment. Mrs. Adam Dawson is a sister-in-law of the deceased.

The pallbearers were Messrs. Harry Adams, Robt. Fair, Alex. Gibson, S. R. Armstrong, Dr. Malcolm McCulloch, and ex-Mayor H. Rush. Rev. Canon Spragge, of St. Peter's, Cobourg, accompanied the remains and he was assisted in the service at the grave by Rev. Dr. Langfeldt.

The late Mr. Warner was a well-known music teacher, and had been blind for several years. He was a very superior type of a man, not only an idealist, but strove to practice his ideals in spite of his affliction.

The new marble table that has been placed in the library at St. Alphonse's Lyceum is at once an ornament to the library and an effective advertising medium.

It is supported by four solid oak legs, artistically grained.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

The Review does not hold itself responsible for opinions expressed by its correspondents

To the Editor of the Review.

Sir,—In your issue of yesterday you say that the lawyers and doctors will entertain the merchants to a trip down the river on Thursday next. We think there must be some mistake, as no such arrangement has been made, so far as we know.

ONE OF THE PROFESH.

Peterborough, July 8, 1910.

To the Editor of the Review.

Sir,—I usually enjoy my holidays, but seldom have enjoyed one more than the last one at Viamede. The whole day was one pleasure, and one of such kind that is half thoughtlessly spoken or read from a book. All around was undisturbed peace, which brought an incomparable Sabbath feeling to me. Call it a prayer without words. And in the evening was a service in the pavilion on the lake-shore. I have seen pompous services in the old, mighty and worthy cathedrals of Europe; I have seen camp services of the army, and have felt the most exalting influence of such service. But I did not feel less during the most simple and bewitching service in the pavilion of Viamede. I might say it does not matter of which it was a service, because God showed all participating in like manner, the beauty of a dying day. Windows and doors on the lake side were open. A light breeze was playing with the waves of the lake, and the clouds and the trees. I heard the minister, and listened to the silent eternal sermon of Divine nature. A Sunday to me that is a recreation, indeed.

H. MUNDING.

July 7, 1910.

To the Editor of the Review.

Sir,—Your timely and well written editorial in yesterday's issue upon our disreputable unsanitary conditions, under the heading of "Garbage," ought to make our board of health sit up and think. If there is one thing of more importance than another to the well-being of our people it is our sanitary surroundings, not only during this torrid weather, but in all seasons. We have a board of health in name only, and nothing whatever has been done by it to ameliorate our filthy conditions. It has proved itself an utter failure. Why, then, does it not disband and so save us in taxes what they cost us. Not that we begrudge the expense, for we are willing to double the amount if we can get any assurance that the board will get busy. No one should be on the board but experts. Outside of the few doctors on the board, I would like to ask what expert knowledge have the rest of them to fit them for the position! They might be able to distinguish between a microbe and the extinct germs of probascideans, but that is all. Our backyards are reeking and festering with all sorts of rubbish and decayed and decaying vegetable and animal matter, and that, too, right under the olfactories of the board of health.

Keep your mighty pen going, Mr. Editor, before too many lives are sacrificed by the stupidity or negligence of those whose duty it is to execute the law.

Yours, &c.,

HEALTH.

HERE'S A CASE WHERE AN ATHLETE CAME BACK

All Round Outdoor Association Athletic Championship of Y. M. C. A. Won by Sanford Hall With a Total of 783 Points.

Last night saw the finish of the athletic contest for the All Round Outdoor Association Athletic Championship and the handsome silver trophy known as the "Stratton Trophy." The contest has been under way every Tuesday and Thursday evening since June 7th, two events being run off each evening, points being awarded according to time, height, or distance, as made by each competitor.

The contest has proved that the Association has some good athletic material on hand, and with a little more experience and training would be quite able to hold their own with the best in the Canadian Associations.

Until the last two events the contest has been a toss up and take your choice, and after some hard work the winner turned up in Sanford Hall, with a score of 783 points. Mr. Hall also won this cup in the year 1902, and his victory in this competition is all the more creditable, because he has practically been out of athletics for the past eight years.

The second man to finish is none other than our own Norman Rae, secretary of the Track and Field Club, under whose auspices the contest was held. This is his first attempt at athletic work, and he has sure made good, as his score of 755 1-2 points show.

The third man is Harold Smith, with a score of 707 points. Smith is a new comer to Peterborough but has shown his steel among the good men of Toronto before coming here. His best events are the 1-2 and mile runs.

Medals will be presented to the first three men, the records being posted on the Association bulletin board.

The following is the score of the first ten men: Hall, 783; N. Rae, 755 1-2; Smith, 707; Willis, 662; McCarrell, 640; Currie, 543; Flowers, 538 1-2; Sanderson, 495 1-2; Taylor, 279; Crebar, 275 1-2.

THE CAMP.

Physical Director Thompson leaves to-day with his advance guard for Sandy Point, where the boys go into camp for two weeks. The boys leave to-morrow (Saturday) on the 1 p.m. boat, under the direction of Mr. Sharpe, boys' secretary.

Boys are requested to have their boxes at the wharf early.

BASEBALL

The West End lineup for Saturday's game with P.A.C. at four o clock will be:—

Campbell, c f.
Dickie, 2nd.
Frydie, 3rd.
Crane, catcher.
Minorgan, s.s.
Gibson, r f.
Guerin, l f.
Beaship, 1st.
Pitchers, Creswell, Kirn, Rose.

The management of the Strathconas request the following players to be out in uniform to-morrow afternoon for the game with the T.A.S.—Patterson, Dusty, Wettlaufer, V. Craig, F. Craig, Shaw, Macafee, Kendrey, Weatherston, Ray.

The Commercial Travellers of Peterborough some time ago challenged the commercial travellers of Lindsay to a game of baseball to be played at some convenient date at Peterborough, but nobody seems to know of the game, and it is suggested that the Lindsay travellers, who have been ready for the game since first hearing of it, issue another challenge and play the Peterborough travellers Saturday afternoon next.—Lindsay Post.

CANADIAN BOXER HAD EVEN BREAK WITH NELSON

Buffalo, July 7.—Fighting Dick Nelson, the veteran of the ring, and Hilliard Lang, the budding professional from Toronto, fought ten slashing rounds here to-night. As usual, under the State laws, there was no decision. There were some who believed that Nelson had a shade on the Canadian lad toward the finish of the bout, but a large number of others said a draw would have been a fair decision.

Despite Nelson's long ring experience and the fact that he was going against a comparative novice in the professional game, the Canadian lad was a $50 to $35 favorite, and bets were laid that he would knock Nelson out.

When they shaped for action Lang fairly electrified the crowd with his first move, a quick straight left to the mouth, which lifted Nelson off his feet and dropped him for the cleanest knock down of the season. Nelson made his feet at once. Lang pursued his advantage, and for the first and second rounds carried the fight to Nelson, and when the fighting Dane made for his corner at the end of the third round he was considerably worried. But Nelson got his craft to work in the third round. He manoeuvred Lang with his back to the footlights on the downslant of the stage and began to hustle in his work, leading without permitting Lang to get set and shifting his attack so that the blows began to fly towards the little Canadian from every quarter. In the next few rounds Nelson's left began to reach Lang's face very frequently and with force enough to turn him about at times, and once, in the sixth round, in a terrific rally, Nelson got home a succession of body punches and uppercuts which evidently hurt. Lang lost much of his form and fought wildly and sprawled a good deal, twice getting to the floor in his rushes and boring in with his head down, careless of punishment. During these rounds Nelson piled up a big advantae. But Lang stood the pace better than Nelson, and the man from the east fairly fought himself out by his struggles to drop his man in the ninth. It would be hard to find two more evenly matched boys in weight, science and fighting ability. Lang was well supported by the turfmen and the Toronto excursionists. In his corner were Tom Bird, Gus Gardner, Tommy Daly, N. Lang and Bill Crawford.

FOOTBALL

The Ontario Football Association meets to-morrow to make the draws for the championship finals. Hamilton, Stratford and the Toronto teams are left in the senior finals;—Peterborough, Claremont, Green River, British United, Hamilton and Brussells in the intermediate; and Markham, Atwood and Broadviews of Toronto, in the juniors.

THE AFTERMATH

The slopes of San Juan Hill went plumb crazy last night. Rapture, rapture and the apotheosis of the black race went hand in hand all the way from Thirty-fifth to Sixty-second street. A steady procession of taxicabs filled with glittering negro women went coursing through the cross streets in the darkest Tenderloin.

Black men with shining faces stood blocking the sidewalks, lurching to and fro with uncontrollable glee. Black women filled little overhanging balconies and drank wine as conspicuously as possible. Black boys brawled with white children over newspapers whose headlines told in two words the physical triumph of a nurtured Ethiop over his white antagonist.

If there existed before yesterday any man who lightly considered the Reno prize fight to be a surpassing muscular contest and nothing more, he had only to go west of Eighth Avenue last night to realize his astounding error. At every street intersection were four policemen, one on each corner, and each policeman had his nightstick out. Each corner was crowded with people who didn't care to do anything but stand and watch the vehicles that rolled by. First would come a negro club packed into a large automobile, the men shouting, the women waving flags and handkerchiefs.

"Oh yo' Jack Johnsing!"

"Oh-ho-ho-ho. Where am de white man now?"

SPORTING COMMENT

Langford is now out after Johnson. His manager claims to have $20,000 to post.

Larry Lajoie, the Cleveland first base man, is leading the American League with an average of .393, and Ty Cobb is a close second with 380.

Detroit leads the league in team batting at .275.

Jeffries has gone into retirement back on the dear old farm.—Farewell.

The official statement given by Tex Rickard shows the total gate receipts of the fight to have been $270,775. There were 760 complimentary tickets given out. The profits to be divided between Gleeson and himself are about $120,000. That's not so bad, for a meeting between two men to determine which was the superior, etc., etc.

There should be a larger attendance at the city league baseball games. Some people who claim to be advocates of good clean sport give about as much encouragement as the promoters of the fight pictures are getting these days.

And now that the farmers from the west have won the mug at Henley, Guy Nicholls can say, that the art of picking winners has been affected by the recent fight.

The official report of Referee Rickard says;

"The fight was won and lost when Jeffries was knocked down the first time. This is official. The other knockdowns did not count. Jeffries was knocked to his knees, and as he arose Johnson sent him partially through the ropes. At that moment several of his seconds caught hold of him and helped him to regain his feet. Under a strict interpretation of the rules, this act disqualified Jeffries and Johnson was the winner then and there. Technically, it was not a knock out, though there is no doubt that Johnson would have put Jeffries down for the full count in another moment."

How Mental Suggestion Works When Two People Think Alike.

Scene—A drawing room. He and she.

He (a shy youth)—Are you interested in mental suggestion, Miss Arethusa?

She (demure and desirable)—Tell me about it, Mr. Summers.

He—It's rather odd, you know, but I'm afraid you—you are not interested.

She—Oh, yes, I am, Mr. Summers, so much.

He (encouraged)—Well, you think of something that you want another person to know, and you look at that person a long time. Seems foolish, doesn't it?

She—Not at all, Mr. Summers.

He—You look at the person until your thought passes into the other person's mind, and then the other person says something that shows she understands your thought.

(He draws his chair a little nearer.)

She—Isn't that lovely? Let's try it.

(He looks at her adoringly. She endures the scrutiny with remarkable patience. Nothing happens.)

She (after a long pause)—Yes.

He (amazed)—Why, that's wonderful! I—I was asking you in my mind if you would marry me, and you answered, "Yes." Oh, Arethusa!

She—Oh, William!

(A pause.)

She (presently)—Isn't science grand?—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

County School Examinations

The work of the county board of entrance examiners is completed and the results made public. Judging from the proportion of failures, the examination was of more than average difficulty. Of 221 candidates who wrote, only 91 were successful. The greatest number of failures were in arithmetic, though a good many failed to make the minimum mark required in geography and composition. In many cases failure to make the 60 per cent. required on the total was due to the lowness of the marks in these three subjects.

The county prize of $10 for the highest mark goes to Lakefield Public school again this year, being captured by Jack W. Milne, with a total of 519. The second highest, 500, was also taken by a pupil of the same school.

Certificates for the pupils of the village schools will be in the hands of the principals at the opening of school. Others will be mailed and statements of marks will be sent to unsuccessful candidates.

BLAMES THE JUDICIAL SYSTEM NOT THE EXECUTIONER

This editorial is from to-day's Globe;

The application of a fellow-citizen from the mother country for the position of assistant hangman has provoked some harsh criticism and disparaging reflections. There is a measure of inconsistency in this, especially when the reflections are accompanied by defences of hanging as an institution. It is passing strange that those who uphold and favor hanging look with disfavor on the hangman. It is impossible to hang a criminal without a hangman. His part in the act is more essential than that of the police officers who arrest, the Crown attorneys who prosecute, the jurymen who convict, the judges who sentence, or the jailers who confine. And yet among all the hangman is selected for opprobrium, especially by those who favor and support his function in society. The duty of carrying out the decrees of the law rests with the sheriff, and if a man or woman is to be put to death he must do it or employ some one for the work. The results of inexperienced hangmen were so disquieting to the public that a certain official standing was accorded Radcliffe on account of his skill. It was as assistant to his successor that employment has been sought, and those who favor that method or any method of putting criminals to death cannot reasonably condemn the ambition of the applicant.

Many ways have been adopted for the destruction of human life, and hanging seems one of the most barbarous. Some sever the neck, some shoot to death, some poison, some kill by blows, some shock with an electric current, while some allow the condemned a choice of methods. The old exultation and rejoicing in an execution has passed, and that has led some to think that the practice itself is passing. The condemned is no longer followed to the jibbet, by a cheering, pelting and scourging mob, nor is he gazed at by an exulting or even by a pitying crowd. The condemned is put to death in comparative seclusion. Whether secrecy or publicity is more demoralizing to the public is a debated question, but the impulse to hide everything connected with the act from sight seems to spring from the same sentiment that despises the hangman.

The public are responsible for executions, as for all official acts. They are responsible for the methods adopted. They should in this, as in all official matters, know what is being done with their sanction that they may be fully able to decide. Whether hanging or some less barbarous method be adopted is a question that must be settled by the public. A superstition at one time regarded hanging by the neck and manacling the feet for buriel necessary to prevent the spirit of the condemned from walking by night. That has been abandoned, but its results are still with us. There is nothing sacred about hanging by the neck, and every country is free to adopt less barbarous methods. Perhaps in seeking an explanation of the contempt manifested toward a hangman we will discover the need of changes in this last resort of criminal law. It is an unpleasant subject, but it is a public question, and it is a public function for which all are responsible. There have been executions in this province recently, and their effect on the public has been variously estimated. The need of considering them cannot be denied, for few will contend that the extreme resort should always remain as inherited from a barbarous age, while there is progress and improvement in every other feature of administration.

Giving It a Name.

Our humorists have been trying to find a suitable name for the French craze over aeroplaning, which amounts almost to a disease. One suggests "aerosipelas," another "flyfold fever" and still another "inflewenza." Well, gentlemen, to contribute our share, what is the matter with "skyatica?"—Boston Transcript.

Shorthand Notes.

Speaking of stenographers, under President Cleveland a stenographer became secretary of war, under President Roosevelt a stenographer became secretary of the treasury, and under President Taft a stenographer became collector of the port of New York, the most important customs office in the United States.—Kansas City Times.

Store Teeth.

"Her teeth are like stars," gushed the love smitten youth
In an outburst of joyous delight,
And when they were married he found 'twas the truth—
Like the stars, they came out every night.

Greater Berlin.

Plans for a "greater Berlin" have been worked out as the result of a prize competition among leading architects, builders and town planners. Prizes of $8,000 each have been awarded for schemes which peer three generations into the future and contemplate the Berlin that will be in the year 2000, which is fixed as the period when the capital will teem with a population of 10,000,000. Meantime it is estimated that trade and traffic will have tripled by 1920 and that the population will then be 4,300,000, or double the present total. In 1950 the total will reach 6,450,000, and in 1975 it will aggregate 8,250,000. "In a population of 10,000,000," say the professors who captured the second prize, "we divine a great peril for Berlin, a peril for which we must be prepared." It is proposed to avert this danger by a plan to regulate the construction of street buildings and parks so carefully that overcrowding will practically be impossible.

Save the Babies.

INFANT MORTALITY is something frightful. We can hardly realize that of all the children born in civilized countries, twentytwo per cent., or nearly one-quarter, die before they reach one year; thirtyseven per cent., or more than one-third, before they are five, and one-half before they are fifteen!

We do not hesitate to say that a timely use of Castoria would save a majority of these precious lives. Neither do we hesitate to say that many of these infantile deaths are occasioned by the use of narcotic preparations. Drops, tinctures and soothing syrups sold for children's complaints contain more or less opium, or morphine. They are, in considerable quantities, deadly poisons. In any quantity they stupefy, retard circulation and lead to congestions, sickness, death. Castoria operates exactly the reverse, but you must see that it bears the signature of Chas. H. Fletcher. Castoria causes the blood to circulate properly, opens the pores of the skin and allays fever.

Letters from Prominent Physicians addressed to Chas. H. Fletcher.

Dr. A. F. Peeler, of St. Louis, Mo., says: "I have prescribed your Castoria in many cases and have always found it an efficient and speedy remedy."

Dr. E. Down, of Philadelphia, Pa., says: "I have prescribed your Castoria in my practice for many years with great satisfaction to myself and benefit to my patients."

Dr. Edward Parrish, of Brooklyn, N. Y., says: "I have used your Castoria in my own household with good results, and have advised several patients to use it for its mild laxative effect and freedom from harm."

Dr. J. B. Elliott, of New York City, says: "Having during the past six years prescribed your Castoria for infantile stomach disorders, I most heartily commend its use. The formula contains nothing deleterious to the most delicate of children."

Dr. C. G. Sprague, of Omaha, Neb., says: "Your Castoria is an ideal medicine for children, and I frequently prescribe it. While I do not advocate the indiscriminate use of proprietary medicines, yet Castoria is an exception for conditions which arise in the care of children."

Dr. J. A. Parker, of Kansas City, Mo., says: "Your Castoria holds the esteem of the medical profession in a manner held by no other proprietary preparation. It is a sure and reliable medicine for infants and children. In fact, it is the universal household remedy for infantile ailments."

Dr. H. F. Merrill, of Augusta, Me., says: "Castoria is one of the very finest and most remarkable remedies for infants and children. In my opinion your Castoria has saved thousands from an early grave. I can furnish hundreds of testimonials from this locality as to its efficiency and merits."

Dr. Norman M. Geer, of Cleveland, Ohio, says: "During the last twelve years I have frequently recommended your Castoria as one of the best preparations of the kind, being safe in the hands of parents and very effective in relieving children's disorders, while the ease with which such a pleasant preparation can be administered is a great advantage."

AEROPLANES PASSED THROUGH PETERBOROUGH UNNOTICED

Flying Machines for Aviation Meet in Toronto Came Through on C.P.R. Freight at 5.30 Yesterday Afternoon—Were in Same Cases That They Were Shipped From Paris in.

Two flat cars on which were restfully perched aeroplanes for the big avation meet in Toronto, passed through Peterborough on a C. P. R. freight yesterday afternoon at 5.30 o'clock.

The flying machines were in the original cases marked "Paris, France," in which they were shipped, and part of the equipment could be seen.

Had the public known that the machines were to have come through no doubt a large number of curious citizens would have been at the station to have a look at them and discuss their possibilities. But the latest invention of this age of rapid transit came unheralded, and therefore went unnoticed.

JULY OUTINGS

THEY BRAVED DARK MORNING AND ENJOYED THE DAY

The choir of St. John's church held their annual outing yesterday to Stoney Lake, and the liberal attendance bespoke the keen interest that is always taken in this pleasure trip by the members of the choir and their friends.

Although the appearance of the weather in the morning boded ill for the enjoyment of the excursion, it did not deter the eager picnickers, and when the steamer "Monarch" left the Wolfe street wharf at 8.15 she carried about 75 people.

The trip over the lift lock was added to the interest of the day.

South Beach was reached about twelve o'clock, and the appetizing dinner provided by the genial proprietor of the hotel there, Mr. Brooks proved very satisfying to all who partook of it.

After dinner the party touched at Mount Julian, where a splendid list of races were run off, for which good prizes were given.

The steamer left Mount Julian on the home trip about 4 o'clock.

Supper was served on board by W. J. Coleman, who catered to the appetites of the picnickers in his usual satisfactory manner.

The outing party were thus relieved of the necessity of bringing along baskets for their dinner and supper, which proved a pleasant variation to the usual run of picnics.

Peterborough was reached about 8.15.

Special mention must be made of the courtesy of the crew during the trip, which was much aprpeciated by the passengers.

Mr. Sutcliffe showed great form in the 100 yards dash, and won a finely bound hymn book. It was the race of the day. R. J. Devey was the starter, judge and chief mogul at the track side.

RAIN CLEARED UP AND THE PICNIC PROVED BIG SUCCESS

The rain fell heavily yesterday morning but in spite of this one hundred and fifty of the people of Knox church, turned out for the annual picnic to Rice Lake yesterday and participated in what proved to be one of the best in the record of Knox church successes. The rain stopped as the boat started and a cool morning was followed by a bright and warm afternoon which enabled the games to be carried out under perfect conditions while the evening sail homeward was delightful.

The steamer "Otonabee" carried the picnicers to Idyl Wyld, where dinner in the splendid grove was thoroughly appreciated and then to Jubilee Point, where the games were run off. All the sports were contested with great zeal and resulted in many very keen races and there were contests for all from the little tots to grandparents. The young men's struggle for a fountain pen in a double contest of a half mile race and the hop-step-and jump proved so keen that it was necessary to settle a four-cornered tie with a hundred yards which two were a Garrison finish. A series of tug of war matches between picked teams created the greatest of interest. Knox church now feels ready to challenge anybody with either men's or women's teams. For the young ladies' race the prize was a very handsome sweet grass basket presented by Mr. R. J. Soden.

The games and winners were as follows:

Primary class, boys.—1 Eddie Taylor, 2 Allan Foster, 3 Willie Watt.

Primary class, girls.—1 Hazel McKinley, 2 Evelyn Kennedy, 3 Vera Foster.

Boys 8 to 10.—1 Chesney Coates, 2 Max Sherwood.

1-4 mile race.—1 W. Byers, 2 L. Ingram.

100 yards dash.—1 K. Denoon, 2 W. Byers.

Pitching quoits.—1 Mr. Penrose, 2 Mr. Galley.

Girls—Miss Bartley's team defeated Miss Sheppard's team.

GARDEN PARTY BY THE LADIES OF FRASERVILLE

A large attendance and a most enjoyable time marked the garden party held by the Ladies' Aid Society of Fraserville Methodist church last evening. The ladies proved themselves accomplished hosts and all in attendance were made to feel at home.

The new pastor of the church, Rev. Mr. White, formerly of Campbellford, opened the proceedings with a splendid address and made a fine impression with the members of the congregation and their friends. Addresses were also given by Prof. Findlay, of Kansas city, and Rev. Dr. Marsh, of the Springville Presbyterian church. The ground presented a pretty scene and refreshments were dispensed and enjoyed, to the strains of choice music, given by the Salvation Army band.

MAGISTRATE UPHELD ACTION OF THE POSTMASTER

Was Justified in Dismissing William McIntosh an Employee of Toronto Post Office Who Attended Niagara Camp Without Permission—Court Comments on Employee's Attitude.

Special to the Review.

Toronto, July 8.—Police Magistrate Kingsford this morning handed out judgment dismissing the charge preferred by Wm. McIntosh against Mr. W. B. Rogers, postmaster at the Toronto General Post Office, under the Militia Act, of wrongful dismissal, because the complainant attended the Niagara Camp.

In view of the fact that the complainant had volunteered without securing permission, and in spite of the fact that he had been expressly engaged to fill a gap caused by other vacancies, Mr. Kingsford said McIntosh had disentitled himself to consideration by his own conduct in the matter.

HAYS ACCEPTS THE AWARD PROMISES MENS' DEMANDS

He is Willing to Give Trainmen all the Increase Agreed on by the Conciliation Board and Give the C.P.R. Standard of Wages and Duties.

Montreal, July 9.—The arrival of Charles M. Hays of the G.T.R. on the scene of action and his acceptance of the board of arbitration award, has added new interest to the negotiations with the unions, which have been carried on for several weeks past.

As for the C.P.R., there is nothing new. Negotiations are progressing satisfactorily, although there may not be any results announced for some days yet.

It may be also stated that no possible preparation for strike conditions are being made by either company, and there is not an iota of truth in the foolish report to the effect that the railways are on the lookout for strike-breakers. In the first place, neither the men or the railways look for anything like a strike, and if one did take place, the fact that four thousand men being involved makes the "breaking" of a strike impossible.

The G.T.R. men, being seen yesterday evening, said that they were not in a position to discuss Mr. Hays' proposition, but that they will no doubt be heard from the first of the week.

Yesterday President Hays of the Grand Trunk submitted a statement to the union officials, offering the wage increase granted by the conciliation board and promising the C.P.R. standard of wages as soon as through rail connections are made with the Grand Trunk Pacific, supposedly within two years, the G.T.R. being then able to participate in the higher traffic rates obtaining in the northwest. Failing acceptance by the employes, the company are willing to submit the whole question to a board of arbitrators, composed of experienced railway men, with the obligation on the company's part to abide by the result of such arbitration, conditional only upon the employes in question agreeing to do the same.

"The point at issue is the standardization of rules and rates of pay, and we are asked to pay the same rates as have recently been granted their employes by the Baltimore & Ohio, the Erie, the New York Central and other trunk lines," said Mr. Hays. "Standardization of rates of pay can be equitable only under standardization of earnings. The Grand Trunk system occupies a territory where the density of traffic is very much less than that in the territory occupied by the roads with which it is desired to have standardization of wages.

"The annual gross earnings per mile of the roads named are each more than double those of the Grand Trunk Railway. Our ability to pay, therefore, is limited accordingly. It would be as reasonable to ask an individual with an income of $3,000 per annum to standardize his expenditure with those of an individual with an income of $6,000 per annum.

"There has heretofore always been a differential between the Canadian Pacific and the Grand Trunk in the matter of rates of pay and it is well known by the public in Canada why the Canadian Pacific has been able to pay a higher scale of wages than other roads. It has received much larger bonuses from the Canadian Government than any other railway; it has received larger grants of land which have increased enormously in value especially of recent years, since the entrance into the northwest of other railway companies; it has exemption from taxes; its rates are not subject to the jurisdiction of the Railway Commission on portions of its lines until it has earned 10 per cent. on its capital stock, and by reason of the larger part of its railway system being located in the Canadian Northwest, where a higher basis of freight and passenger rates obtain, its gross earnings have been in excess of those of other railways."

LIQUOR SLEUTH LYNCHED

Newark, Ohio, in Ferment Over the Death of "Blind Pigger."

Newark, Ohio, July 9.—Carl Etherington, 22 years old, employed Thursday night by the State Anti-Saloon League as a blind tiger raider, was lynched here at 10.35 last night, following a day of almost continuous rioting. The heavy doors of the Licking County jail were battered down and Etherington was dragged from his cell. He was shot, kicked and bruised before the street was reached and the finish followed quickly.

Etherington earlier in the evening confessed he killed William Howard, proprietor of the "Last Chance" restaurant, and former chief of police, in a raid of alleged "speak easies" during the scuffle at 1.30 yesterday afternoon, and narrowly escaped lynching at that time.

When the news from the hospital that Howard had died passed over the city at 9 o'clock last night, the fury of the mob took definite form. Large battering rams were directed upon the doors of the Licking County jail and the deputies were powerless. The doors fell after nearly an hour's attack.

Crying piteously, Etherington, a curly-headed Kentuckian, who had been serving as a strike-breaker since he was released from marine service three months ago, was dragged forth.

Several reporters leaving the jail last night, after interviewing the detectives, were attacked by the mob and roughly handled until identified.

Licking County, of which Newark is the county seat, is "dry" under the Rose local option law. Wayne B. Wheeler, state superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League at Columbus, said last night that the situation was brought about by Mayor Atherton of Newark not upholding the law. Wheeler said that the detectives were from Cleveland.

GORED TO DEATH BY VICIOUS BULL

Halifax, July 9.—Daniel J. McDonald of Loch Lomond was gored to death by a bull while feeding his cattle in the pasture yesterday. McDonald made a desperate effort to escape, but finally was torn to shreds.

Irving Kemp, a German miner, employed by the Nova Scotia Steel & Coal Co., at Sydney Mines, was instantly killed yesterday by a fall of coal.

Posed as Man to Save Sister's Honor.

London, Eng., July 9.—The officials conducting the inquest into the death of "Harry Lloyd," a strange woman, who for thirty years posed as the husband of her sister, expressed the opinion yesterday that the woman had practiced the deception to save the honor of her sister, and of the latter's daughter.

King Edward's Faith.

London, July 9.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—In a letter published from the Archbishop of Canterbury to the Dean of Quebec, referring to a paragraph in a New York paper reporting that Edward VII. died a Roman Catholic, the archbishop says it is a report both preposterous and baseless.

MILITARY COLLEGE CROWDED

Kingston, July 8.—Concerning a statement that the Royal Military College is too crowded to admit all elegible entrants, Lt.-Col. Crowe, the commandant, says:

"We are admitting 36 candidates; we had 26 retirements with the close of the last term. Of those who will not enter are three who passed the examinations, but are under age. They were told they would only be allowed admission if room permitted. Two who passed, are not coming, and four university matriculants cannot be accommodated. I would like larger quarters for next term. I will have 68 cadets occupying 34 rooms. I would have liked to have had 68 separate rooms."

WOMAN AVIATOR SERIOUSLY HURT

Rheims, July 9.—Baroness de la Roche was badly injured yesterday when flying in a Voisin biplane at the aviation meet.

The machine went wrong and plunged straight down 150 feet, tangling the victim in the debris. She was internally injured and also sustained a fracture of the arm and leg.

The biplane, going at a terrific speed, suddenly seemed to halt; it appeared tossed on the wind. Then, while the driver could be seen to tug at levers, the machine fell, whirling and tossing.

After a dashing career as an automobolist in the last month, the baroness came to the front as an aviator and earned a name as one of the most daring air pilots.

It was not her first mishap. On Jan. 4 last she was seriously injured at the Chalons Aviation Field.

The doctors, after a careful examination, declared that the baroness' skull was not fractured, and that she may live.

NEED MORE ELEVATORS

Montreal, July 9.—C. C. Ballantyne, harbor commissioner, returned yesterday from the western wheat fields, firmly convinced that the elevators at the disposition of trade at the port here will very soon prove insufficient to meeting the growing demand of the rapidly accumulating business. The Grand Trunk elevator, with a capacity of one million bushels, and the harbor commissioners', with a like capacity, are both crowded, together with the capacity of the floating storage of the port crowded to the extreme limit.

Turkish Troops Mobolizing.

Constantinople, July 9.—The entire Turkish third army corps is to-day mobolizing for a speedy transfer to the frontier, owing to the discovery of uniformed Greek regulars among the raiders who have been creating havoc on the frontier.

A Three-Year Term.

Woodstock, July 9.—Frank N. Scott, for shooting Mrs. McBride, was sentenced yesterday to Kingston Penitentiary for three years.

THE FIRST DAY OF TORONTO AEROPLANE MEETING BRIEF

Delighted Spectators Watch Count De Lesseps and Ralph Johnstone Make Trial Flights Around the Field—Lieutenant-Governor Present.

Toronto, July 9.—The possibility of flight through the air, which, through the passage of ages, hundreds of amiable maniacs have died to prove, until of late years their dreams have come true, was demonstrated for Toronto people last night at the aviation grounds at Weston, when Count Jacques De Lesseps in his Bleriot monoplane No. 9 rose into the air at 7.23 o'clock like a large bird with graceful white wings outspread and circled three times around the course in five minutes before finally alighting to receive the plaudits of the spectators.

Hardly had he left the field before the Wright biplane, a far larger and more imposing, though scarcely as graceful a machine, at the other end of the field, drew everyone's attention by the whirring of its two propellers. A moment later, with Ralph Johnstone at the helm as aviator, it slid along the mono-rail on which it gets its start, passed off it and sailed along the ground at about a height of fifteen feet for over a hundred yards before rising high into the air and circling around the field, performing various evolutions in aviation, of which the figure eight was the most conspicuous.

The people first began to gather a little after 3 o'clock, although the program was not advertised to begin until 4.30, and eventually about two thousand had passed the gates, a larger crowd than graced the first day of the meet at Montreal. Because either of undue delay in shipment at Montreal or slow carriage over the railways, most of the machines did not arrive on the grounds until the afternoon was well on its way. This caused a delay of nearly three hours in starting, to the great disappointment of many who thought there would be no flying at all, but it is safe to say that there was no one there who did not think the wait well repaid when he saw the heavier-than-air machines flying through the air. Count De Lesseps, of course, used to coursing great distances over land and water, was not as satisfied as were the spectators.

Ralph Johnstone, who comes from Kansas City, will make flights every day and take part in most of the contest relating to speed and accuracy. Dr. Duval Lachappelle, especially, will be an important figure in speed contests to take place between himself and Count De Lesseps, one of these to occur this afternoon. Mr. J. S. Stratton, who will take up the Canadian Bleriot, is an aeronaut of great experience, covering all kinds of aeroplanes. He was prevented rising yesterday because, through some negligence or ignorance of the need of care, his machine was shipped by flatcar from Montreal, and arrived with the wings badly frayed and the engine full of cinders. Young Dixon is on the grounds and may possibly take some flights in this machine. Mr. George B. Harrison of Los Angeles, Cal., is in charge of the Wright machines. He has two of these on the grounds, with one still on the car at Weston. He expects very shortly a new Wright biplane of a different model, smaller and more graceful than the usual type, which has been especially designed for speed, and with which, although never tried out, he expects Mr. Lachappelle will be able to break some speed records, both for speed and height of flight. Two other Wright aviators expected to arrive shortly are Mr. A. R. Hoxsie of Pasadena, Cal., and Mr. A. L. Walsh of Washington, D.C., Walter Brookins, who obtained the record for high flight at Atlantic City, may also possibly be there.

His honor the Lieutenant-Governor and Mrs. Gibson, with a party, visited the grounds. He was introduced to the aviators and inspected their machines, but because of an evening engagement had to leave before the first flight.

Thirty-two men of the Royal Canadian Dragoons under two officers, Lieuts. F. Gilman and D. Bowie, patrolled the grounds and kept spectators from the neighborhood of the grounds wherever unprotected by canvas. Camp is pitched on the Milne farm, and the men are supplied butter, eggs and milk by the Aviation Committee.

CHINESE OUTBREAK A SERIOUS ONE

2000 Killed in Revolutionary Uprising---Foreigners in Danger -- A Pitched Battle.

Special to the Review.

Hong Kong, July 9.—More than 2,000 Chinese have been killed and twice as many wounded in a pitched battle between armed and organized rebels and troops at Yuen King, according to advices received here to-day.

All foreigners are in danger, and it is believed this uprising is but the forerunner of the general revolt in the province of Hunan, which has been threatening for months.

The viceroy has demanded reinforcements, it is understood, and troops have been rushed to his aid from the province of Hupsh to the north, where although the situation is threatening, the government are in a stronger position.

Word has been sent to all foreign residents in the northern part of Hunan, advising them of their danger.

LATE TICKS FROM WIRES

Paris is threatened with a recurrence of floods, through abnormal rainfall.

Lord Sholto Douglas will work with a C.P.R. survey crew for three months at $2 a day.

The loss in the champagne district through unfavorable weather is estimated at $6,000,000.

The man found killed in the railway near Colborne was James Agnew of Cobourg, a painter.

Hon. J. H. Howden, Provincial Secretary, was declared elected by acclamation for Beautiful Plains, Man.

The Western Union Telegraph Co. has restored the service cut off from brokers on a number of cities in the Eastern States.

The Department of Trade and Commerce is arranging to send an exhibit of Canadian wheat to the exhibition of wheat products to be held at Marseilles in September.

Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars is the fee demanded, and may be paid to Attorney Clarence A. Knight for services rendered in straightening out the estate of Chas. T. Yerkes, the late traction magnate.

QUEBEC C.N.R. TERMINUS

Quebec, July 9.—Following the decision of the City Council to take action to force the Canadian Northern Railway to reimburse to the city $200,000 granted on certain conditions that were not fulfilled, Messrs. Mackenzie and D. D. Mann have assured the municipal representatives that the C.N.R. is looking forward to fulfill the conditions.

Quebec, said Mr. Mackenzie, has always been held in view by the C.N.R. as its eastern terminus. A new bridge over the St. Charles River and a grain elevator are contemplated.

SECOND IN THE KOLAPORE CUP

Bisley Camp, July 9.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—The Mother Country won the Kolapore Cup yesterday; Canada was second, after leading at the end of the second stage. The colonial prize of $400 goes to the Canadian team.

The Canadians were leading, when Mitchell for his last shot got an outer. Then Gray, with a bull, and Runciman, with an inner, scored the victory for the Mother Country by two points. The standing: Canada, 796; Australia, 777; Mother Country, 798; Guernsey, 770; India, 745; Malay States, 763; Singapore, 742; South Africa, 756.

The scores made by the Canadian team is as follows: Crowe, 100; Forrest, 99; Freeborn, 102; McHaig, 102; Morris, 101; Mitchell, 93; Russell, 105; Steck, 99.

TROOPS TRIED TO LYNCH NEGRO

Washington, July 9.—Determined to avenge the probable fatal injury to one of their fellow soldiers, Private Scott of Battery D, Third Artillery, U.S.A., between forty and fifty United States white troopers and artillerymen from Fort Myer, Va., early yesterday made an attempt to storm the Alexandra County Jail on Fort Myer Heights, to lynch Robert Jackson, a negro.

A clever subterfuge of Jailer Harry Crack, in inducing the soldiers to believe that Jackson was not within the jail, was the only thing that saved the negro from lynching.

H., W. & G. Dropped.

Hamilton, July 9.—An announcement that will cause much surprise and great disappointment, not only in this city, but in a number of western Ontario cities and towns, was made yesterday. It was that the Hamilton, Waterdown & Guelph Railway project has been abandoned owing to the excessive cost of constructing the terminals and the part through the high level district, and the inability of John Patterson to finance it because of these things.

DROUGHT HURTS CROPS OUTLOOK BAD IN MANITOBA

Bulls Have Control on Winnipeg Grain Exchange—Many Districts Are Badly Parched and Hay Crop is a Failure—Worrying About Winter's Feed,

Winnipeg, July 9.—Partly owing to the furious wordy warfare of the election campaign, and partly because there is so little good to report, the local press has little to say regarding the condition of the crop in this province.

At the Grain Exchange, however, the bulls have it all their own way. "The Manitoba crop will not average ten bushels," said one big operator yesterday afternoon. "Condition of spring wheat is nearer 50 than 60, the lowest in years, and every twenty-four hours of heat and no rain is making it worse."

That may be an extreme view, but it is certain no one is looking for anything like an average crop this year. Even Brandon district, which was among the optimists till a few days ago, now is talking of grain being baked up.

Conditions of course vary largely, according to district and soil, and in some parts of Southern Manitoba farmers are already plowing under spring wheat. On light lands there will not be much of a crop to harvest. Some heavy lands, which have succeeded in retaining what little moisture there has been, are showing better, but on these grain is maturing too rapidly for even an average yield. The hay crop will be a dead failure; and farmers are getting anxious about winter feed. For miles and miles the open prairie is yellow and parched, with sloughs dried up. The problem of watering cattle is already serious in many districts. Heavy rains right away and cooler weather would no doubt save the situation to a certain extent, but Manitoba is going to have the worst average wheat yield of any recent year.

Conditions are reported better in Saskatchewan, though the southeast of that province has suffered severely.

Southern Alberta appears to have been damaged by drought quite as badly as in this province, and further north conditions are better.

A great deal of misleading information is offered the public, and the weekly reports of the railway companies are not above suspicion of an attempt to keep up the flow of immigration by making the best of it. Official returns by the Provincial Governments are about due, and will throw a good deal of light on the situation.

Missing, May Be Drowned.

Kingston, July 9.—John Kelly, an inmate in Rockwood Hospital, is missing, and cannot be traced. It is feared he may have been drowned.

Emelian Krebreake, Russian, sent down from Hamilton for two years for wounding, was released from penitentiary yesterday, and will be deported.

PRIEST FOUGHT BURGLARS

New York, July 9.—Three masked burglars, intent on cracking a safe and getting $500 in cash and other valuables belonging to the church, were caught at work at the rectory of St. Leonard's Roman Catholic Church in Brooklyn yesterday.

Three priests bravely sprang to the defence of the church's treasures, and attacked the robbers. Thugs and churchmen battled for more than a quarter of an hour before the issue was decided in favor of the priests. The burglars fled.

As a result of the encounter, Fathers Konig and Oppel are suffering from severe bruises on their heads and arms, and Father Sanders has a long knife cut in the hand, received in a final grapple with the marauders, when one of the masked men held the pursuers at bay near a window, while his two pals escaped.

WELCOME TO THE PREMIER

Port Arthur, July 9.—Port Arthur turned out en masse last evening to welcome Sir Wilfrid Laurier and party on his arrival to commence a tour of the west. Thousands of people cheered the party at the depot and through the streets to the residence of James Conmee, where the informal reception was held.

The city is decorated with arches, evergreens and bunting. To-day there will be automobile trips followed by a cruise on the bay on the yacht Sigm. After the presentation of his address at the Lyceum Theatre in the afternoon, Sir Wilfrid goes to Fort William in the evening to address a meeting at the Arena rink.

MONTREAL WILL GET THE DOCK

Montreal, July 9.—It is pretty well understood here that the contest between Quebec and Montreal, which has been going on for months past as to which port will have the immense dock, has been decided in favor of this city. In the first place Mr. Vickers, who carefully looked over the whole situation and calculated the amount of business that would naturally come to the respective ports, has positively stated that Montreal is the place for the dock. In fact, he declares that he will not go to Quebec under any consideration, and will not advise any friend of his to spend a cent at Levis on such an enterprise.

Of course Levis is agitating at Ottawa and trying to get a group of capitalists to apply for the subsidy, but it is not at all probable that any one will undertake the proposition.

Rescued Family From Flames.

Magnetawan, July 9.—The fine brick residence of E. W. Jenkins on the river, a mile from here, was totally destroyed by fire about midnight on Thursday. The family, only in their night clothes, barely escaped with their lives. Mr. Jenkins was ill at the time and great praise is due Mrs. Jenkins for her heroic and successful efforts in rescuing the family from the flames.

Postmaster of St. Mary's Dead.

St. Mary's, July 9.—Col. H. A. L. White, postmaster of St Mary's, and a prominent citizen of the town for many years, died here yesterday afternoon.

Even Cuba Objects.

Havana, July 9.—The Cuban Government, which permits bull-fighting, has drawn the line on the Jeffries-Johnson fight pictures.

A TEST OF SINCERITY

Madrid, July 9.—The rule forbidding any more religious orders to enter Spain until the dispute between the Government and the Vatican regarding the revision of the concordat is settled, was introduced yesterday. It was drawn by Premier Canalejas, and was signed Thursday by King Alfonso.

The disposition made of the bill, which will be strongly supported by the Republicans, will go a long way toward determining whether the King and the Premier are really sincere in their talk of limiting the state church power. Many people are accusing them of insincerity, but the majority believe that they really want to do something, but that no hope for sweeping reforms, may be expected so long as the monarchy survives.

BRICKLAYERS' STRIKE GAINING

Montreal, July 9.—The list of contractors who are willing to accept the demands of the International Union of Bricklayers and Stonemasons has grown during the past twenty-four hours from 56 to 102, and it is still increasing. There are at present about 650 union men at their places, but they are for the most part employed by the smaller firms of the city.

The big English firms and the members of Master Bricklayers' and Masons' Association present an undaunted front. They have signed an agreement to employ union men only on the terms which had been agreed to in the past, not to recognize the union, and each agreed to forfeit the sum of $1,000 in the event of a breach of the agreement with one another.

TRAFFIC HAS LARGELY INCREASED

Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., July 9.—The June report of lake commerce through the canals shows 1,981 vessels of a registered net tonnage of 4,403,728 passed through the American canal, and 1,108 vessels, with a registered net tonnage of 3,530,586, went through the Canadian Canal. The total tonnage carried through both canals was 9,839,872 net tons, an increase over June of last year of 2,907,447 net tons.

Wanted to Shoot Johnson.

Chicago, July 9.—An unidentified man, believed to be from St. Louis, was arrested last night, when, armed with a gun, he tried to force an entrance to the home of Jack Johnson, negro champion pugilist. When examined by the police, the man admitted that he lost money on the recent prize fight.

An Heroic Youth.

Cornwall, July 9—Ralph Fiske, aged 16 years, is in the Cornwall General Hospital undergoing treatment for severe burns received in a heroic attempt to rescue his little brother from the flames which consumed their home at Nicolville, N.Y. He will recover.

University In Financial Difficulties.

Washington, D.C., July 9.—Staggering under a debt totalling $849,389, and facing financial ruin, the George Washington University is to-day negotiating for the sale of its most important building and the discontinuance of its medical school and hospital.

Can't Stop 'Em.

Albany, N.Y., July 9.—Corporation Counsel Arthur L. Andrews, yesterday advised Mayor J. B. McEwen that moving picture exhibitions cannot be prohibited in Albany, unless in his opinion they were of a "lewd or immoral nature."

DIVORCE

Our Japanese friends who showed us the way to trim the Russians can also show us a fine lead in the question of divorce. In Japan two hundred and fifteen per hundred thousand of the population are divorced. The much-talked-of American divorce mill is slow in comparison, as but seventy-three divorces in 100,000 are recorded by statistics.

Switzerland follows with thirty-two and France with twenty-three. Germany has but fifteen for every 100,000 population, and England and Wales only two. Canadian statistics are not available. It is painful to think that divorce is so prevelant. Many are only living in legalized sin, and in the wretched hour they fly to the courts for liberty. But that is not all. Most of them soon hitch up again.

OH! THOU JEWEL

The National Sporting Club, of London, is perhaps the most exclusive sporting club in the world. As blood goes, and pedigrees count, its members are away up near the purple. It has frequent prize fights under the softer name of boxing exhibitions. The members are attired in evening dress, while the trained men in the ring appear in tights and wallop each other for their distinguished edification. How will these lords and barons and lesser fry feel toward the prohibition as proposed.

And isn't it a joke in Toronto how the clamor against prize fight pictures and the Government has bowed in acquiescence—no fight pictures may be shown in the province. But twice a year a series of fights are held in Toronto under the name of Amateur Boxing Championships. Noses are bled and knock downs and knock outs frequent. Last spring they were held in Massey Hall. Is it necessary to say anything further? Perhaps it might be well to add that many of the elite of the city attended. And what of the pictures of false lovers and stabbings and shootings of faithless wives and husbands shown every night throughout the province? Why all this fuss about the pictures?

AN INCIDENT

A body comparatively unknown to the wide world was buried in Little Lake cemetery yesterday afternoon. It was the body of J. A. Warner, of Cobourg, from which the spirit suddenly flitted while Mr. Warner was leading a chorus in the Methodist church there. He died at his post, happy in his work. Mr. Warner was blind, but his vision was not dimmed. He saw with the eye of the soul. He was partially paralyzed. He had suffered other afflictions, but his good cheer rose above it all. He died in the harness. We miss a street car or our friends disappoint us, and immediately the whole world's wrong. It rains when we want it to shine and we are gloomy. We are vexed and lose our temper over trifles. J. A. Warner, whose life was music, and to whom music was life; who knew the masters as he knew himself, was stricken with blindness and partial paralysis, but was still undaunted and did not lose courage. His case is noteworthy and he will long be remembered by those who knew him best.

EQUIPPED

Within the last few days an Ottawa bank manager, in talking about the employment of junior clerks, made a sad commentary upon the abilities of the youth of our land.

He said they were careless, couldn't spell properly, and wanted to know more about the hours during which they were to be on duty than about the business they were engaged in.

Anyone who has had to employ young chaps from the Collegiate Institutes and High Schools will agree to a large extent with the banker. Few of them can spell with any degree of accuracy, and most all of them are careless. Scarcely one can write a business letter without consulting some book on the subject.

It isn't likely the boys of these years are any worse mentally than the boys of years ago who could spell. But they are trained differently. Their whole educational course is a careless thing. Nothing is expected to be thorough, while there is a smattering of almost everything from the ways of bugs to abstruse geometrical problems. Carelessness is infectious; so what can be expected of the poor boys? And what can the teacher do unless is be to keep the classes in after hours and teach them to spell?

So says the Ottawa Free Press.

They are trying to get a deputy chief of police in Hamilton. Chief Hinds, of Oshawa, was selected, but wrote saying that he had reconsidered. The people in Oshawa liked Chief Hinds so well that they raised his salary to $1,200 a year. So the position in Hamilton is still vacant. It is hard to get a good chief of police. It is also hard to get a man who will dig a ditch faithfully or is a qualified junior for a bank. In every walk of life good men and women are rare There are many in the mob of misfits trying to do that for which nature, or education, never fitted them. The good man in his proper place is rare. Half fitted, partly equipped, the great mass of people wonder why it is their pay is never raised, what makes the hours drag on so long, and the weeks so tedious. They are like the dray horse who would take the hurdles in a race or the thoroughbred hitched to a ton of coal. In the wrong place, at the wrong job, they will never succeed.

Halt! Here comes the man up from the crowd. He goes steadily upward and onward and no one denies him. That man is equipped.

A REVISION

All obsolete words in the new edition of the King James Bible will be left out. This very important announcement has been completely overshadowed in the pressure of matter regarding the fight. But quietly and systematically a conference of clergymen and editors which has been in session at Princeton, N.J., for the past few days, have decided on this step. The new Bible will be out in May, 1911, which will be three hundred years after printing the first edition. There will be no revising, but there will be merely a replacing of old English words, whose meanings have gradually changed, with modern words more clearly expressing the intended meaning.

The change will be illuminating to lovers of the Bible. For instance, the word "damnation" in Corinthians, XI. 29, will be changed to "condemnation."

Meanwhile novels have their run, they are lauded, dramatized and forgotten, but this great and marvelous book, this illuminating and comforting classic of classics, is being more widely read and having greater numbers printed than ever before in the history of the world.

THE PAROLE SYSTEM

W. P. Archibald, Ottawa, Dominion parole officer, is a good man in the right place. When Mr. Archibald was major of the Salvation Army in Toronto, he refused a salary offered from a business firm of $1,000 a year more than he was making, for his heart was in his labor. He later left the Army for the humanitarian work of Dominion parole officer. Speaking of the parole system during a visit to Kingston this week, Mr. Archibald said:

"Since the system was established in 1899, about 3,100 prisoners were released on parole. Out of that number only about sixty-five had forfeited their liberty. Nearly 2,000 have won their full liberty and are in the enjoyment of good citizenship, showing that they were not criminals, but had yielded to temptation in moments of weakness and afterwards deeply regretted their acts, and repented in sackcloth and ashes. One thousand parolled prisoners are still reporting. Last year 450 prisoners completed their paroles.

"Of the 3,100 prisoners parolled in eleven years, 1,800 were from the penitentiaries, and 1,300 from the jails and reformatories. The number of paroles has been steadily increasing. Last year the paroles totalled about 578 or about 100 more than in the previous year.

"In the prisons of Canada there are about one-third of the prisoners in whom the utmost confidence could be put if they were released on parole. There are probably from fifteen to twenty per cent. who would be better incarcerated for life, as they are genuine criminals."

One year Mr. Archibald followed up the prisoners parolled, of whom there were 300, and found that they were earning a total of about $120,000. They had "made good," and were valuable citizens.

No man, unless he is a degenerate, is a criminal by instinct. If he is a criminal by instinct he is to be pitied more than censured. That man must be confined till he is regenerated. If he is not a criminal born, he may be educated and loved back into the path of rectitude and become a useful citizen. We should never forget that many of us are not in jail simply because———

THE POINT OF VIEW

STRICTLY MORAL.
Hamilton Times.

Reno, Nevada, is a very strictly moral city. It has a stringent law forbidding a barber to shave a customer on the Lord's Day. And our readers may have noticed that the big prize fight at which the State Governor was a spectator, was not allowed to take place on Sunday.

THE HEART OF A MAN.
Aloysius Coll in Nash's Magazine.

A strong woman gave him the strength of her heart,
And her eyes were warm with love;
But he went his way—and he never knew
What her eyes were dreaming of.
A weak girl gave him the prate of her lips,
And her word was cold deceit;
But he heard her voice and cast his heart
In the pathway of her feet.

AND HERE.

Are there no public-spirited citizens who will take up the subject of providing bathing places for the children. Canon Starr deserves credit for so forcibly calling attention to the great necessity there is for such places.

BOX OF BEES.
Welland Cor. St.Catherines Journal.

A swarm of bees invaded a cabin box at the G.T.R. depot on Sunday. They flew into the box and caused short circuits on the wires, and the result was that the telegraphic service was delayed for about 24 hours. The bees were finally burnt out of the box.

The Mystery of The Yellow Room

By GASTON LEROUX

COPYRIGHT, 1908 By BRENTANO'S

"Mlle. Stangerson must have lived some anxious moments while Daddy Jacques was absent, but I think she was not aware that so many evidences had been left. After she had been attacked she had only time to hide the traces of the man's fingers on her neck and to hurry to the laboratory. Had she known of the bone, the cap and the handkerchief she would have made away with them after she had gone back to her chamber at midnight. She did not see them and undressed by the uncertain glimmer of the night light. She went to bed wornout by anxiety and fear—a fear that had made her remain in the laboratory as late as possible.

"My reasoning had thus brought me to the second phase of the tragedy when Mlle. Stangerson was alone in the room. I had now to explain the revolver shots fired during the second phase. Cries of 'Help! Murder!' had been heard. How to explain these? As to the cries, I was in no difficulty; since she was alone in her room these could result from nightmare only. My explanation of the struggle and noise that were heard is simply that in her nightmare she was haunted by the terrible experience she had passed through in the afternoon. In her dream she sees the murderer about to spring upon her, and she cries, 'Help! Murder!' Her hand wildly seeks the revolver she had placed within her reach on the night table by the side of her bed, but her hand, striking the table, overturns it, and the revolver, falling to the floor, discharges itself, the bullet lodging in the ceiling. I knew from the first that the bullet in the ceiling must have resulted from an accident. Its very position suggested an accident to my mind and so fell in with my theory of a nightmare. I no longer doubted that the attack had taken place before mademoiselle had retired for the night. After wakening from her frightful dream and crying aloud for help she had fainted.

"My theory, based on the evidence of the shots that were heard at midnight, demanded two shots—one which wounded the murderer at the time of his attack and one fired at the time of the nightmare. The evidence given by the Berniers before the examining magistrate was to the effect that only one shot had been heard. M. Stangerson testified to hearing a dull sound first, followed by a sharp ringing sound. The dull sound I explained by the falling of the marble topped table; the ringing sound was the shot from the revolver. I was now convinced I was right. The shot that had wounded the hand of the murderer and had caused it to bleed so that he left the bloody imprint on the wall was fired by mademoiselle in self defense before the second phase, when she had been really attacked. The shot in the ceiling which the Berniers heard was the accidental shot during the nightmare.

"I had now to explain the wound on the temple. It was not severe enough to have been made by means of the mutton bone, and mademoiselle had not attempted to hide it. It must have been made during the second phase. It was to find this out that I went to the yellow room, and I obtained my answer there."

Rouletabille drew a piece of white folded paper from his pocket and drew out of it an almost invisible object which he held between his thumb and forefinger.

"This, M. President," he said, "is a hair—a blond hair stained with blood. It is a hair from the head of Mlle. Stangerson. I found it sticking to one of the corners of the overturned table. The corner of the table was itself stained with blood—a tiny stain—hardly visible, but it told me that on rising from her bed Mlle. Stangerson had fallen heavily and had struck her head on the corner of its marble top.

"I had still to learn, in addition to the name of the assassin, which I did later, the time of the original attack. I learned this from the examination of Mlle. Stangerson and her father, though the answers given by the former were well calculated to deceive the examining magistrate. Mlle. Stangerson had stated very minutely how she had spent the whole of her time that day. We established the fact that the murderer had introduced himself into the pavilion between 5 and 6 o'clock. At a quarter past 6 the professor and his daughter had resumed their work. At 5 the professor had been with his daughter, and since the attack took place in the professor's absence from his daughter I had to find out just when he left her. The professor had stated that at the time when he and his daughter were about to re-enter the laboratory he was met by the keeper and held in conversation about the cutting of some wood and the poachers. Mlle. Stangerson was not with him then, since the professor said, 'I left the keeper and rejoined my daughter, who was at work in the laboratory.'

"It was during that short interval of time that the tragedy took place. That is certain. In my mind's eye I saw Mlle. Stangerson re-enter the pavilion, go to her room to take off her hat and find herself faced by the murderer. He had been in the pavilion for some time waiting for her. He had arranged to pass the whole night there. He had taken off Daddy Jacques' boots, he had removed the papers from the cabinet and had then slipped under the bed. Finding the time long, he had risen, gone again into the laboratory, then into the vestibule, looked into the garden and had seen, coming toward the pavilion, Mlle. Stangerson—alone. He would never have dared to attack her at that hour if he had not found her alone. His mind was made up. He would be more at ease alone with Mlle. Stangerson in the pavilion than he would have been in the middle of the night, with Daddy Jacques sleeping in the attic. So he shut the vestibule window. That explains why neither M. Stangerson nor the keeper, who were at some distance from the pavilion, had heard the revolver shot.

"Then he went back to the yellow room. Mlle. Stangerson came in. What passed must have taken place very quickly. Mademoiselle tried to call for help, but the man had seized her by the throat. Her hand had sought and grasped the revolver which she had been keeping in the drawer of her night table, since she had come to fear the threats of her pursuer. The murderer was about to strike her on the head with the mutton bone, a terrible weapon in the hands of a Larsan or Ballmeyer, but she fired in time, and the shot wounded the hand that held the weapon. The bone fell to the floor covered with the blood of the murderer, who staggered, clutched at the wall for support, imprinting on it the red marks, and, fearing another bullet, fled.

"She saw him pass through the laboratory and listened. He was long at the window. At length he jumped from it. She flew to it and shut it. The danger past, all her thoughts were of her father. Had he either seen or heard? At any cost to herself she must keep this from him. Thus when M. Stangerson returned he found the door of the yellow room closed and his daughter in the laboratory bending over her desk at work!"

Turning toward M. Darzac, Rouletabille cried:

"You know the truth! Tell us, then, if that is not how things happened."

"I don't know anything about it," replied M. Darzac.

NERVOUS SYSTEMS

Always Follow a Run Down Condition of the Blood

It is an old story now that nervous people tell of how the blood becomes poor and thin, and then the nervous symptoms followed. How many really know that the thin blood was responsible for the nervous disorders? The nerves get all their nourishment from the blood, and as thin blood is deficient in nerve-building material, the nerves become starved and pain and nervous breakdown is the result. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are a tonic for the blood that supply it with the necessary elements to nourish and tone up the nerves and, the cause being removed, nature does the rest and health is fully restored. Mrs. Harry Patterson, Dauphin, Man., tells how she was cured of nervous and general ability through the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. She says: "A few years ago I was all run down, and my nervous system apparently all broken up. I was weak, tired and nervous all the time. When I got up in the morning I seemed to be more tired than when I went to bed. I could not walk up an ordinary flight of stairs without sitting down panting ing for breath, and my nerves trembled like a leaf. I got so that it was impossible to do any housework, and so nervous that I wanted to cry about everything I did. I took several different medicines without the least benefit; then I read of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and decided to try them. After taking two boxes I felt a little better and I got a further supply, which I continued taking for about a month, when I was as well as ever; could do all my housework without difficulty, and could walk for a long distance without being all tired out. In view of the wonders Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have done for me I sincerely recommend them to all weak, nervous, run-down people."

Sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

OVERTIME FOR THE CARETAKER

At Victoria Park After Band Concert Nights

Mr. Harry Hodge, the caretaker of Victoria Park, has a hard time in keeping up the beautiful appearance of the park.

Thousands of people tramp over the grass. Of course this can't be helped—and bannana skins, peanut shells, newspapers and empty bags are scattered about in discouraging profusion—from Mr. Hodge's standpoint, but not from the point of the banana man.

NECK BROKEN DEATH INSTANT

D. Vinette Falls From Pole---Lives in Auburn—Aged 23 Years

D. Vinette, 10 Lisburn street, Auburn, a lineman for the Otonabee Light and Power Company, was instantly killed this afternoon, shortly after two o'clock by falling off one of the cross pieces of a pole at the west corner of George and Perry streets. His neck was broken by the fall, and his left leg was also fractured.

It is thought that Vinette was overcome by the heat. He fell a distance of about thirty feet and alighted on his side on the crossing at the foot of the pole.

Richard Rorke, who conducts a butcher shop on the corner opposite the scene of the accident, saw Vinette fall, and he and one of Vinette's fellow linemen, went to the fallen man's assistance.

Dr. Gallivan and Dr. Greer were summoned, but the young man was dead when they arrived.

The body was taken to Comstock's undertaking rooms.

Vinette was twenty-three years old, and leaves a wife and one child.

There will be no inquest.

ON WATER, LAND AND RAIL; IT WAS A DAY OF PLEASURE

One of the most enjoyable outings in the history of Charlotte street Methodist Sunday school was held yesterday to Stoney Lake per steamer "Stoney Lake."

Charlotte street church people enjoy the reputation of running pleasurable excursions to interesting places and yesterday's outing proved no exception to the rule.

Leaving the Wolfe street wharf at 8.10 with just enough passengers to comfortably carry, without over-loading, The steamer Stoney Lake made the passage over the lift-lock and up the canal, arriving at the first stopping place, South Beach, about 12 o'clock.

This trip is usually considered tedious owing to the number of lockages, but the general sociability which prevailed on board proved a great factor towards relieving the monotony of this particular part of the trip.

In the bow of the steamer a refreshment booth was liberally patronized.

Several of the waiters know more about squeezing the much-abused lemon now than they did before.

A stay of two hours was made at South Beach, where dinner was discussed with avidity by all present.

A splendid bill of races, all of which were strongly contested, was the next item.

The following is the list with the names of the winners.

THE WINNERS.

Race, boys under 14.—Percy McCracken.

Race, girls, under 14.—.—Hattie Pethick.

Race, boys, 14 to 20.—Clarence Chambers.

Race girls, open.—Run 50 yards, pick up 6 beans and return with them.—Clara Pethick.

Rolling race, boys under 14.—Percy McCracken.

Obstacle race, girls. — Kathleen Moore.

Pack race, men.—Carry partner 5 yds., change and continue another.—Alfred Austin and Clarence Stewart.

Walking backwards race, open to all. —Grace Patterson.

Quadruped race, boys, open to all.—Stanley Degan.

Pick up bean race, girls vs boys, under 16.—The girls won.

Girls under eight—Audrey Kimberley.

Boys, under eight—Thomas Stewart.

A more ideal day for an excursion was hardly possible and as the boat left South Beach and continued her trip through the lakes, the ever changing view and the glimpses of the pretty cottages nestling among the trees on the islands, proved a constant source of pleasure to the eye.

Many expressions in praise of the beautiful surroundings were heard from the picnickers.

Juniper Island was the next stopping place. Quite a number got off here, although the stop was brief.

Burleigh Falls was afterwards visited, where a stay of half an hour was made. Burliegh is just as attractive this year as ever, and is a favorite retreat for tired people, who come here to be refreshed.

The homeward trip was commenced at 4 o'clock, and as the cool breezes swept across the lake, putting every person in fine fettle, music and song broke forth from those musically inclined, and no one but a grouch could feel other than pleasure.

On reaching Lakefield the excursionists boarded the train for Peterborough and arrived home at 7.30. They were tired and tanned after a day that will long be remembered by Charlotte St. Church people.

THE REASON WHY SOME YOUNG MEN LEAVE HOME

"Do you think it would be possible for me to get a position where a domestic was needed," asked a smart-looking young Englishman of Immigrant Agent Howson this morning.

He continued that "his girl" had had considerable experience and he thought that if she came out here their combined efforts would result in success.

With his brother he landed at Quebec yesterday. He is an electrician by trade and his brother a plumber, but the latter disposed of all his tools in order to get sufficient passage money.

The two young men, whose names are George and James Farnell, were placed with Mr. Jos. Bradshaw, of Monaghan, and left this afternoon for their new home. Though inexperienced in farm work, both claimed to be not afraid of work, providing, however, they received in return a fair wage.

RICH IN REMINISENCES OF YE OLD DAYS

Mr. R. H. Crown, many years ago a resident of Peterborough, who left here for Winnipeg in the year 1873, is spending a few days in the city renewing old acquaintances.

In conversation with the Review today Mr. Crown spoke very interestingly of the early history of Winnipeg, then Fort Garry.

Mr. Crown established the Grand Central Hotel there, when the population was only 400, and built the first sidewalk in the town around his hotel.

Mr. Crown's wife died some years ago and was buried in the Roman Catholic cemetery here.

IN QUEST OF KNOWLEDGE ARE PETERBOROUGH FATHERS

Mayor Morrow, City Engineer Hay, Chairman Hicks, of the Board of Works, and six aldermen of Peterborough, were in the city yesterday afternoon, inspecting London's streets, with Mr. Bangham, as asphalt block agent. The Peterborough authorities are about to make their first permanent street improvements, and are on a tour of Canadian cities with a view to getting a line on the best pavements. They left here late in the afternoon for Montreal and Toronto.

While in the city they were driven around by Chairman Tancock and Alderman Morgan, of the Public Works Committee. Alderman Tancock, who knew Mr. Bangham, thought he would put in a good word for bitulithic pavements, believing Mr. Bangham was the agent for such materials.

Mayor Morrow and the Peterborough officials greatly admired London's streets, and were struck with their straightness and the long lines of shade trees flanking the thoroughfares. Occasionally Alderman Tancock put in a word for bitulithic pavements, grinning the while, from the front seat where he handled the reins.

When the drive was over he laughingly remarked to Mr. Bangham in front of the visitors, "Well, I put a good word in for your bitulithic pavements."

"Yes, that's all right," exclaimed Mr. Bangham, "but I am the asphalt block man."—Guelph Herald.

PETERBOROUGH COMPANY MAKING EXTENSIONS

The water rights at the Auburn dam on the Otonabee river, which flows through the city of Peterborough, have been recently acquired by the Peterborough Light and Power Company, and will be developed immediately. The dam is situated within the city limits, about a mile and a half from the post office, and is midway between the old power installation of the Quaker Oats Company and the proposed development of the Canadian General Electric Company. At this point there is a fall of 18 feet. The power installation will consist of four 500 k.w. generators, three of which will be installed as soon as the power house is ready, the fourth as the demand requires. The construction of the plant will be under the supervision of Smith, Kerry & Chace, electrical engineers, Toronto. Work is to commence at once, and will be completed with this firm's usual expeditiousness.—Canadian Electrical News.

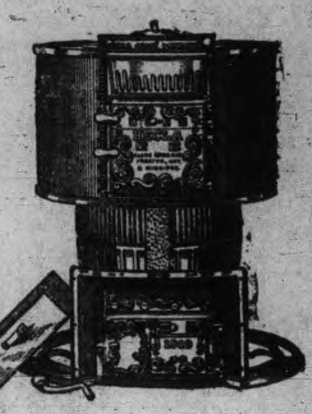
HECLA FURNACE

Has 30 Years Experience Behind It

Invaluable experience to you, who are going to buy a furnace this year.

20 years ago, we invented and patented the most important improvement made in furnace construction—our now famous FUSED JOINTS.

These joints mean an absolutely gas, dust and smoke proof furnace.



Then we adapted the FUSED JOINTS to the firepot and fused 97 steel ribs into the castiron, thus increasing the radiating surface three times that of any other firepot. An accurate three years test, proved that the "Hecla" Steel Ribbed Firepot saves one ton of coal in seven.

We learned that a steel combustion chamber was not durable. By experimenting, we found that an all-castiron chamber would last longer than a steel one.

We can help you, too, in planning the right heating for your home. Our book will tell you. Write for free copy. 103

MAKE IT KNOWN IN THE REVIEW

No more effective way can be found to recover lost articles or animals than to use the Review advertising columns. Yesterday Mr. Wm. Dummit, of North Monaghan, made known in the Weekly Review that he had lost a valuable Persian cat. A Persian cat is odd enough looking to be taken for some wild animal, especially when seen in the woods. This morning Mr. Osway Carver called to say that Mr. Dummitt's valuable cat was rooming at his (Mr. Carver's) home, and making itself at home. Mr. Dummitt at once received his pet, none the worse for a tramp of a few miles across country.

AFTERMATH---STORY OF THE SMILE THAT NEVER CAME OFF

Negro, Never in Doubt, Fear or Trouble, Played All the Time, Says Jack London

Jeffries Lost His Old Time Stamina Somewhere Outside the Ring and Did Not Put Up as Strong a Battle as Did "Tommy" Burns.

THE STORY OF THE FIGHT.

BY JACK LONDON.

RENO, Nev., July 4.—Once again has Johnson sent down to defeat the chosen representative of the white race, and this time the greatest of them. And as of old, it was play for Johnson. From the opening round to the closing round he never ceased from his witty sallies, his exchanges of repartee with his opponent's seconds and with the audience. And, for that matter, Johnson had a funny thing or two to say to Jeffries in every round.

JACK LONDON

The "golden smile" was as much in evidence as ever and neither did it freeze on his face nor did it vanish. It came and went throughout the fight, spontaneously, naturally.

It was not a great battle after all, save in its setting and its significance. Little "Tommy" Burns, down in far off Australia, put up a faster, quicker, livelier battle than did Jeffries. The fight to-day, and again I repeat, was great only in its significance. In itself it was not great. The issue, after the fiddling of the opening rounds, was never in doubt. In the fiddling of these first rounds the honors lay with Johnson, and for the rounds after the seventh or eighth it was more Johnson, while for the closing rounds it was all Johnson.

Could Afford to Play.

Johnson played, as usual. With his opponent not strong in the attack Johnson, blocking and defending in masterly fashion, could afford to play. And he played and fought a white man, in the white man's country, before a white man's audience. And the audience was a Jeffries audience.

When Jeffries sent in that awful rip of his the audience would madly applaud, believing it had gone home to Johnson's stomach, and Johnson, deftly interposing his elbow, would smile in irony at the audience, play acting, making believe he thought the applause was for him—and never believing it at all.

The greatest battle of the century was a monologue delivered to twenty thousand spectators by a smiling negro, who was never in doubt and who was never serious for more than a moment at a time.

As a fighter Johnson did not show himself a wonder. He did not have to. Never once was he extended. There was no need. Jeffries could not make him extend. Jeffries never had him in trouble once. No blow Jeffries ever landed hurt his dusky opponent. Johnson came out of the fight practically undamaged. The blood on his lip was from a recent cut received in the course of training and which Jeffries managed to reopen.

Failed to Come Back.

Jeffries failed to lead and land. The quickness he brought into the fight quickly evaporated, and while Jeffries was dead game to the end, he was not so badly punished. What he failed to bring into the ring with him was his stamina, which he lost somewhere in the last seven years. Jeffries failed to come back. That is the whole story. His old time vim and endurance were not there. Something has happened to him. He lost in retirement outside of the ring the stamina that the ring itself never robbed him of. As I have said, Jeffries was not badly damaged. Every day boys take worse lacings in boxing bouts than Jeff took to-day.

Jeffries to-day disposed of one question. He could not come back. Johnson, in turn, answered another question; he has not the yellow streak. But he only answered that question for to-day. The ferocity of the hairy chested caveman and grizzly giant combined did not intimidate the cool headed negro. Many thousands in the audience expected this intimidation, and were correspondingly disappointed. Johnson was not scared, let it be said here, and beyond the shadow of any doubt; not for an instant was Johnson scared. Not for a second did he show the flicker of a fear that the Goliath against him might eat him up.

Yellow Streak Unsettled.

But the question of the yellow streak is not answered for all time. Just as Johnson has never been extended, so has he never shown the yellow streak. Just as a man may rise up, heaven alone knows where, who will extend Johnson, just so may that man bring out the yellow streak. and then again he may not. So far the burden of proof all rests on the conclusion that Johnson has no yellow streak.

And now to the battle and how it began! All praise to "Tex" Rickard, the gamest of sports, who pulled off the fight after countless difficulties and who, cool, calm and quick with nervous aliveness, handled the vast crowd splendidly in his arena and wound up by refereeing the fight.

Twenty thousand filled the great arena and waited patiently under the cloud flecked wide Nevada sky. Of the many women present some elected to sit in the screened boxes far back from the ring, for all the world like olden Spanish ladies at the theatre. But more, many more women sat close to the ringside beside their husbands or brothers. They were the wiser far.

Merely to enumerate the celebrities at the ringside would be to write a sporting directory of America—at least a directory of the four hundred of sportdom and of many more hundreds of near four hundreds. At four minutes to two "Billy" Jordan cleared the ring amid cheers and stood alone, the focal point of twenty thousand pairs of eyes, until the great Muldoon climbed through the ropes, to call tumultuous applause and ringing cheers from the twenty thousand throats for the State of Nevada, the people of Nevada and the Governor of Nevada.

Ovations for All.

Beginning with Tex Rickard, ovation after ovation was given to all the great ones, not forgetting Fitzsimmons, whom "Billy" Jordan introduced as "the greatest warrior of them all." And so they came, great one after great one, ceaselessly, endlessly, until they were swept away before the greatest of them all, the two men who were about to do battle.

It was half-past two when Johnson entered. He came first, airy, happy and smiling, greeting friends and acquaintances here and there and everywhere in the audience, cool as ice, waving his hand in salute, smiling, smiling, ever smiling, with eyes as well as with lips, never mising a name or a face, placid, plastic, nerveless, with never a signal flown of hesitancy or timidity. Yet was he keyed up, keenly observant of all that was going on, even hearing much of the confused babble of the tongues about him—hearing, aye, and understanding, too.

There is nothing heavy or primitive about this man Johnson. He is alive and quivering, every nerve and fibre in his body and brain, withal that it is hidden so artfully or naturally under that poise of facetious calm of his. He is a marvel of sensitiveness, sensibility and perceptibility. He has a perfect mechanism of mind and body. His mind works like chain lightning and his body obeys with equal swiftness.

Welcome for Jeffries.

But the great madness of applause went up when Jeffries entered the ring two minutes later. A quick, superficial comparison between him and the negro would have led to a feeling of pity for the latter. For "Jeff" was all that has been said of him. When he stripped and his mighty body could be seen covered with mats of hair all the primordial adjectives ever applied to him received their vindication. Nor did his face belie them. No facile emotion played on that face, no whims of the moment, no flutterings of a light hearted temperament.

Dark and sombre and ominous was that face, solid and stolid and expressionless, with eyes that smouldered and looked savage. The man of iron, grim with determination, sat down in his corner. And the care free negro smiled and smiled. And that is the story of the fight. The man of iron, the grizzly giant, was grim and serious. The man of summer temperament smiled and smiled. That is the story of the whole fight. It is the story of the fight by rounds.

At the opening of the first round they did not shake hands. Knowing the two men for what they are, it can be safely postulated that this neglect was due to Jeffries or to the prompting of Jeffries' corner. But it is not good that two boxers should not shake hands before a bout. I would suggest to these protagonists of a perishing game, if they wish to preserve the game, that they make most of these little amenities that, by custom grace their sport and give it the veneer of civilization.

Go to Work Easily.

Both men went to work in that first round very easily, Johnson smiling, of course, and Jeffries grim and determined. Johnson landed the first blow, a light one, and Jeffries, in the clinches, gave a faint indication of his forthcoming tactics by roughing it, by crowding the negro around and by slightly bearing his weight upon him. It was a very easy round, with nothing of moment. Each was merely feeling the other out, and both were exceedingly careful. At the conclusion of the round Johnson tapped Jeffries playfully on the shoulder, smiled good naturedly, and went to his corner. Jeffries, in the first, showed flashes of catlike quickness.

Round Two.—Jeffries advanced with a momentary assumption of his famous crouch, to meet the broadly smiling Johnson. Jeffries is really human and good natured. He proved it right here. So friendly was that smile of Johnson's, so irresistibly catching, that Jeffries, despite himself, smiled back. But Jeffries' smiles were doomed to be very few in this fight.

And right here began a repetition of what took place down in Australia when Burns fought Johnson. Each time Burns said something harsh to Johnson in the hope of making him lose his temper, Johnson responded by giving the white man a lacing. And so to-day. Of course, Jeffries did not talk to Johnson to amount to anything, but Corbett, in the corner, did it for Jeffries. And each time Corbett cried something in particular Johnson promptly administered a lacing to Jeffries.

It began in the second round. Corbett, in line with his plan of irritating the negro, called out loudly:—

"He wants to fight a little, Jim."

"You bet I do," Johnson retorted, and with that he landed Jeffries a stinger with his right uppercut.

Both men were tensely careful, Jeffries trying to crowd and put his weight on in the clinches, Johnson striving more than the other to break out of the clinches. And at the end of the round, in his corner, Johnson was laughing gleefully. Certainly Jeffries showed no signs of boring in, as had been promised by his enthusiastic supporters.

It was the same story in the third round, at the conclusion of which the irrepressible negro was guilty of waving his hands to friends in the audience.

More Action in Fourth.

In the fourth round Jeffries showed up better, rushing and crowding and striking with more vim than hitherto shown. This seemed to have been caused by a sally of Johnson's, and Jeffries went at him in an angry sort of way. Promptly Jeffries rushed, and even ere they came together Johnson cried out:—"Don't rush me 'Jim.' You hear what I'm telling you?"

No sign there of being intimidated by Jeffries' first dynamic display of ferocity. All he managed to do was to reopen the training cut in Johnson's lip and to make Johnson playful. It was most anybody's round, and it was certainly more Jeffries' than any preceding one.

Round five brought Jeffries advancing with his crouch. The blood from Johnson's lip had turned his smile to a gory one, but still he smiled, and to balance things off he opened Jeffries' lip until it bled more profusely than his own. From then until the end of the fight Jeffries' face was never free from blood, a steady stream later flowing from his right nostril, added to by an opened cut on his left cheek. Corbett's running fire of irritation served but to make Johnson smile the merrier and to wink at him across Jeffries' shoulder in the clinches.

So far no problems have been solved, no questions answered. The yellow streak had not appeared. Neither had Jeffries a side bet of $20,000, he declared he would accept the offer. He had no comment to make on Langford's proposition that Johnson should give 2 to 1, except to say that it looked fair.

Woodman is here trying to arrange a ten round bout between Langford and Kaufman. If this cannot be done Langford and Woodman will leave Monday for Chicago, where they claim they will place the money for the Johnson side bet in the hands of a stakeholder. The only condition named by Woodman is that the promoters of the fight guarantee a suitable purse.

A. ROUNTREE, AGENT, 416 WATER STREET

RENO IS FAVORED BY JOHNSON FOR FIGHT WITH LANGFORD

Governor of Wyoming Won't Have Fight in That State—$20,000 Side Bet Suggested by the Champion—Kaufman and Langford May Battle.

Omaha, July 8.—That Nevada may get another championship fight in the near future, should Sam Langford put up $20,000 side bet demanded, was the practical admission by Jack Johnson, when he arrived here late to-night from the battle at Reno. The Johnson party, which left the desert town after Jeffries had been counted out, is still intact. The station was jammed with people despite the late hour, but outside of a few noisy cheers there was nothing out of the ordinary. A goodly share of Omaha's colored population was on hand to extend greetings to the champion.

Johnson reiterated what he had said previously during the day, that he would meet Sam Langford for a $20,000 side bet, but when told that the Governor of Wyoming had thrown cold water on the proposed bout being held at Cheyenne during the frontier celebration. Johnson said that if he and Langford would ever meet it probably would be in Nevada, and as he had been well treated at Reno it looked like the best place.

CHAMPION TO DICTATE.

When Johnson was made acquainted with Langford's counter proposition that the latter would put up the money at odds of 2 to 1, the champion said that as he himself held the title he would have nothing to say about it.

WYOMING OFF FIGHT MAP.

Cheyenne, Wyo., July 8.—Governor Brooks said this afternoon that he would not permit the Johnson-Langford or any other big prize fight in Wyoming.

"There is no show for the fight here during the Cheyenne frontier celebration," said the governor, when told of the plans for the Johnson-Langford match. "Wyoming laws forbid it, and I will see that the laws are enforced. Personally I am not opposed to the sport and would enjoy seeing the match, but the law forbids such fights, and when I took the oath of office to uphold the laws I meant it."

San Francisco, July 8.—When told that Jack Johnson had offered to fight him if he would put up a side bet of $20,000, Sam Langford said:

"My first name is 'Bet,' and I'll fight Johnson at any time and place. As he is the champion, though, the odds should be 2 to 1. I would put up $10,000 through Joe Woodman tomorrow against $20,000 of Johnson's money, and will force him to meet me in the ring."

When Joe Woodman, manager of Langford, was told late to-night that Jack Johnson had offered to fight Langford if the latter would put up

"I HONESTLY BELIEVE 'FRUIT-A-TIVES'

The Greatest Cure For Rheumatism In The World"

KNOWLTON, QUE., Oct. 12th. 1909.

"For many years, I suffered from severe Rheumatism, and the attacks were very distressing and prevented me from doing my ordinary work. I tried many remedies and physicians' treatments, but nothing seemed to do me much good, and I was becoming very anxious for fear I would become a permanent cripple from the disease.

I tried "Fruit-a-tives" and this medicine has entirely cured me and I honestly believe it is the greatest Rheumatism cure in the world."

E. E. MILLS.

Such a statement could not be bought from a man like Mr. Mills. He thinks too much of his good name, to sell it or sign it to an untruth. Mr. Mills tried "Fruit-a-tives" after all other treatment failed—and "Fruit-a-tives" cured him of Rheumatism. In the goodness of his heart, he wrote the above letter in order that sufferers in all parts of Canada would know that there is one remedy that actually does cure Rheumatism. This testimonial was entirely unsolicited on our part. We did not know that Mr Mills was taking "Fruit-a-tives" until we received the above letter.

It is a case like Mr. Mills' that proves the marvellous powers of "Fruit-a-tives" in arresting and curing disease. It may be stated, without fear of contradiction, that "Fruit-a-tives" will positively cure Rheumatism when properly used.

"Fruit-a-tives" is the only medicine in the world made of fruit juices and is the greatest Rheumatism cure known to modern science.

AFTERMATH—STORY OF THE SMILE THAT NEVER CAME OFF

bored in, gripped awfully, nor put it over Johnson in the clinches. Yet one thing had been shown, Jeffries was not so fast as he had been. There was a shade of diminution in his speed.

Blows in the Face.

Johnson signalized the opening of the sixth round by landing stinging blows to the face in one, two, three order. Johnson's quickness was startling. In response to an irritating remark from Corbett Johnson replied suavely, "Too much on hand right now," and at the same instant he tore into Jeffries.

It was Johnson's first real, aggressive rush. It lasted but a second or two, but it was fierce and dandy, and at its conclusion it was manifest that Jeffries' right eye was closing fast. The round ended with Johnson fighting and smiling, strong and with Jeffries' nose, lip and cheek bleeding and his eye closed. Johnson's round by a smile, all the way through.

The seventh round was a mild one, opening with Jeffries grim and silent and with Johnson leading and forcing. Both were careful and nothing happened, save that once they exchanged blows right niftily. So far Jeffries' roughing and crowding and bearing on of weight had amounted to nothing, also he was doing less and less of it.

Jeffries Slows Down.

"It only takes one or two, Jim," Corbett encouraged his principal in the eighth round. Promptly Johnson landed two stingers. After a pause he landed another. "See that?" he chirruped sweetly to Corbett in the corner.

Jeffries showed signs perceptibly of slowing down in this round, rushing and crowding less and less. Johnson was working harder and his speed was as flashlike as ever. Jeffries' slowing down was not due to the punishment he had received, but to poorness of condition. He was flying the first signals of fatigue. He was advertising, faintly, it is true, that he had not come back.

The ninth round was introduced by a suggestion from Corbett, heroically carrying out the policy that was bringing his principal to destruction.

"Make that big stiff fight," was Corbett's suggestion.

"That's right; that's what they all say," was Johnson's answer, delivered with true Chesterfieldian grace across his adversary's shoulder.

In the previous rounds Johnson had not wreaked much damage with the forecast punch—the right uppercut. In this round he demonstrated indisputably that he could drive the left hand in a way that was surprising. Be it remembered that it had long been denied that he had any sort of a punch in that left of his. Incidentally in this round it lead all the others, in that seemingly he landed a blow near to Jeffries' heart that must have been discouraging.

The tenth round showed Johnson, with his deft, unexpected left, as quick as ever, and Jeffries going slower and slower.

The conclusion of the first ten rounds may be summed up as follow:—

The fight was all in favor of Johnson, who had shown no yellow, who had shown condition, who had shown undiminished speed, who had not used his right uppercut much, who had developed a savage left, who held his own in the clinches, who had got the best of the infighting and the outfighting, who was unhurt and who was smiling all the way. Jeffries was in bad shape; he was tired, slower than ever, his few rushes had been futile, and the sports who had placed their money against him were jubilant.

There were men who proclaimed they saw the end. I refused to see this end, for I had picked Jeffries to win and I was hoping hugely—for what I did not know, but for something to happen, for anything that would turn the tide of battle. And yet I could not hide from myself the truth that Jeffries had slowed down.

The eleventh round looked better for Jeffries. Stung by a remark of Corbett's Johnson rushed and provoked one grand rally from Jeffries. It was faster fighting and more continuous than any time in the preceding ten rounds, culminating in a fierce rally in which Jeffries landed hard.

Round twelve found Johnson if anything quicker and more aggressive than ever.

"Thought you were going to have me wild?" Johnson queried sweetly of Corbett. As usual every remark of Corbett's brought more punishment to Jeffries. And by the end of this round the second of the two great questions was definitely answered. Jeffries had not come back.

End Begins in Thirteenth.

The thirteenth round was the beginning of the end. Beginning slowly enough, but stung by Corbett, Johnson put it all over him in the mouth fighting and all over Jeffries in the out fighting and in fighting. From defence to attack and back again and back and forth Johnson flashed like the amazing fighting mechanism he is. Jeffries was silent and sick, while as the round progressed Corbett was noticeably silent.

A few entertained the fond hope that "Jeff" would recuperate. But it was futile. There was no come back to him. He was a fading, failing, heartsick, heartbroken man.

"Talk to him, Corbett," Jeffries' friends appealed in the fourteenth round. But Corbett could not talk. He had long since seen the end.

And yet through this round Johnson went in for one of his characteristic loafing spells. He took it easy and played with the big gladiator, cool as a cucumber, smiling broadly as ever and yet as careful as ever.

"Right on the hip," he grinned out once as Jeffries, in a desperate, dying flurry, managed to land a wild punch in that vicinity. Corbett, likewise desperate, ventured a last sally.

"Why don't you do something?" he cried to the loafing, laughing Johnson.

"Too clever, too clever, like you," was the response.

Round fifteen, and the end. It was pitiful. There happened to Jeffries the bitterness that he had so often made others taste, but which for the first time, perforce, he was made to taste himself. He who had never been knocked down was knocked down repeatedly. He who had never been knocked out was knocked out. Never mind the technical decision. Jeffries was knocked out and through the ropes by the punch he never believed Johnson possessed—by the left and not by the right. As he lay across the lower rope while the seconds were told off, a cry that had in it tears and abject broken pride went up from many of the spectators.

"Don't let the negro knock him out! Don't let the negro knock him out!" was the oft repeated cry.

There is little more to be said. Jeffries did not come back. Johnson did not show the yellow streak. And it was Johnson's fight all the way through. Jeffries was not the old Jeffries at all. Even so, it is to be doubted if the old Jeffries could have put away this amazing negro from Texas, this black man with the unfailing smile, this king of fighters and monologists.

Corbett and Berger and the others were right. They wanted Jeffries to do more boxing and fighting in his training. Nevertheless, lacking the come back, as he so potently did, this preliminary boxing and fighting would have profited him nothing. On the other hand, it would have saved his camp much of the money with which it backed him.

It was a slow fight. Faster, better fights may be seen every day of the year in any of the small clubs in the land. It is true these men were heavyweights, yet for heavyweights it was a slow fight. It must be granted that plucky Tommy Burns put up a faster fight with Johnson a year and a half ago. Yet the American fight follower had to see this fight of to-day in order to appreciate just what Burns did against this colored wonder.

Johnson is a wonder. No one understands him, this man who smiles. Well, the story of the fight is the story of a smile. If ever man won by nothing more fatiging than a smile Johnson won to-day.

And where now is the champion who will make Johnson extend himself? Who will glaze those bright eyes, remove that smile and silence that golden repartee?

SPORTING COMMENT

The very newest from Chicago is that the real cause of the split between Little and Jack Johnson was that the negro's manager wanted him to lay down to Jeffries inside of eight rounds.

Mr. Gordon McClellan returned to the city from Galt last evening, where he has been in charge of Neill's branch store at that place, for the past two weeks. As far as Toronto, "Mac." had Tom Flannigan as a travelling companion, and there wasn't much said about the aviation meet in Toronto. It was all Johnson. Flannigan says that Reno held a bad crowd at the time of the fight. The crooks were there from all parts. His own brother was relieved of $500 while asleep in a hotel, and Tommy Burns lost a diamond pin. In speaking of the result of the fight, Flannigan said he never at any time felt shaky as to the final outcome. The negro was there with the goods, and Jeffries, while he looked all right, was not sound.

Tommy Dark, the official umpire of the city baseball league, handled the indicator in the first game only, at Riverside Park, this afternoon. This morning Tommy received a hurry up call from his home in Guelph, and the contents made it impossible for him to remain here. Its a Tommy Dark, jr.

The old days of jousting are long past, and dueling has almost disappeared in civilized countries. But the latter was essentially a practice which appealed to bullies and cowards; moreover it involved the loss of life, and the maiming of individuals. Granted that fisticuffs are the least dangerous method of defence or offence, the suppression of pugilism must be regarded as, in a sense, a misfortune, unless it is to usher in a condition immediately antecedent to the millenium. If it means that the most highly civilized races have reached the point when human nature will cease to assert itself on occasion in its old time form, then apprehension may well be felt as to whether our advanced civilization will be able to maintain itself until such time as the less civilized peoples of the globe arrive at a similar stage of civilization.—Ottawa Citizen.

In yesterday's Review the final results of the outdoor athletic contest, held by the Y.M.C.A. were published. The winner of the competition was "Sandy" Hall, with a total of 783 points. During the first few years of the present Y.M.C.A. "Sandy" was one of its most conspicuous members, and particularly so in the gymnasium. Then he retired, but from that time to this season, some eight years, or thereabouts, he has taken such care of himself that now he is enabled to again compete in athletics, and also come out ahead. The institution is no doubt proud of such an athlete.

At last we have it. After every other excuse has been sprung we are told that Jeffries, the fighting has-been, was doped before he entered the ring at Reno. He was dopy all right, but whether the condition was natural or produced by artificial means is something the public will not likely ever discover.

The younger members of the Y.M.C.A. left to-day for their annual camp at Sandy Point. The boys will have a good time, and the parents can rest assured that in Messrs. Sharpe and Thompson, they have capable guardians.

The latest is to the effect that steps are being taken to keep Jack Johnson off the stage. Looks like a case of "rubbing it in."

THE DIAMOND

Baseball players, like every one else, have their peculiarities. Not a man but has some trick that would make him known to the fans even though they could not see his features. Lajoie draws a line between himself and the plate. Then if he misses a couple of pitched balls he whangs the front of the plate vigorously with his bat and points the big end of the club at the pitcher.

George Stovall always straddles his legs apart, hitches up his belt, pulls down the peak of his cap and gives his pants anothr hitch. The less success he has in batting the more frequent the pulling of pants and cap.

Bill Bradley usually moves to the striking place slowly. When he arrive he carefully puts one foot well front and one well back. Then he stands with legs apart and holds his bat straight across the plate. When he swings at the ball his whole body moves, but his feet remain still.

Justin Clarke always hustles to bat. He hits the plate, but not in the same way Lajoir does. He taps it with little nervous jerks of the bat. If he misses a ball or two he waves his bat in front of the catcher in a little circle and hops around on one foot.

"Big Bill" Hinchman walks to bat with much dignity. Bill holds his bat on his shoulder and makes no preliminary movements. When a ball comes along that he thinks he can hit he swings and if he misses he swings at the next one. Bill has no characteristic attitudes. Bristol Lord pulls his cap down as though trying to hide his ears when he bats.

How They Do it In the City of Guelph

The clerks' annual field day, which yesterday afternoon marked their first weekly half holiday of the summer season was a decidedly successful outing. The program of races and games which was carried out so successfully by the officers of the Clerks' and Salesmen's Association, was a most interesting and amusing one.—Herald.

A CANADIAN'S GREAT BOOK.

John Stuart Thomson, the Montreal-born author's popular book, is winning great praise in America for vigorous style. The Philadelphia Record says: "'The Chinese'" is a notable work. Mr. Thomson's patriotism is distinct from alliance with the Trusts; he cuts free from class and appeals to the justice, sense of liberty and ambition in the masses." The Philadelphia Ledger writes: "The work is full of information of a practical nature, vigorously and clearly conveyed." The Easton, (Pa., "Call," says: "Some of the most effective writing on the economic problem which is now stirring America occurs in John Stuart Thomson's notable book, "The Chinese."

Mr. Thomson is also the author of two other books, "Estabelle" and "A Day's Song," published by Briggs, Toronto.

WM. HAMILTON CO. LOSES ACTION TO RECOVER $2,000

Mr. Justice Britton has dismissed the action of the Wm. Hamilton Manufacturing Company, of Peterborough, against the Hamilton Steel & Iron Co. to recover $2,000 for the non-delivery of 250 tons of pig iron.

Mr. Justice Britton holds that where the purchaser of goods sold on credit becomes a bankrupt before the vendor has parted with possession of the goods, the trustee in bankruptcy has the right to complete the contract by paying the agreed price within a reasonable time. Here the liquidator of the Hamilton Manufacturing Company had not paid for the iron, so his action fails.

A MAD RUN

A sensational runaway accident occurred this afternoon at the corner of Simcoe and Water streets about 3 o'clock.

Mr. Timlin, of Frazerville, was driving a spirited team up Water street, and at the corner they took fright at the auto owned by the manager of the Bank of Montreal, and made a sudden bolt.

The rivet in the neck-yoke was jerked out, and the team started down Simcoe street in the direction of the Peterborough Cereal Company. Here they ran into a pile of gas pipe and sustained severe cuts about the knees and feet.

Mr. Timlin made an effort to stop them and was kicked on the leg. The team was afterwards caught, however, and a couple of bystanders took them to the stables of the Little Windsor Hotel.

Mr. Timlin is well known here. Some few months ago he was burned out at Frazerville.

The buggy is badly damaged and the horses were badly cut up.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

To the Editor of the Review.

Sir,—A timely notice has been given our new chief of police concerning loafing on street corners and in doorways, which we trust will result in the removal of the nuisance.

Will you kindly allow me to further advise our new chief that we have not leased Aylmer street as a driving park nor a race course.

The writer enjoys riding behind or looking at a smart and pretty horse, but when striving to follow an instructive, thoughtful sermon it is neither helpful nor enjoyable to have to listen to the hum of wheels and the clatter of horses hoofs on the public street. If our young men who wish to exhibit the speed of his horse to his best girl will do so after church hours we would consider it a favor.

Sincerely yours,

RATEPAYER.

THE COURSE OF TRUE LOVE NE'ER RUNS SMOOTH

This is a strenuous age and we are liable to forget. Not even the clergymen are immune. Last evening the telephone in this office rang loudly. It sounded like a tip on something big, but the real cause of the call was that a local minister, who after having passed through a very busy month of June weddings, had forgotten to replenish his stock of marriage certificates, and lo, the prospective husband and wife were ready for the final plunge.

The office boy, entering into the spirit of the occasion, put on an extra effort and everybody was happy.

ACTS IN THE INTEREST OF TRAVELLING PUBLIC

Duties of Provincial Inspector of Hotel Accomadation—Hotels Must Make Improvements Sneggested — Peterborough Hotels Inspected

"My special duty is to inspect the hotels of the province in the interests of the public," said Mr. W. K. Snider, provincial inspector of hotel accommodation, to the Review this morning.

Mr. Snider has completed an inspection of the licensed hotels of West and East Peterborough looking over the hotels at Burleigh and Mount Julian yesterday afternoon. In conversation with the reporter he incidentally remarked that the trip up the lakes was a very delightful one, and he has a high opinion of the attractive summering places to the north.

MUST MAKE IMPROVEMENTS.

Mr. Snider was appointed eighteen months ago, and as he has the entire responsibility for the inspection of the whole province, has to work quickly and travel fast. He makes a general inspection of the accommodation of the hotels as to their rooms, beds linen, cleanliness etc., and if any changes are advisable in his opinion, he hands the proprietors a list of the improvements. If these are not acted on in a specified time, he uses his authority to cancel the license.

"I generally find, however," said Mr. Snider, "that the proprietors of good hotels respond cheerfully in the matter of making improvements."

COMPLETE RENOVATIONS SOMETIMES.

"There are thousands of people travelling in the province who have been used to clean, comfortable accommodation at home. It is a hardship for these to be forced to sleep in stuffy, unsanitary rooms and submit to other inconveniences which they shouldn't be forced to tolerate in a licensed hostelry."

In making out his lists of improvements the inspector sees to it that the accommodation is brought up to the standard without any exceptions, and in the case of many poorly managed and inadequately equipped houses a complete renovation is necessary before the necessary changes are effected.

"The object of my appointment," said the inspector, "is not for the persecution of the hotelmen, but for the protection of the travelling public."

NO ELECTION IN SIGHT; CAMPAIGNING NOT PURPOSE OF TOUR, SAYS SIR WILFRID

In the Opening Meeting of His Trip at Port Arthur the Premier Discusses Matters of Transportation and Makes Promises to the Twin Cities.

Fort William, July 11.—The problems of transportation confronting Canada at the present time formed the principal theme of Sir Wilfrid's address at the opening meeting of his western tour Saturday night. He showed the strategical position of Port Arthur and Fort William in the commerce of the country. He discussed at length the Welland Canal and the Georgian Bay and Ottawa Canal project, which, he said, was one of the "next things to be done" by the Government. Sir Wilfrid's remarks were accepted as virtually constituting a committal to the scheme.

He spoke positively of the future policy of the Government in regard to transportation matters, and in responding to an address of welcome at Port Arthur, said: "We will spend two dollars to your one; where you take one step we will take two."

George A. Graham, ex-president of the local Liberal Association, was chairman, and on the platform were: James Conmee, M.P.; Mayor L. L. Pelletier, Fort William; Mayor L. L. Mathews, Port Arthur; James Campbell, president of the local Board of Trade; J. R. Newby, W. W. Hamilton, Y. O. Corbett, W. K. O'Donnell and Dr. J. R. Manion.

Over 25,000 people thronged the large Arena Theatre and attentively listened to every word.

"Whatever success has accompanied my efforts, has come altogether, if not altogether, certainly the greater part, from those with whom I am fortunate enough to be associated," said Sir Wilfrid, in responding to the civic address. He made sport of the fear of a section of the Conservative party that the election would immediately follow the present tour. The Conservative press admitted that delay would make for the advantage of the Opposition. He joked at the abandonment of the proposed Conservative convention at Ottawa. There was no reason why he should desire an election in the fall, he was not afraid of the consequences of the naval policy.

He also wanted the country to know all about the cost of the National Transcontinental. "We have nothing to fear on the score, because every dollar that is expended on the railway is honestly expended," said the Prime Minister. "We will have no general election this fall; we will not, until the time calls for it, under the terms of the constitution.

"The object of this trip is that we, I and my colleagues and supporters of the Government, should become better acquainted with this new and rapidly progressing western country. It is to visit and see with our eyes these new communities, in the cities, towns, villages and farms which are springing up in every province, as if by magic. It is to extend a hand of welcome to those new fellow-citizens who come to us from the United States and from Europe, to make our country their country, to become Canadians and to make Canada a country even to be more proud of. It is to ascertain what are the requirements of these new communities, and what is the measure of duty and responsibility devolving upon us, who are entrusted at the present time with the responsibility of Government in this country. This is our object. Nothing more and nothing less," declared the Prime Minister.

Sir Wilfrid concluded his remarks by paying a tribute to the memory of King Edward, who earned the greatest title ever given to any monarch—"the peacemaker."

E. McDonald, M.P., Pictou, was the first speaker. He congratulated the twin cities on the reception given Sir Wilfrid, who was entitled to honor for the splendid administration he had given to the country for the past fourteen years, which, when the history of this generation was written, these years would be known as the first "gold age" of Canada.

F. F. Pardee, M.P., Lambton, chief Liberal whip, said that in so far as they had gone, the Liberal party had had a record of progress.

Hon. G. P. Graham spoke vigorously in defence of the Government's action in respect of the Quebec bridge, which was a joint idea on the part of Sir Wilfrid and the Province and City of Quebec. He justified the Transcontinental Act by saying that its low grades and standard of construction would reduce rates and make more money for consumer and producer alike. Answering criticism of the Conservative leader, the Minister said that the G.T.P. had agreed to take over the eastern section of the Transcontinental without waiting for the Quebec bridge to be completed.

Owing to the Manitoba elections being held on Monday, Sir Wilfrid Laurier will not arrive at Winnipeg until Tuesday morning. Sir Wilfrid does not desire that his presence on polling day should be construed into an act of interference.

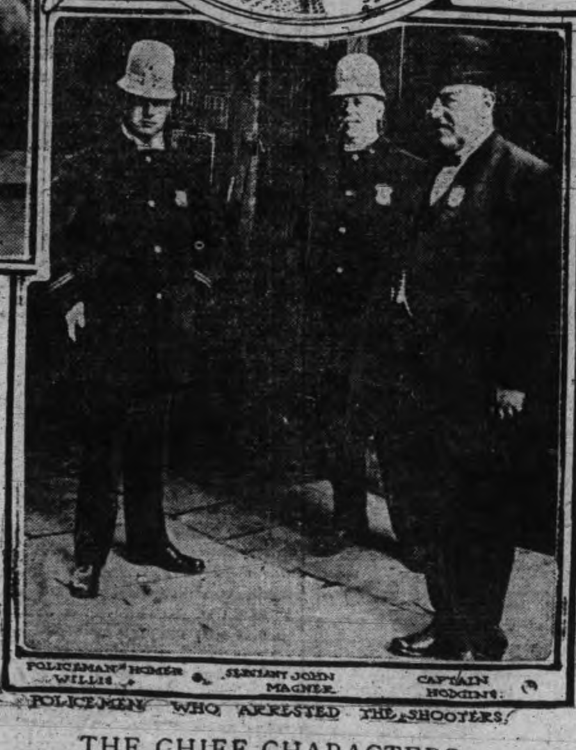
Shot Because She Wouldn't Elope.

New York, July 11.—Unable to persuade Nellie Meserley to run away with him, Joseph Frank of Newark, N.J., a married man, and the father of two children, shot her through the heart Saturday night, and then killed himself in full sight of the crowds that thronged the board walk at South Beach station. The girl will probably die.

New Use For Airship.

Berlin, July 11.—The Admiralty board has arranged for the visiting fleet engaged in the grand manoeuvres this year to be kept in constant communication with land by means of a dirible airship fitted with wireless telegraphy. This is the first time that a dirigible has been used for this purpose.

FIERCE FEUD IN NEW YORK ARISING OUT OF THE WHITE SLAVE TRAFFIC



THE CHIEF CHARACTERS

The murder of the little white slave girl Bow Geum, whose picture is given, has stirred the Four Brothers Society and the On Leong Tong into a feud in New York. It has cost 37 lives and the end is not yet.

MORE HEADS TO FALL AT OTTAWA

Ottawa, July 11.—The announcement that the Printing Bureau will have a new superintendent of printing, as well as a new superintendent of stationery, to succeed Frank Gouldthrite, the unfortunate official who committed suicide, has caused a good deal of talk in the capital.

Wm. C. McMahon, the superintendent of printing, whom, it is assumed, the Minister proposes to superannuate, is widely known in the capital.

It is assumed that if the Secretary of State proposed to have a new superintendent of printing there will be other sweeping changes at the bureau, and that many heads are likely to fall. To-day it is reported that two additional members of the bureau staff, holding subordinate positions, received their dismissals on Saturday, and the expectation is that, as the enquiry proceeds more heads will fall into the basket.

Just when Mr. Murphy will be ready to take the public into his confidence as to the progress of the enquiry is not known, but it is probable that a statement will be given out before the end of the week.

NEW HOPE IN WEST

Showers in Manitoba Cause More Optimistic Outlook.

Winnipeg, July 11.—Cooler weather and showers over the greater part of the province have characterized the past forty-eight hours, with the result that a distinctly more optimistic tone is prevalent regarding spring wheat prospects in Manitoba.

"The wonderful recuperative properties of the soil are felt now," said the representative of a leading elevator interest yesterday, "and provided conditions continue as at present, the next week or two will see a remarkable recovery. Of course, the droughts and burning heat accomplished its work in some districts, where land is light and showers have been few.

"No doubt considerable areas of spring wheat are or will be plowed under, but much of the heavy land, which is the backbone of Manitoba wheat production, is well capable of supporting the unusual drought and of returning in the end a fair average yield. It depends entirely on the weather conditions of the balance of the month. People who are now talking of the very considerable failure in Manitoba will get a big surprise if we have right weather conditions with general rains."

The encouraging note finds expression further west, and reports from the older settled districts of Saskatchewan in particular are encouraging.

BOTH SIDES ARE CONFIDENT

Winnipeg, July 11.—The eve of the election sees both sides very confident of the result. Ten seats is the most the Conservative organizer last night would concede the Liberals, while the Premier predicts that the Opposition will have but eight. The Opposition on the other hand claim they will have two or three majority. The general feeling is that the Government will be returned with possibly a slightly decreased majority. Conservatives concede that Hon. G. R. Coldwell is liable to be beaten in Brandon. George Steel, Cypress River, who opposed the Government elevator bill, is also in danger. South Winnipeg is also another seat which is likely to go Liberal.

Last night the Conservatives claimed that the G.T.P. is taking too active a hand in the election, and that in Lansdowne constituency particularly, where there is a G.T.P. divisional point, Rivers, many Conservative votes have been sent out of the constituency.

OUTWITTED THE BANDITS

St. Louis, Mo., July 11.—Cleverness on the part of the engineer prevented three youthful bandits from robbing the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Southewestern "flyer" near Lilmore, early yesterday. The bandits, with revolvers, compelled Engineer Quinn and the fireman to descend from the cab and go with them to the baggage car, to assist in uncoupling it.

While tinkering about the coupling the engineer and fireman, in the darkness, managed to glide away from the bandits and ran toward the cab. The bandits shot at them, but they jumped into the cab, and the engineer threw the throttle wide open and dashed away with the train.

CANOEIST AND BATHER ARE CLAIMED BY TORONTO WATERS

James Furness, Aged Sixteen, Gets Beyond His Depth at at One of the Most Dangerous Points on Humber River—Howard Hill Rents a Canoe an it is Found Later on Humber Bay.

Toronto, July 11.—Six drownings in eight days is a sad record for Toronto. The bay claimed one, the lake two, the Humber River two, and a brickyard pond the other.

Two more victims have been claimed by the water. They are:

Howard Hill, 103 Givens street, upset while canoeing in the lake; body not found.

James Furness, 2 Geoffrey street, while bathing in the Humber.

Only five days after, and in exactly the same spot in the Humber River where young Arthur Burt came to his death, James Furness was drowned yesterday afternoon at about 2 o'clock while bathing, about half a mile up from the mouth of the river, at the spot known as Dead Man's Point.

Furness, who was 16 years old, was bathing with another lad considerably younger, when he got beyond his depth. He could not swim at all and sank at once. The body came up twice, but no one but the small companion, who also was unable to swim, was at hand.

G. Arrowsmith and Fred Devereaux were dragging for a pouch which had been lost in the river but a short time before by one of the York Radial conductors who had been upset from a canoe, but a little distance away. These two men were summoned, but it was 20 minutes before the body was recovered. Drs. A. C. Ricker and Forbes Godfrey were on the spot almost at once, but resuscitation was impossible.

Dr. Ricker will hold an inquest at Humber Bay to-night at 8.30, and much stress will be laid upon the frequency of such accidents at this very dangerous point, with a view to having the city or county authorities install some kind of life-saving station at this point.

The deceased had only been out in this country a little over three weeks, and had been living with his sister at 2 Geoffrey street. He was employed by the Eaton Co.

Howard Hill, living at 103 Givens street, was drowned in the lake an Saturday night. A canoe containing a coat and hat was discovered opposite Stop 6, just west of the mouth of the Humber, at about 11.30 p.m. The find was reported to Constable Simpson, and the canoe identified as one hired from O. L. Hicks' boathouse during the day. Papers in the pocket of the coat pointed to its owner being Hill, and the hat was also identified on Sunday by the young man's father. Mate Aykroyd has not yet succeeded in finding the body.

WALTER BROOKINS IN BIPLANE BREAKS ALTITUDE RECORD

Daring Young Aviator Uses His Last Drop of Gasoline to Reach Immense Altitude, and is Then Forced to Glide in Spirals on Descending Trip.

Atlantic City, N.J., July 11.—Walter Brookins, in a Wright biplane, broke the world's altitude record here Saturday evening, when he attained a height of 6,178 feet, or about 1 1-16 miles. He used his last drop of gasoline at his highest altitude, and was still climbing when his engine missed explosions. The daring aviator brought his machine back to level to get the last drop of fuel out of the storage tank, to reach the line of vision of engineers on the beech. Reaching the imaginary line, Brookins started to glide to earth, and his engine stopped entirely when he was at 5,600 feet and still over the ocean.

His circled glide, which the crowd thought fancy flying, was done to save himself from diving into the sea. Brookins was ready to collapse when he reached the ground, and did not tell of his plight in the air until midnight, after he had partly recovered.

The officials at midnight gave 6,175 feet as the exact height of the flight, from the calculations of engineering experts. It is said that the record will stand without protest.

By his feat Brookins wins the $5,000 prize offered by the Atlantic City Aero Club, for breaking the world's record, unless a higher altitude is reached here before the end of the present week.

Brookins spent exactly 1 hour 3 minutes 15 1-5 seconds in the air, according to the official timing of the contest committee of the national council of the Aero Club of America. About 57 minutes of this time was made in the circling ascent, the rush of over a mile to the ground consuming less than seven minutes. Fear that Brookins at his highest point had not crossed the line of vision of the expert engineers in charge of securing his height by triangulation startled officials and spectators, until it was discovered that the failure to obtain a record of his crossing the imaginary line, on which his record will be based, was on two swings at a much lower altitude than at the final highest point.

It is calculated that nearly 10,000 people watched the flight and cheered Brookins when he descended at 7.11 p.m.

Monoplanes Made All the Records.

Bethany Plains, Rheims, July 11.—The international aviation meeting, at which new records for height, distance, speed and time were set, came to a close yesterday. The meeting was a triumph for the monoplanes, which made all the records and carried off the majority of the prizes.

The experts declare that the most important achievement was the record made by Leon Morane, who attained a speed of more than 68 miles an hour. They believe that this will be followed soon by a speed of 180 to 200 kilometres, at which speed aeroplanes will be little affected by the wind. The moment is in sight, they think, when travel by aeroplane will be as safe and twice as fast as by train.

The distance and duration records established by M. Labouchere Saturday, 340 kilometres (211.14 miles) in 4 hours 37 minutes 45 seconds, were broken yesterday by Olieslagers, who made a magnificent flight of 393 kilometres (244.44 miles) in 5 hours, 3 minutes 5 seconds. On landing Olieslagers was handed a telegram of congratulation from the King of the Belgians.

Aviator Fatally Injured.

Ghent, Belgium, July 11.—Daniel Kinet, the Belgian aviator, was seriously hurt yesterday while making a flight. The rudder of his machine broke when he was at a considerable height, and the aeroplane turned over several times, dropping like a stone in a wheat field. It is thought that Kinet is fatally injured.

Prominent London Merchant Dead.

London, Ont., July 11.—Wm. H. Smith, formerly a prominent hardware merchant in this city, died at his home here yesterday, aged 53 years. He has been ill for some months, but his death was unexpected.

Boy Killed by Muskoka Express.

Bradford, July 11.—Earle Saint, aged 11, was killed by the northbound Muskoka express here. He was standing on the main line trying to hand a lacrosse stick to one of the players on the train going to Newmarket.

GRAND TRUNK AND CENTRAL VERMONT TRAINMEN REACH CRISIS

Montreal, July 11.—The rather startling news is given out that a strike vote will be taken this week by the trainmen of the Grand Trunk and Central Vermont systems.

It will be remembered that after deciding to accept the arbitrators' award, Chas. M. Hays, upon his return from the west, changed his mind and asked the men to negotiate. This they have to-day absolutely refused to do and have notified the Grand Trunk authorities to this effect.

All the Grand Trunk men who have been here during the negotiations, left for their respective homes yesterday, and the vote will be submitted to the men during the week. As for the C.P.R., negotiations, it is understood, that matters are progressing favorably.

It is stated by Vice-President Murdock of the trainmen that this proceeding is really a formality in accordance with the conservative methods of the Trainmen's Union. A new position was created by the G.T.R. accepting the majority report of the Board of Conciliation and the further proposition of Mr. Hays, and the general committee considered that before going any farther in the matter it would be the part of wisdom to consult the men. Although this is done, the members of the general committee stated that they had not the slightest doubt as to the answer, and that the Grand Trunk men would stand solid for their demand for the full standard wage for the territory east of Chicago.

In addition to this the committee refused the suggestion of Mr. Hays that the matter be referred to an arbitration of experts, arguing that the matter had been already thoroughly arbitrated and such further procedure would be a waste of time. Another new aspect to the position was the addition of the Central Vermont to the dispute as an appendage of the Grand Trunk, and a strike vote on the proposition will also be taken this week from the 300 employes of that line, when it is expected that they will fall in line with the other Grand Trunk men.

The question to be submitted to the men all over the Grand Trunk System is, "Are they willing to accept the offer of President Hays, or are they ready to do as they expressed themselves on the previous vote and stand behind their general committe to the utmost extent in insisting upon the adoption of the eastern association standard wage?"

MORE SPIRITS ARE CONSUMED

Ottawa, July 11.—Statistics issued by the Department of Inland Revenue show that last year the Canadian people consumed more of liquor and less of beer than in the previous year. Of spirits the consumption per head of population in the fiscal year was .815 gallons; of beer 5,276 gallons; of wine, .97 gallons, and of tobacco 2,940 pounds.

Of the fiscal year of 1909 the consumption of spirits per head was .806 gallon; of beer 5,348 gallons; of wine .085 gallon, and of tobacco 2,910 pounds.

The latter increase in consumption is not out of proportion to the increase in population, and compared with the old days, there is a substantial decrease. Thirty years ago two gallons of liquor were consumed for every head of population, now it is less than a gallon.

There is a steady, but not abnormal increase in the use of tobacco.

Return That Chicken

The party who took the black Minorca chicken from a box in the rear of an Aylmer street residence, last week, will save himself a lot of trouble by returning it at once.

F. D. MONK ON NAVAL POLICY

Quebec, July 11.—In the presence of a large audience at Beauport yesterday afternoon, F. D. Monk placed the naval policy before the people as something of more interest to them than appeared from simple enactment of Parliament. He spoke for an hour and his language was moderate, there was running through it an undertone of gravity, accentuated by references he made to his health and to the loss of personal friendships suffered for taking a position which he believed to be in the interest of Canadians.

J. Turcott, federal member for Quebec County, was permitted to speak in defence of the Government. He had the imprudence to make reflecting comments on Armand Lavergne, who resented the insinuation and for a moment or two the bystanders had to exercise themselves quickly to prevent a personal encounter.

Fined $10.00

For indulging in forbidden refreshments, a local blacklister was fined $10.00 at the police court this morning. Ten days is the limit.

THERE'S A HITCH IN BANK MERGER

Montreal, July 11.—There is a hitch between the Royal Bank of Canada and the Union Bank of Halifax about a difference of opinion over the value of certain assets of the latter institution. It was stated here yesterday that a leading official of the Canadian Bankers' Association would have to be called in to act as arbitrator.

Wm. Robertson and E. L. Thorne, president and general manager of the Union respectively, arrived here yesterday, and will meet the Royal people to-day, when further progress, so it is said, will be made in the negotiations.

Drowned With Stones In Pocket.

Inglewood, July 11.—The corpse of a man about 35 or 40 years of age was found in the Credit River, one mile north of Inglewood, on the farm of W. Kidd Saturday, by Mr. Hooper, a neighbor. A stone was found in each pocket and one tied around the neck with a handkerchief. A black christy hat found on the band has the name Phillips written on the sweatband.

THE TOLL OF COMMERCE

D. Vinette is gone, one of the working host. Killed on Saturday, the result of a fall from an electric wire pole, the jury will meet to-night to endeavor to ascertain the cause of death. His was a fall in the open. He did not suffer. He was not maimed. He died instantly. The Toronto Star says:—

> The Ontario factory inspectors report 665 accidents during 1909. Although this is an increase over the previous year, the report is gratifying, rather than otherwise, the chief inspector vouching for the fact that "this increase is due to a better observance of reporting accidents and to increased industrial activity. Each year's work adds to the general equipment and measures of safety provided in factories."

Six hundred and sixty-five accidents.

A regiment of maimed and mutilated.

It is surprising that a paper like the Toronto Star should dismiss the report with a paragraph.

Six hundred and sixty-five accidents, a finger gone, an eye gone, a leg gone, a hand gone, an eye gone, full usefulness gone, a family bereaved and a widow. What an array it would make, what a sermon on the grim avarice of commerce, to marshall the living ones from the ranks of the six hundred and sixty-five and let them parade our province. And how would it do to carry a banner inscribed, "Wounded in the battle of life while fighting for our daily bread."

But in spite of care, there will always be accidents, the belt is ever slipping, the tool is every cutting, the wheel will break, the load will fall.

NUMBER 1639

He was a conductor in the city of Toronto and the number he wore was 1639 on a King west car. She was an old lady, nervous, with the fears of age upon her. The car stopped at the corner of John street and 1639 assisted her to alight. She was uncertain of her direction and produced a paper, which 1,639 quickly unfolded and read and pointed the way. Then he climbed on board. The car went on. The old lady went on. And so did the world. But it went on just a little smoother, with just a little less jar, because 1639 had been so kind to the old lady. This took place on July 1st, but the little act of kindness still lingers in the mind of one who witnessed it.

The great acts, the endowing of a college, or a hospital, the giving of a million or a park are within the reach of the very few. But there are none so poor but that they can smile with those who know sighs best, who can sympathize with those who sorrow. None are so busy, but just where they are, as they travel this narrow space, this little way between the birthday and death day, they can extend many little kindnesses of word, thought or deed to the ones they meet.

THE POODLE DOG

In London, England, this moment are many thousands who are going supperless to bed.

What is that to us?

Oh! nothing.

In the same great Babylon are thousands upon thousands who have no home. They thank God in their hearts if not in prayer audible and sleep in boxes, in wagons, in door ways, in the parks, anywhere, everywhere. They thank God it is summer time.

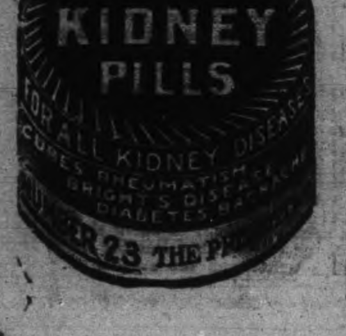
But this is nothing to us, we are not hungry, we have a bed and home.

In that great maelstrom of humanity some are not only hungry and homeless, but starving.

We are not.

Yes, across in that world wide capital, that awful city of dizzy heights and unfathomable mysteries, there are the starving ones, and dogs on whom enough is spent to keep many families and attended to by maids.

One female, we will not call her a lady, keeps a French poodle in a luxuriously furnished room and has a French maid to await his imperious barking. The dog wears shoes in wet weather lest it dampen its feet. It is taken driving behind coachman and footman. And ragged children starve, hungry children wonder, but the dog is not to blame, and the Lord lets the female live on.



A BAD YEAR

On its front page Saturday, the Toronto Star has a heading reading, "Toronto is not getting tourists. This year's stream seems to be passing by the Queen City." The article reads in part;

"It's as bad a year as was 1908," said Mr. Bailey, of the King Edward, this morning, "and that was a bad year. The hotels are not doing half the business they should. Even when you see a lot of names on the registers, it is often the case that they are coming in on one train and going out on the next.

"The Lord's Day Alliance has got quite a lot to do with the falling off in the tourist trade. The people simply won't stay here over Sunday because there is nothing for them to do."

It is difficult to understand what some of the extremists of the Lord's Day Alliance would have us do. In protest against their avowed determination to cut off many forms of innocent Sunday pleasure, a Rational Sunday League was formed in Toronto with Noel Marshall, the late Goldwin Smith and many other gentlemen of like calibre, as active members. What does the Lord's Day Alliance want us to do? Is it a sin for a man whose duties keep him confined to his work six days a week to hitch up, to hire a livery, drive to the country to visit a friend? Is it wrongful for him to take his wife and family, or his sweetheart on the river or down to the lake in a launch? Will the sky, the water, the birds or the trees defile him? Will nature lead his thoughts afar from God? Will they? Is it evil to take a dish of ice cream in a store on Sunday? Is it? Sunday is sacred, so is Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, to say nothing of Thursday, Friday and Saturday. Life is sacred, our friendships, may we hold them so. Our business should be sacred too, and the man who sells groceries, or dry goods, music or hardware, has a calling just as honorable, and if he abide by the rules of honor is worthy of as much respect as the man who makes or interprets the laws sacred or secular.

But what of Sunday, must the little children put away their toys, must the youth cease his whistling, must we dress up and parade to church and back and sit silent till the sun goes down to rest to rise again. It seems so.

Sunday seems not a day of joy and freedom, but a day where rules must be observed lest one be ostracized.

PHYSICALLY FIT

The other day a little man licked a big fellow in front of the Grand Union hotel in Toronto. It was done with neatness and dispatch. The little man was thin and wiry. The other man was fat and paunchy. The little fellow was physically fit. The big fellow was a fatty degenerate. It does not cost much effort to be physically fit. A few minutes exercise on rising every morning keeps Bernan Macfadden, one of the finest, clean-cut, strong men of our day in fine shape. For a week every few months he fasts, eating nothing, drinking only water, and giving the digestive machinery of the body a rest. Macfadden is no chicken, but he looks youthful, feels youthful and taking a pack of cards in his wiry hands he can tear them in two half and quarter them just as easily as he would throw you over his shoulder and sit on you. He is physically fit.

In these days of prize fight lore and gossip, we must not run away with the idea that it is necessary to be a giant in statutre or large around the bicep to be in proper trim. We expect to see a fat pig. That porker is physically fit. But we do not look for the fat horse, for everyday use in harness, the fat dog for chasing the quarry in the fall. We can all be physically fit, but it costs at least half an hour a day and careful attention to diet.

SWEET WILLIAM

The Sault Ste. Marie Star, a live paper, recently dealt effectively with Hon. William Pugsley, late of the Central Railway, later of the Sawdust Wharf. A correspondent asked the editor if he did not consider Hon. William Pugsley one of the most promising men in public life in Canada to-day.

"Indeed we do," replies the Star, "and not only one of the best, but as a promiser, he is laps and laps ahead of any man in Canada.

Why, Lord love you, when the occasion seems to require it, Mr. Pugsley will promise anything from a railroad to a moon to a refrigerator plant in a warm climate, and as for dry docks an great ocean ports, he would as soon promise these to the Yukon, as to any of the great sea ports of Alberta, and it must be kept in mind that Mr. Pugsley is always "serious."

"It is related that at the time of the great race for the Queen's Cup, her late Majesty Queen Victoria, was so interested in the contest that she had messengers bring her frequent word as to the positions of the different yachts, and when at last word came that the "America" had won, she asked which was second, and received the reply, "There was no second." So it is with Willie as a promiser. There is no second. He is 'IT,' 'The whole cheese,' 'The only pebble,' and it will be long, long years, before we see his like again. At least that is our opinion, and we would like it to be well understood that we are backing Willie for this stunt.

"Vive Pugsley, pride of the Premier, Prince of Promisers, and Personificator of Purity.

"A great man is Willie — SWEET WILLIAM."

STILL STINKING

The garbage barrel in the back yard is still breeding smells, and the fly that will soon be on the table or in the milk is now a maggot in the filth. WHERE IS THE GARBAGE SYTSEM OF PETERBOROUGH?

It is no tremendous feat to frame a by-law whereby those who desire garbage removed may have it and pay for the same, while those who can get along without it by burying their garbage in their premises do not need to pay. But stinks still stink, the flies still breed and the question of garbage as a daily nuisance is still unsettled.

A UNIQUE EXPERIENCE.
Kingston Whig.

Guelph looks forward to the time when it will occupy the unique position of being a taxless city. From its various utilities it will be making enough to cover all the expenses of municipal government, and the tax rate commonly levied will be abolished. Here is an object lesson which every city and town in the province may study with advantage.

THE WHITE MAN AT RENO.
The Telegram, Toronto.

Prize fighting may be recognized as a stage in the ascent of the black race from barbarism to civilization.

Prize fighting might also be recognized as a stage in the descent of the white race from civilization to barbarism.

The black man at Reno represented a race that is fighting its way up towards civilization.

The white man at Reno represented a race that is fighting its way down towards barbarism.

THE PRIZE FIGHT.
St. Thomas Times.

When Horace Greeley was head of the New York Tribune a reader once wrote to the paper blaming it for printing an account of a prize fight. In a footnote Mr. Greeley replied to him in these words:—

"What God permits to occur the Tribune is not ashamed to print."

A PROBLEM IN CRIMINOLOGY.
Kingston Standard.

Two men were recently tried in Montreal for housebreaking and sentenced, the one to three years, the other to two years in prison. The former had already been convicted on twenty-three occasions for offences, ranging from drunkenness to robbery, and has served 15 years in the penitentiary; the latter had been convicted twelve times and had served four years. There is something radically wrong here. Is it the men or our system of administering justice.

TACT.
The Sketch.

One story, I believe unpublished, of King Edward's tact, is a prettier example than most of its kind. The Shah of Persia was dining at Marlborough House; the dessert being reached he stretched his hand, and took a large and very pulpy fruit from the centre of the table. After one or two mouthfuls he threw the remaining portion, with skin and stone, over his shoulder so that they hit the wall behind him with much squelching noise. One other fruit of the same kind was on the dish and there was a horrified pause in the talk; would the guest from afar repeat the operation before the rather fastidious eyes of the Prince of Wales, as he then was? Edward himself broke the suspense. Taking the fruit, he ate a mouthful. The rest he threw over his shoulder so that it bespattered the wall behind him.

The Mystery of The Yellow Room

By GASTON LEROUX

COPYRIGHT, 1908 By BRENTANO'S

"I admire you for your silence," said Rouletabille, "but if Mlle. Stangerson knew of your danger she would release you from your oath. She would beg of you to tell all she has confided to you. She would be here to defend you!"

M. Darzac made no movement nor uttered a word. He looked at Rouletabille sadly.

"However," said the young reporter, "since mademoiselle is not here I must do it myself. But, believe me, M. Darzac, the only means to save Mlle. Stangerson and restore her to her reason is to secure your acquittal."

"What is this secret motive that compels Mlle. Stangerson to hide her knowledge from her father?" asked the president.

"That, monsieur, I do not know," said Rouletabille. "It is no business of mine."

The president, turning to M. Darzac, endeavored to induce him to tell what he knew.

"Do you still refuse, monsieur, to tell us how you employed your time during the attempts on the life of Mlle. Stangerson?"

"I cannot tell you anything, monsieur."

The president turned to Rouletabille as if appealing for an explanation.

"We must assume, M. President, that M. Robert Darzac's absences are closely connected with Mlle. Stangerson's secret and that M. Darzac feels himself in honor bound to remain silent. It may be that Larsan, who since his three attempts has had everything in training to cast suspicion on M. Darzac, had fixed on just those occasions for a meeting with M. Darzac at a spot most compromising. Larsan is cunning enough to have done that."

The president seemed partly convinced; but, still curious, he asked:

"But what is this secret of Mlle. Stangerson?"

"That I cannot tell you," said Rouletabille. "I think, however, you know enough now to acquit M. Robert Darzac, unless Larsan should return, and I don't think he will," he added, with a laugh.

"One question more," said the president. "Admitting your explanation, we know that Larsan wished to turn suspicion on M. Robert Darzac, but why should he throw suspicion on Daddy Jacques also?"

"There came in the professional detective, monsieur, who proves himself an unraveler of mysteries, by annihilating the very proofs he had accumulated. He's a very cunning man, and a similar trick had often enabled him to turn suspicion from himself. He proved the innocence of one before accusing the other. You can easily believe, monsieur, that so complicated a scheme as this must have been long and carefully thought out in advance by Larsan. He found the opportunity to rob Daddy Jacques of a pair of old boots and a castoff Basque cap, which the servant had tied up in a handkerchief with the intention of carrying them to a friend, a charcoal burner on the road to Epinay. When the crime was discovered Daddy Jacques had immediately recognized these objects as his. They were extremely compromising, which explains his distress at the time when we spoke to him about them. Larsan confessed it all to me."

CHAPTER XXVII.

In Which It Is Proved That One Does Not Always Think of Everything.

GREAT excitement prevailed when Rouletabille had finished. The courtroom became agitated with the murmurings of suppressed applause. Maitre Henri Robert called for an adjournment of the trial and was supported in his motion by the public prosecutor himself. The case was adjourned. The next day M. Robert Darzac was released on bail, while Daddy Jacques received the immediate benefit of "a no cause for action." Search was everywhere made for Frederic Larsan, but in vain. M. Darzac finally escaped the awful calamity which at one time had threatened him. After a visit to Mlle. Stangerson he was led to hope that she might by careful nursing one day recover her reason.

Rouletabille and I left Versailles together, after having dined at The Dog That Smokes. In the train I put a number of questions to him.

"My friend," I said, "I am still in the dark as to your reason for going to America. When you left the Glandier you had found out, if I rightly understand, all about Frederic Larsan. You had discovered the exact way he had attempted the murder?"

"Quite so. And you," he said, turning the conversation, "did you suspect nothing?"

"I don't see how I could have suspected anything. You took great pains to conceal your thoughts from me. Had you already suspected Larsan when you sent for me to bring the revolvers?"

"Yes! I had come to that conclusion through the incident of the 'inexplicable gallery.' Larsan's return to Mlle. Stangerson's room, however, had not then been cleared up by the eyeglasses. My suspicions were the outcome of my reasoning only, and the idea of Larsan being the murderer seemed so extraordinary that I resolved to wait for actual evidence before venturing to act. Nevertheless the suspicion worried me, and I sometimes spoke to the detective in a way that ought to have opened your eyes. I spoke disparagingly of his methods. But until I found the eyeglasses I could but look upon my suspicion of him in the light of an absurd hypothesis only. You can imagine my elation after I had explained Larsan's movements. I remember well rushing into my room like a madman and crying to you: 'I'll get the better of the great Fred! I'll get the better of him in a way that will make a sensation!'

"But one important point escaped us both. It was one which ought to have opened our eyes to Larsan. Do you remember the bamboo cane? I was surprised to find Larsan had made no use of that evidence against Robert Darzac. Had it not been purchased by a man whose description tallied exactly with that of Darzac? Well, just before I saw him off at the train after the recess during the trial I asked him why he hadn't used the cane evidence. He told me he had never had any intention of doing so; that our discovery of it in the little inn at Epinay had much embarrassed him. If you will remember, he told us then that the cane had been given him in London. Why did we not immediately say to ourselves: 'Fred is lying; he could not have had this cane in London; he was not in London; he bought it in Paris?' Then you found out on inquiry at Cassette's that the cane had been bought by a person dressed very like Robert Darzac, though, as we learned later from Darzac himself, it was not he who had made the purchase. Couple this with the fact we already knew from the letter at the poste restante that there was actually a man in Paris who was passing as Robert Darzac. Why did we not immediately fix on Fred himself?

"Of course his position was against us, but when we saw the evident eagerness on his part to find convicting evidence against Darzac—nay, even the passion he displayed in his pursuit of the man—the lie about the cane should have had a new meaning for us. If you ask why Larsan bought the cane if he had no intention of manufacturing evidence against Darzac by means of it, the answer is quite simple. He had been wounded in the hand by Mlle. Stangerson, so that the cane was useful to enable him to close his hand in carrying it. You remember I noticed that he always carried it.

"All these details came back to my mind when I had once fixed on Larsan as the criminal. But they were too late then to be of any use to me. On the evening when he pretended to be drugged I looked at his hand and saw a thin silk bandage covering the signs of a slight healing wound. Had we taken a quicker initiative at the time Larsan told us that lie about the cane, I am certain he would have gone off to avoid suspicion. All the same, we worried Larsan, or Ballmeyer, without our knowing it."

"But," I interrupted, "if Larsan had no intention of using the cane as evidence against Darzac, why had he made himself up to look like the man when he went in to buy it?"

"He had not specially 'made up' as Darzac to buy the cane; he had come straight to Cassette's immediately after he had attacked Mlle. Stangerson."

CHAPTER XXVIII.

The Mystery of Mademoiselle Stangerson.

DURING the days that followed I had several opportunities to question Rouletabille as to his reason for his voyage to America, but I obtained no more precise answers than he had given me on the evening of the adjournment of the trial, when we were on the train for Paris. One day, however, on my still pressing him, he said:

"Can't you understand that I had to know Larsan's true personality?"

"No doubt," I said, "but why did you go to America to find that out?"

He sat smoking his pipe and made no further reply. I began to see that I was touching on the secret that concerned Mlle. Stangerson. Rouletabille evidently had found it necessary to go to America to find out what the mysterious tie was that bound her to Larsan by so strange and terrible a bond. In America he had learned who Larsan was and had obtained information which closed his mouth. He had been to Philadelphia.

And now what was this mystery which held Mlle. Stangerson and M. Robert Darzac in so inexplicable a silence? After so many years and the publicity given the case by a curious and shameless press, now that M. Stangerson knows all and has forgiven all, all may be told. In every phase of this remarkable story Mlle. Stangerson had always been the sufferer.

The beginning dates from the time when, as a young girl, she was living with her father in Philadelphia. A visitor at the house, a Frenchman, had succeeded by his wit, grace and persistent attention in gaining her affections. He was said to be rich and had asked her of her father. M. Stangerson, on making inquiries as to M. Jean Roussel, found that the man was a swindler and an adventurer. Jean Roussel was but another of the many names under which the notorious Ballmeyer, a fugitive from France, tried to hide himself. M. Stangerson did not know of his identity with Ballmeyer. He learned that the man was simply undesirable for his daughter. He not only refused to give his consent to the marriage, but denied him admission into the house. Mathilde Stangerson, however, had fallen in love. To her Jean Roussel was everything that her love painted him. She was indignant at her father's attitude and did not conceal her feelings. Her father sent her to stay with an aunt in Cincinnati. There she was joined by Jean Roussel and, in spite of the reverence she felt for her father, ran away with him to get married.

They went to Louisville and lived there for some time. One morning, however, a knock came at the door of the house in which they were, and the police entered to arrest Jean Roussel. It was then that Mathilde Stangerson, or Roussel, learned that her husband was no other than the notorious Ballmeyer!

The young woman in her despair tried to commit suicide. She failed in this, and was forced to rejoin her aunt at Cincinnati. The old lady was overjoyed to see her again. She had been anxiously searching for her and had not dared to tell M. Stangerson of her disappearance. Mathilde swore her to secrecy, so that her father should not know she had been away. A month later Mlle. Stangerson returned to her father, repentant, her heart dead within her, hoping only one thing—that she would never again see her husband, the horrible Ballmeyer. A report was spread a few weeks later that he was dead, and she now determined to atone for her disobedience by a life of labor and devotion for her father. And she kept her word.

SOCIETY WOMEN'S HAIR

A Simple Treatment that Will Make it Truly Fascinating—Wm. Madill Guarantees It

Nowadays every up-to-date woman has radiant hair.

What a foolish creature a woman would be if she lost the opportunity to add to her attraction.

Yet in Canada to-day there are hundreds of thousands of women with harsh, faded, characterless hair who do not make any attempt to improve it.

In Paris most women have beautiful hair, and in Canada all women who use Parisian Sage have lustrous and luxuriant hair.

And any woman reader of the Review, can have attractive and lustrous hair in a few days' time by using this great hair rejuvenator, Parisian Sage.

Wm. Madill sells a large bottle for 50 cents and he guarantees it to banish dandruff, stop falling hair and itching scalp in two weeks or money back.

Parisian Sage is an ideal hair tonic, not sticky or greasy.

Desert Gems.

In 1889 a hunter in the northwest of New South Wales wounded a kangaroo. The animal went off through the mulga and the salt bush at a pace too fast for the hunter to follow and was soon out of sight. The hunter was a bushman and did not despair. He followed the blood trail, hopeful of a short search and a speedy bag. At one point of the pursuit it may be that the trail grew faint and necessitated closer inspection. Anyway the hunter stooped and picked up a piece of stone. This he examined. The red spot was not on it; it was in it. It was not blood that he saw; it was opal. Such was the beginning of the White Cliffs opal fields.

Waded to Church.

The inhabitants of Cruit, an island in Donegal, have been sorely inconvenienced lately by the collapse of a bridge. At a District Council meeting it was stated that there had been a football match in the district, and when the teams were crossing the structure it caved in with a crash, many of the passengers being immersed in the sea. The people going to mass on the following Sunday had to wade across up to their waists, and after the service wade back again. Such heroic conduct ought to get them a new bridge soon.

Old Heads Found.

An important archaeological "find" was made near Castlepollard, County Westmeath, Ireland, the other day, where some men were engaged making fences on a ranch. The relics comprised ten human skulls, some of which had teeth still left in them, shin bones, vertebrae and finger bones, as well as some swords of an old pattern and deer horns. The bones were all of huge size, and must have belonged to men of far distant times.

ORANGE LODGES CHURCH PARADE

The Orangemen of the city and county districts, about 250 in number, attended divine service last evening at Mark street Methodist church, East City.

Three city lodges and three county lodges were represented. Duke of Manchester Lodge, No. 50, in charge of Chief J. Johnston, Diamond Lodge, No. 80, in charge of Chief J. Davidson, and J. W. Bell, Memorial Lodge, in charge of Chief Harold Dodds, were the city lodges, and the county lodges were Nassau, Downer's Corners and Fraserville.

Mr. Archie McDonald was director of ceremonies.

The parade was one of the largest this summer and the building was filled to its limit. Despite the heat, Mr. Coon's address was listened to with the closest attention.

THE SERMON.

In opening his address Mr. Coon said, "that it was pleasing to see such a great body of men gather without ostentation, to worship God in His church."

"It has been said by some that these church parades are merely great advertising demonstrations, but I do not believe it," said Mr. Coon. "I believe that everyone present has come here to-night with the object of worshipping God."

Mr. Coon chose for a text, Matthew 23rd Chapter, 8th verse.

"But be ye not called Rabbi, for one is your Master even Christ, and all ye are brethren."

His address in part was as follows; "There is an authority that men may not assume. Men among their fellow men may not assume infallibility. This This power belongs to our Master Jesus Christ. No declaration coming from ecclesiastical authority can bind a man to any set creed.

Orangemen should stand amongst Protestantism to emphasize the teachings of Jesus Christ. There is a great need of striving to propogate all Christian influences.

ALL ORANGEMEN ARE PROTESTANTS,

but all Protestants are not Orangemen. Protestantism is a standing protest aganist Papal infallibility.

The Roman Catholics know that one of our chief objects is to protest against the Pope.

We also stand for the propagation of great principles of action.

In past years there were certain controversies and disagreements before the rise of Papacy, and the speaker traced the history of Protestantism back to its foundation.

The name had been applied to all who protested against Papal authority. Protestantism has always stood to object against what is false and always will.

Though it may be charged with all sorts of evils and be sought to be overthrown, it will always stand, for its truths can never be refuted.

It is no vicious growth, and no menace to souls. It is the building upon the only sure foundation.

Protestantism protests against the fact that there are mediators between God and man. It fights superstition, spreads the truth and gives all men liberty.

A GREAT BODY.

It is a great and dignified body moving grandly forward in the glory of God, heedless of minor oppositions from other sects.

Orangemen should realize the obligations they are under to Jesus Christ. When Orangeism only means a bit of by-play to you, and you forget its principles, then throw away the colors.

EVERY ORANGEMAN A MAN.

Every Orangeman should be a man and should learn that the most effective way to stand for Christ is to be himself a Christian.

It is a great source of mutual help to be an Orangeman.

There is no need for our worrying over the coronation oath. Any alteration that will be made will be with the tolerant spirit of Protestantism, and will offer the amplest safeguard for the English throne.

In concluding let me urge upon you to rejoice in Protestantism and in that brave Prince William, who was the founder of your society, and such an exponent of Protestantism.

I hope that you will sacrifice for Christ and also sacrifice of Christ's kingdom, as you would be willing to sacrifice for the extension of your society and I also pray that the spirit of tolerance may influence you and that you continue to grow a mighty force for good in our land.

AT LAKEFIELD

The Park street Baptist choir supplied the music for the service in the Baptist church at Lakefield yesterday evening.

The Orangemen of Lakefield, attended the church in a body last night, headed by the Lakefield citizens band, and the choir of Park street church, numbering about 16, drove out, leaving here about four o'clock.

Supper was had at the homes of Lakefield people and at the conclusion of the services, the party adjourned to the residence of Mrs. Perry, where a pleasant time was spent before returning home.

The choir reached Peterborough about eleven o'clock.

SOME BREEZES OF NEWS FROM KAWARTHADOM

VIAMEDE—McCRACKEN'S—MOUNT JULIAN—BELVIDERE

BY A STAFF CORRESPONDENT.

EVERYTHING IS IN FULL BLOOM AND IN FULL SWING AT THE LAKES FROM A STANDPOINT OF GENERAL BEAUTY AND LIVELY SURROUNDINGS. ALL THE SUMMER RESORTS AND COTTAGES ARE LOOKING THEIR MOST ATTRACTIVE AND LUCKY IS THE MAN WHO IS ABLE FOR EVEN ONLY A DAY OR TWO TO GET AWAY FROM THE DUSTY AND HUMID CITY AND BASK IN THE SMILE OF NATURE IN ONE OF THE MOST FAVORED SPOTS IN HER BIG, INFORMAL AND DELIGHTFUL OUT OF DOORS—THE KAWARTHA LAKES.

THE TOURIST SEASON IS NOT AT ITS HEIGHT YET, BUT ALL THE HOTELS AND BOARDING HOUSES HAVE HAD AN ENCOURAGING TRANSIENT PATRONAGE, AND FROM NOW, ON TO THE LATTER PART OF AUGUST THE INFLUX OF VISITORS WILL BE A LARGE ONE.

AND AS THE NEWS REPORTS BELOW WILL SHOW, THE FISHING IS GOOD EVERYWHERE ON THE LAKES, AND THE BASS ARE BITING WITH AN AVIDITY THAT MAKES THE FIRST YEAR ANGLER THINK THERE IS NOTHING TO IT BUT DROPPING A LINE IN THE WATER AND PULLING OUT THE ACCOMMODATING VICTIMS OF THE HOOK.

STRING OF 28 BASS AVERAGING THREE POUNDS EACH IS SOME FISHIN' ISN'T IT?

One of the outstanding and most appealing features of the Kawartha lakes is the excellent fishing at all the resorts this year. Belvidere, Crowe's Landing, is living up to its splendid reputation in this respect and the anglers are congratulating themselves on their big catches of bass and lunge. But the bass are biting more freely than the lunge and when bass fishing is as good as it is at Belvidere at the present time every other kind of pastime is overlooked for the sport of fighting and landing the game and dashing black fellows.

The other evening four guests made a catch of twenty-eight bass, which tipped the scales at the remarkably high weight, averaging three pounds each.

Among the guests staying at the hotel now are;—F. Hewlett, flushing, N.Y.; J. Robert Carson, Pittsburg; William Maniece, Peterborough; H. Parkinson, C. Taylor, O. F. Wardell and Rev. Mr. Gibson, Thornhill.

Messrs. Leo Young and C. Kaley, of Peterborough, spent Sunday at Belvidere.

The Fenwick party of six from Buffalo, are coming on a fishing visit shortly and another party from Cincinnati will arrive on the 16th.

THE VISITORS AT VIAMEDE; YOUNG LADY HOLDS RECORD FOR BIGGEST BASS CAUGHT

The following is the latest registration of guests at Viamede: R. M. Bond and Harold A. Bond, of Toronto; Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Bird, Miss Edna Bird and Miss Hazel Bird, Chicago; Mr. and Mrs. Gordon, Ottawa; Dr. and Mrs. Sadden, Rochester; Misses Dora J. Brucker and Elizabeth May, Cleveland; D. K. Book and Mrs. Book, Toronto; J. B. Ratcliffe and Miss Ruth Ratcliffe, Toronto.

Rev. and Mrs. F. J. Sawers were guests at Viamede on Tuesday last.

Mr. and Mrs. A. N. Stuart spent Friday at Viamede.

Messrs. Bird, H. C. Brooks and Gordon have been especially fortunate with the rod and line, and have secured generous quotas of black bass.

To Miss Edna Bird, however, belongs the distinction of catching the largest bass of the season at Viamede. It weighed four pounds.

The service on Sunday night was taken by Mr. Crewes, curate to Rev. Mr. Lord, at Apsley.

Miss Hazel Bird, a brilliant young soprano, of Chicago, was to have sung "The Holy City" at the service, but as she contracted a cold on a yachting trip, she was unable to do so, much to the regret of the guests.

TWO MEN IN A BOAT TO SAY NOTHING OF THE LUNGE

What an Eight Pound Fish Did in a Whirling Dervish Stunt—An Upset Bristling With Elaborate Detail

The other day there happened a happening that happened to have it on all other hapepnings that ever happened at McCracken's Landing, that live summer resort where happenings worth happening are happening all the time.

This is how it happened:

Jimmie Pimmett, the industrious porter at the Victoria House, McCracken's Landing, knows a thing or two about fishing. He has an accurate idea of the lay of the land, or water rather, where the 'lunge hover thick and hungry. For this reason Mr. John Earle, of Cleveland, who was a guest at the hotel, employed the versatile Jimmy to paddle him around the favored spots.

It was about 300 yards immediately west of McCracken's that the big sensation was pulled off.

Mr. Earle knew by the tug on his line that he had a fish, and it was quite evident by the sudden flop of the canoe that the fish had Mr. Earle.

Both occupants of the canoe gave a yell that made the guests of the hotel turn their eyes toward the place from whence proceeded the terror-fraught cries. What they saw was Jimmie and the visitor in the water, both holding on to an upturned canoe and both calling loudly in distress.

But the guests, while they realized the men were in danger, were not on the real inside of the trouble.

The fish had every reason to know that its last moments were at hand, but determined to give its captors a full measure of trouble before it was landed.

In a mad circuit round and round it wrapped the trolling line about Mr. Earle's legs until that gentleman was as securely bound as an Egyptian mummy. Jimmie made commendable efforts to effect Mr. Earle's release, and both parties were in dire dilemma until a skiff sped to the rescue of the two and they were landed high and wet at McCracken's.

The most humiliating part of the whole affair is that the 'lunge that was the source of all the trouble only weighed eight pounds.

Jimmie asserts it must have lost about twenty pounds in the struggle.

A BUSY SEASON AT McCRACKEN'S

McCracken's Landing is a place blessed both by nature and with many guests, and Mr. Picken, the popular host, reports the busiest season this year for the Victoria House in the history of the hotel.

Ever since the opening of the tourist season, about six weeks ago, the guests have been arriving in large numbers and the registration is a particularly heavy one.

The Pitna gasoline gas system with which the principal parts of the hotel are illuminated has proven most satisfactory and among the other improvements are new concrete steps with marble trimmings that lead to the main entrance of the hotel.

Many Peterborough visitors have made week end calls to Victoria House, which is convenient from the city either by road or by water.

Excellent catches of bass have been made by Dr. Belt, Mr. Kinderly, Mr. Mr. Haldy, Mr. Kinnaman, Mr. Tallant, Mr. and Mrs. Vincent and Mr. Zachan.

Among these on the hotel register are:—

A. L. Tallant, Miss Gertrude Tallant, Miss Lina Connelly, J. F. Hayes, Master John Tallant and E. McCabel, all of Pittsburg; Mr. and Mrs. C. J. McClelland, Toronto; R. C. Waram, Peterborough; J. Lester Koch, Pittsburg, Geo. S. McLean and wife, Toronto; J. M. Phillips and wife, Toronto; E. W. B. Vincent and wife, Eugene J. Vincent and George K. Vincent, of Rochester; Dr. N. O. and Mrs. Haldy, of Cleveland; C. H. Kinnaman and wife, Cleveland; Dr. J. H. Belt and Miss Ada C. Belt, Cleveland; Mr. and Mrs. F. R. Zachan, Syracuse; A. J. Massey, Mrs. A. J. Massey, Stanley A. Massey and Miss Ethel Massey, Philadelphia; John C. Davis, Pittsburg.

Mr. W. H. Walkey spent the week end at McCrackens.

Mr. A. E. Lambert, Peterborough, was at McCrackens over Sunday.

Mr. J. H. Sawers, of Peterborough, spent the week end at Viamede and McCrackens.

THE GUESTS AT MOUNT JULIAN

A. B. Spurney, Robert Mack, R. H. Sucky and E. T. Spurney, all of Cleveland, returned home yesterday after a week's fishing. They had splendid luck.

D. J. McConkie, Geo. Vanhousen and D. J. Woolever are at Mount Julian.

Wm. Wiseman, Peterborough, is a guest at Mount Julian.

H. Fisher, Toronto, is registered here.

Mr. Dixon, Dominion Land Valuator, has been estimating the damage to damaged lands on the lakes.

A MISSIONARY TO LUMBERMEN

Mr. Wm. Henderson, missionary to the lumbermen of Ontario, occupied the pulpits of two of the city churches yesterday, George street Methodist and St. Paul's Presbyterian.

Mr. Henderson graphically described the life of the typical lumber-jack in the backwoods of Ontario, showing his needs, temptations and sadly neglected spiritual condition.

Only 200 miles north of Toronto there were 7000 lumbermen who hardly ever heard the name of God mentioned, except in blasphemy, from one years' end to the other.

One man during a period of 20 years of shantying, had never heard a sermon preached.

Fifty miles from Peterborough, said Mr. Henderson, we can find conditions nearly as pitiful.

There is a crying need for men to work among these neglected men in the endeavor to bring them the word of salvation.

Messrs. J. C. Shook, A. N. Scarrow and H. M. Gilchrist, secretary of the Y.M.C.A., have agreed to act as local representatives of the Shantymen's Christian Association, and will be pleased to give information to those desiring it.

COW KILLED BY TRAIN

Mr. Joseph Manley, of Otonabee, had the misfortune to have two valuable cows killed by a freight train some time Saturday night.

The cows had strayed from a field and on to the track.

HALF HOLIDAYS FOR BUTCHERS

The butchers of Peterborough will probably close on Thursday afternoons during the months of July and August.

The Review learned by inquiry today amongst the leading butchers that most of them favored the plan, and there are only one or two who have yet to acquiesce.

This will not have any effect on some local butchers, as they close their shops every afternoon.

A Correction

The article in Saturday's issue of the daily Review, relating to the dismissal of the action of the Wm. Hamilton Mfg. Co., against the Hamilton Steel Co. does not concern the new company, but is a matter connected with the old organization. The firm's title of the new company is the "Wm. Hamilton Co., Ltd," not the "William Hamilton Mfg. Co., Ltd." as before.

T.A.S. OVERTOOK THE STRATHCONAS; WEST ENDS IN THE LEAD ALL THE WAY

The Flying Nine Lead for Six Innings and Then Pulled the Ropes--P.A.C. Were Beaten in the First, When the Greys Took Five.

Now it wasn't Pat White's Gay Girls, nor the Barnum-Baillie clowns who were holding down the footlights and dispelling all our frowns. Neither had a freak menagerie came to town to get our cash, and it wasn't troops of monkeys, none of these would be so rash. It was only our burlesque teams, putting on their weekly show, and for fun and red hot features, it was worth six times the dough. For, as Haney said to Benton, as they stopped to have a spiel, "I don't think we could be beaten, all the crowd will think we're real." Fifteen cents was all was asked for, and all there laughed loud with glee, and there were no merry widows, each and every one could see. Something happened every minute, Creswell's stunt brought down the stand, this was when the handsome's think box almost went to sleepy land. It had "Bill" Tell's feat all smothered, for, while "Bill" had juicy fruit, Cress had just a little top piece, and his aim was sure a beaut. Then, that playlet in the second, when the Bat and Dusty hugged, looked just like the "mellowdrama" after Mr. Villain's jugged.

Then, to change the scene a little, something heavy was put on, "Diamond Dick" and "Old King Brady" never heard such classy "con." Shorty Dark was billed as hero, and he had an awful time, he was dubbed all sorts of choice ones, someone mentioned "warmer clime." But, like heroes in dime novels, he ne'er flunked nor ran away, and the curtain dropped and found him, safe and winner of theday. There were many feats of juggling, like the kind not often seen, "Fish" and "Mike" and long, slim Barrie were the best, they took the cream. Pulling hot ones off your shoe strings, feats of tumbling, clean and neat, these all made the big crowd happy, brought them often to their feet. But at last the big show ended, and the bill was o'er once more, any other points of interest are enclosed here in the score.

FIRST GAME.

First Innings.

T. A. S.—Callaghan grounded out, Kendry to V. Craig, but the next batter, M. O'Brien, was safe on a wide throw from short. Quinlan chased the flies and McFadden turned turtle, Ray to V. Craig.

Strathconas — Weatherston popped out to M. O'Brien and F. Craig had a run to first for nothing. Shaw's effort was glued by Callaghan.

Second Innings.

Giroux aviated to Ray, but Bill O'Bren got to Weatherston for an easy one. Doherty missed three and the recruit from the Fiji Islands, Haney by name, struck mosquitoes.

Dusty drew a life at first, and he and Callaghan put on a Romeo-Juliet performance at second. Jimmy took the count and the water boy was called. The curtain went down for a minute, and the next scene showed Kendry and Ray in the bone yard and Dusty sitting on the bench. V. Craig was out, Quinlan to O'Brien. One run

Third Innings.

Nagle Phelan, from the corner lot league, went out to the pitcher. Callaghan succeeded in making first, but overslept himself at second, Dusty to Weatherston. The mighty "Mike" sent one to the fence, and then fanned.

Patterson stood up and waved the bat. Doherty presented Curtis with a note to M. O'Brien, and he went to second. Weatherston and Craig's efforts were given a jolt.

Fourth Innings.

Pompadour started off with a liner through the infield, and stole second. "Doc" couldn't run fast enough to first. Giroux sent another through the inner wall, and Quinlan tied the score when Patterson dropped the relay, Curtis to Kendry. Bill O'Brien tapped a gentle one, but Giroux connected with third, a dead one. Doherty's sky rocket burst in Ray's leather. One run.

Shaw got the laugh for running to first, but Giroux fell down on Dusty's roller. McFadden missed Kendrey's third strike, but got him at first. Dusty went to third but stayed there, Ray going out to Quinlan.

Fifth Innings.

Haney commenced with a club-swinging exhibition. Cahill, batting for Phelan, dropped one into Shaw's grabbers. Callaghan was safe on Ray's bum play, and Dusty hit O'Brien. Quinlan sent one from the farm-yard at V. Craig.

Haney pulled F. Craig's attempt off his shoe strings, and Patterson was just as easy for the one-eyed third baseman, who had replaced Doherty. Curtis' effort was a joke.

Sixth Innings.

McFadden biffed safely and stole second, while Giroux was engaged in fanning Patterson. W. O'Brien used the club like a lacrosse stick, and while the Straths were examining the the ropes McFadden strolled home.

Creswells Feature Hit of the Afternoon

Doherty was safe on Weatherston's fumble and Haney hit the ball. Is was out to first.

Weatherston led off with a single and F. Craig got to first without one. Pete stole third and crossed the grub holder on a passed ball. Shaw was plinked, but Craig got in wrong on the signals and was out trying for home. Shaw took second and third and scooted home by a nose. Dusty walked and Kendry missed connection with first. Two runs.

Seventh Innings.

Cahill was passed, Callaghan saw one with his good eye and slammed it. Cahill was handed a return ticket on a wild throw. O'Brien walked and Quinlan singled and Callaghan scored. McFadden banged out another and O'Brien trotted. Giroux went out, second to first. W. O'Brien was safe Curtis having run out of glue, and Quinlan tallied. Doherty made an unsuccessful flight, but Haney singled to left, O'Brien counting. Kendry now pitching. Cahill wafted one and McFadden connected. Callaghan couldn't see them. Six runs.

Haney brought down Ray's fly and V. Craig juggled. Patterson boosted to Quinlan.

Eighth Inning.

M. O'Brien hit safely, Quinlan was hit, McFadden was safe on Ray's error and O'Brien scored. Giroux went out to Sam, Jr., and O'Brien to Shaw. Doherty walked, but Haney grounded out, Ray to V. Craig. One run.

Curtis popped one in front of McFadden and stole second. Craig hit and Curtis went to third. Craig was caught at second and Shaw's time was too slow.

What the Straths Need in Centre Field

NOTELETS.

The first game was called in the first half of the ninth by the umpire to allow of the teams for the second game taking the field, and the score is given for eight innings only.

That was a nice catch of Haney's. He had to get down low for it.

Logan, Smith and Heffernan were new faces on the West End line-up and all did good work. Heff cleared the bases and contributed another freak home run, to the already long list.

The Straths looked like winners, and that lets them out.

Jimmie Callaghan had a bad day and ran into all kinds of hard luck.

Fourteen errors for the P.A.C., or a total of twenty-nine for two games.

HER MUSICAL TASTE.

[Professor Louis Wilson says that each color harmonizes with a corresponding note in music.]

I cannot wear the old songs
I wore a year ago.
My last year's hat was in B flat
And sounds like "Old Black Joe."
My husband says to change it
And pitch it now in F.
I tell him that a last year's hat
Appeals but to the deaf.

I cannot wear the old tunes,
Although they're not worn out.
My dinner gown would make you frown
Without the slightest doubt.
It's too accelerando.
The higher notes are slurred.
The scherzo skirt I used to flirt
No longer can be heard.

I dote on modern music.
To me it is sublime.
In last year's waist there can be traced
"The Good Old Summer Time."
And so I will not wear it,
Though it's as good as new.
I know you'd mock a ragtime frock
If one dawned on your view.

My new hat's a cadenza
Of wondrous tones and trills.
My husband swears in minor airs
When he looks at the bills.
There is a charm in music
To soothe the savage breast,
But men have hearts which music's darts
Find armor plate at best.

Still, I've made out my program
From overture to end.
For sleeve duets I've made some debts,
But all the chords must blend.
I cannot wear the old songs
I wore a year gone by.
They're now as old as "Threads of Gold"
Or "Comin' Thro' the Rye."

It's Playing Ball That Counts.

"Young men," said the college coach to the assembling team, "culture counts in the national game."

"What ye givin' us?" shrieked an old timer. "Old Pete Bunker of our town thot Henry James was a tavern clerk, but he played all the ball there wuz."

Asking Too Much.

"See here, young man," said the irate father, "your college principal says he doesn't know of anything that you would be likely to make a success of. Now, sir, I'd like to know what you intend to make of yourself."

"Give it up, father," replied the young man. "How do you expect me to answer a question that even a college professor can't answer?"—Chicago News.

Good Advice.

"And now, son," said the old rabbit, "here's a bit of advice. Always keep on the good side of a dog."

"But, pop," queried the youngster, who was about to go forth into the big world, "which is the good side of a dog?"

"The outside, son," answered the old rabbit as he bit off another hunk of cabbage.—Pittsburg Press.

The Cotton Crop.

New Orleans, La., July 11.—The Times-Democrat will to-day publish the following summary based on reports of its special correspondents concerning the cotton crop of 1910:

"The reports indicate favorable progress in the states of Oklahoma and Texas and distinct deterioration through the remainder of the belt.

"In the west the fields as a rule are clean and well worked. A general rain would prove beneficial."

Wales Wants to Get on Flag.

London, July 11.—"Gallant Little Wales" is trying hard to get represented upon the Royal Standard, and claims that the red dragon of Wales should be emblazoned thereon, taking one of the two quarters which England selfishly uses for her three lions passant. With this object the Welsh members of Parliament have laid their claims before Premier Asquith, who has promised that it should be made known to the King.

WHEN THE KING IS CROWNED

The King of England would still be ruler if he were not crowned—why, then, you may say, is it necessary to have a coronation? The answer is simply this: The coronation is a religious service, a most impressive ceremony, and its object is to consecrate the King as the Almighty's deputy. "The sacring of the King," it was called in the old days.

Westminster Abbey is always used for the service because of its history and traditions, and because for centuries English kings have been crowned here. In the Abbey there is the chair of King Edward and the stone on which Scottish kings were crowned and which was brought from Scone Abbey. Both of these are used in the ceremony.

Assuming that King George's coronation will follow the lines of his father's, with perhaps a few minor changes, the order of the service will begin with a procession of the regalia—the crown of St. Edward, staff, scepter, swords, spurs, Bible and spiritual peers, and this will be the sign for the anthem, which will mark the entry of King and Queen.

After making their "humble" adoration "to the throne" they will ascend to the "theatre" and await the recognition, after private devotions. According to Bible precedent, the King must be acknowledged by the people before he can be crowned, and therefore he is introduced by the Archbishop of Canterbury with these words:

"Sirs, I here present unto you King George, the Undoubted King of this Realm. Wherefore all you who are come this day to do your Homage, are you willing to do the same?"

The people signify their willingness by shouting repeatedly, "God save King George," and then trumpets sound. After the sermon the archbishop asks:

"Is your Majesty willing to take the oath?"

"I am willing," is the answer.

Archbishop—"Will you solemnly swear to govern the people of this United Kingdom of Great Britain, Ireland and the dominions thereto, according to the statutes in Parliament agreed on and the respective laws and customs of the same?"

King—"I solemnly promise to do."

Archbishop—"Will you, to your power, cause law and justice in mercy to be executed in your dominions?"

King—"I will."

Archbishop—"Will you, to the utmost of your power maintain the laws of God, the true profession of the Gospel and the Protestant Reformed religion, established by law. And will you maintain and preserve inviolably the settlement of the Church of England and the doctrine worship, discipline and government thereof, as by law established in England? And will you preserve upon the bishops and clergy of England and the Church therein committed to their charge all such rights and privileges as by law do or shall appertain to them, or any of them?"

King—"All this I promise to do."

The King will then go to the altar and with his hand on the Bible make his solemn oath:

"The things which I have heretobefore promised I will perform and keep, so help me God."

Not only will he kiss the Bible, but, as a further security, he will sign the oath.

The next office is the anointing, the archbishop using the Ampulla or vial, fashioned like an eagle, and the spoon, both of which are ancient emblems. The oil, again following Bible precedent, is compounded of fragrant spices and the King is anointed as he sits in St. Edward's chair, over which is held a rich pall of silk by four knights of the garter. Having by this ceremony become King Dei Gratia, as the legend on the coin reads, he receives the insignia of royalty, the first of which are the spurs—an emblem of the days when Kings rode out to battle—and the sword of justice, the archbishop saying:—

"Receive this Kingly Sword, brought now from the Alter of God and delivered to you by the hands of us, the bishops and servants of God, though unworthy."

Then the King is invested with the armilla and imperial mantle or cloth of gold, receiving also the orb with the cross.

The actual crowning is the signal guns at the Tower of London, the people thus knowing that the "sacring of the King" has been accomplished. But the ceremony does not end here. The Bible is delivered the Archbishop repeating this solemn formula:—

"Our Gracious King; We present you with this book, the most valuable thing that this world affords Here is Wisdom this is the Royal Law, these are the lively Oracles of God.

Having been crowned and anointed and having received all the "ensigns of royalty," The King is blessed by the Archbishop, following which come the benediction of the enthronization, the homage of princess and peers, the Queen's coronation and the communion service the King and Queen, on bended knees, making their oblation in the form of a pall of altar cloth, and an ingot of a pound weight. The whole service lasting several hours ends with the entry into St. Edward's Chapel, where the King is disrobed of his imperial mantle and with the Queen's arrayed in royal robes of purple velvet, thence going forth to be acclaimed by the people.

WHERE CANNONS ROARED MESSAGE FROM FRONT

Camp, Petawawa, July 7th.—

The 24th Battery are improving every drill. Yesterday they did some very good shooting and have so far put it all over their sister corps, the 14th.

Our range finders, gun layers and fuze setters all qualified at their examination, which was a pretty stiff one.

This morning the brigade fired their competitative, the 24th beating the 14th, but at the present time it is not known who are the leaders of the different brigades.

A game of baseball was played between the 24th and the Royal Canadian Horse Artillery, our fellows winning in an exciting game by 12 to 7. The following are the names and positions of the two teams:

MARKS WOULD INDICATE VICTIM WAS BURNED

Late Saturday afternoon Coroner Dr. Greer decided on an inquest into the death of Isadore Vinette, whose sudden death was reported exclusively in the Review, and the jury was empanelled. Mr. C. Blewett was elected foreman.

The jury was sworn and the body viewed at Comstock's undertaking rooms, and an adjournment made to this evening, at eight o'clock, in the City Council Chamber.

Drs. Gallivan and McPherson will give the result of the post-mortem.

There was a mark on the right shoulder of the deceased and on one of the palms of the right hand. To all appearances they were burns. The workman who was employed with Vinette noticed him sitting on the crosspiece of the pole, with his head down, and asked if anything was wrong. Almost immediately the young man dropped to the ground.

The funeral will likely be held to-morrow morning.

PETERBOROUGH BOYS SUCCESSFUL IN WEST

Special to the Review.

Winnipeg, Man., July 7.—Supervised playgrounds for the children constitute a progressive step in the municipal progress of Winnipeg. There are twelve of these recreation places this summer, and they are open every afternoon except Sunday. The playgrounds are absolutely free, and are for the use of all those in the city under eighteen years of age, who care to make use of them. Each playground is in charge of two instructors—a lady and a gentleman—whose duty is to supervise the play of the children, and teach them games, especially those which tend to promote health, activity and character. Equipment for various games has been installed on the grounds and special provision made for the care of anyone injured, the directors being required to have a thorough knowledge of first aid work. The playgrounds were opened for the season on July 1, and are crowded every afternoon that is favorable. The school grounds of the city are utilized as sites for these recreation places and are well adapted for the purpose.

The supervised playgrounds idea was first introduced in Winnipeg last year when eight grounds were operated. The scheme was so successful it was decided to extend the work this year and carry it on in a more systematic manner. The city council has voted $10,000 for the movement in 1910.

In addition to the directors, the work is in charge of a supervisor and two assistant supervisors. One of the latter is E. M. Best, of the Y.M.C.A. training school at Springfield, Mass., who is well known in Peterborough. Mr. Best is prominently connected with the work and is doing much for its success. Lincoln Brace, a former Peterborough boy, who is teaching school in Winnipeg, is one of the directors.

HO! FOR LINDSAY

Two hundred Orangemen will leave Peterborough at 9.30 to-morrow morning for Lindsay.

Mr. "Archie" McDonald will be in charge as director of ceremonies. Some other officers who will attend are N. Hopkins and W. E. Wiley.

Lieut. Jas. Clarke, of the 57th Regiment, was presented with a beautiful pipe by the officers of the 57th, at a smoker on Saturday night.

Short speeches were made by Major Clegg and Captains Cluxton, McPherson and Mr. R. M. Glover. Mr. Clarke is leaving for the west.

HIGH PRICED EXPERTS.

Specialists Who Charge Enormous Fees For Their Services.

A great many people cannot understand why professional experts charge such enormous prices for their services—why an eminent surgeon, for example, says Orison Swett Marden in Success Magazine, should charge $5,000 or even $10,000 for a single operation or a great law specialist like Elihu Root $2,500 for a few hours' work in cross examining a witness.

They do not take into consideration that the surgeon has spent years in learning how to perform quickly and efficiently the difficult operation which saves a life that might have been lost in less skilled hands.

Much of the training of the specialist is to enable him to meet the unusual, the unexpected demand. The surgeon trains for the rare operation, the possible emergency. He knows that there are times when it is knowing what the ordinary surgeon did not think it worth while to learn that may save a life. There are surgeons now living who never had a dozen emergency cases in all their experience which called into play the utmost power and skill of which they are capable, but it was these few extremely dangerous operations which gave them their great reputation and enabled them to get enormous fees.

It is not the good surgeon, but the superb operator, the man who knows a little more about anatomy, who has a little steadier nerve, a more acute touch, a little better education, that is sought to perform the delicate operation in the emergency when life hangs by a thread.

MONTE CARLO'S RULER.

His Subjects Vote Not, Neither Do They Pay Taxes.

In Monaco, as in Russia, the ruler is supreme. It is an absolute hereditary monarchy. Even Russia has its douma, but in the dominions of Prince Albert voting is unknown. Yet the Monegasques cannot raise that historic cry of taxation without representation, for if they are not permitted the one they are not burdened with the other.

Albert I., the reigning prince, has devoted his life to scientific research, so the money which the spendthrifts throw away answers some useful purpose after all. He is one of the foremost authorities on marine zoology, his solutions of the gulf stream problem have been recognized by the Institute of France, and the oceanographic museum which he has founded has no equal. He is sixty-one years old, has been twice married and twice divorced—first to the Lady Mary Douglas-Hamilton, whose story is a romantic and a pathetic one, and twenty years later to the dowager Duchess of Richelieu. He tired of them both. He has one child, the Crown Prince Louis.

Prince Albert divides his time between his yacht, with its remarkable scientific equipment, his Paris residence in the Avenue Trocadero and the pink and white palace perched on a rock above the gaming hall which supports him.—Metropolitan Magazine.

The Opium Couch.

In the library of a Chinese gentleman the opium couch is as inseparable a feature of a gentleman's home as the armchairs and cigars of an American den. Perhaps it must disappear now before the prohibition campaign which is being waged from Peking, or it will remain under the innocent guise of a reclining reading table, as some innocent globe trotters have described it. Opium as used in the ordinary citizen's private house is considered no more a vice than tobacco with Americans. It is the custon; that is all. The host waves you to the couch for a perfunctory whiff just as Americans begin by offering a guest a cigar.

The Size of Antarctica.

It is a somewhat curious fact, if it is a fact, that the last of the terrestrial continents to be explored is the largest mass of raised land in the world. The concentration of attention upon the south pole since Commander Peary landed the other end of our axis makes it highly probable that the antarctic antipode will soon be dangling from some explorer's belt. Incidentally the south polar continent will be opened, if not to the settler, at least to the mapmaker. We already know something of its fringes at a few points, and Lieutenant Shackleton pushed into it south of Mounts Erebus and Terror for several hundred miles, but the greater portion of its surface is still terra incognita.—Collier's.

IF YOU WANT TO FIGHT IT OUT

From the age of 45 years the eyes have undergone a natural change (which no eye escapes) so that they are either out of focu for distance or near vision, usually there i difficulty in reading, especially at night You cannot see distinctly with the paper a foot from the eyes and you need strong light, your real need is suitable glasses. If you want to fight this difficulty out with nature you may do so, millions have done it before you and have been worsted in the fight. We are relieving the eyes of such cases every day. Perhaps you will be wise by taking the matter in time.

KILLED AND WOUNDED IN DERAILMENT

Special to the Review.

Newton Hook, N.Y., July 11.—Three men were killed early this morning when train No. 59, of the New York Central, the northern and western express, bound for Buffalo and Chicago, was derailed near here by a car door, which had fallen on to the track from a southbound freight.

The engine and three cars were demolished, and ten other cars were all derailed, every passenger aboard being badly shaken up and one being badly hurt.

IN RELIGIOUS FRENZY ENTIRE CONGREGATION WAS ARRESTED

Special to the Review.

Chicago, July 11.—Police of two south side stations entered the Holy Nazarene church of the Apostolic faith, Dearborn and West Thirtieth street, during service last night and arrested the entire congregation, composed of more than 100 negroe men and women. Among these arrested were a woman bishop and three preachers. All were placed in cells at police stations. Lieut. Reid, who headed the police, said the members of the congregation had made a nuisance of themselves through their religious frenzy.

QUESTION OF SMALL BREAD NOT SETTLED

Special to the Review.

Toronto, Ont., July 11.—Owing to a flaw in the prosecution of the fifteen local bakers charged with selling light weight bread, the moot question of what constitutes "small bread" under the Nickle act, still remains unsolved.

Magistrate Kingsford pointed out in the police court this morning that the act provides that for purposes of prosecution the weight must be taken from an aggregate of ten loaves, to be seized at the same time and place. As this clause had not been observed Mr. Kingsford dismissed the case against the Coleman Baking Company. The other fourteen cases were remanded until Wednesday to give the prosecutor, Inspector James Wilson, time to decide whether he will appeal the decision or launch fresh prosecutions against the defendants.

WITH THE BOYS AT SANDY POINT

After a very pleasant trip up the lake on the "Water Lily" the Y.M.C.A. boys, in charge of Mr. B. W. Sharpe, arrived at camp. Here they found all things in readiness for their two weeks of camp life. Mr. Thompson, who had preceeded them on Friday with a squad of engineers, had everything in shape as far as tents were concerned. The boys soon had their places assigned to them and fell to fixing up their beds for the night. This being done, some of the small boys inquired, "Where is the store?" for they had a purse full of money burning holes in their pockets and it must be spent. To those who know anything about camp, it is unnecessary to say that sleep was out of the question on Saturday night. Excitement runs high and not until the small hours of morning is there any real attempt made to sleep. The boys are divided into two squads with a large tent for each squad. Mr. Sharpe is in charge of one and Mr. J. J. Thompson is in charge of the other.

The campers enjoyed the rainstorm for their tents were sound and as it was Sunday they were not missing any sport because of it.

On Sunday morning at 10.30 the boys gathered together in the shade of the trees and after singing a few hymns, listened to a very helpful sermon from Rev. Mr. Stevens, who occupies a cottage in close proximity to the camp.

Messrs. "Sandy" Hall, A. Fitzgerald and E. Hanwell were visitors at camp on Sunday.

The boys are very grateful to some unknown friend who sent them a welcome donation of fruit.

The "Camp Jollier," is the name of a paper, published every once in a while, on the typewriter and circulated among the boys. Mr. Sharpe, the Boys' Secretary, is editor.

CONSERVATIVES SWEEP PROVINCE OF MANITOBA; ROBLIN'S GREAT VICTORY

Although Decay of Conservative Government of Manitoba Has Been Asserted it Gets One More Majority Than it Had in Last House—Cabinet Ministers Have all Big Majorities—Osborne Snowed Under.

Winnipeg, July 12.—The Roblin Government has swept the province and has been sustained at the polls by one more of a majority than it secured in 1907.

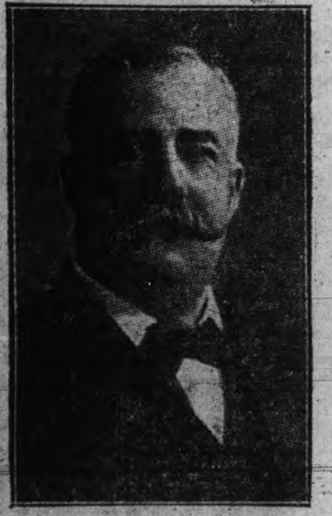
Returns indicate this morning that the standing of the parties is:

Conservatives, 29.
Liberals, 12.

Some of the outlying polls have not yet been heard from, but their figures are not expected to substantially change the result.

In the last Legislature the standing was: Conservatives, 28; Liberals, 13.

The Conservatives have gained Arthur, where Lyle has 231 majority over John Williams, the former member; Dauphin, where James G. Harvey redeemed the seat from J. A. Campbell by 74, and Hon. Dr. McFadden has brought Emerson back to the Conservative column, defeating George Walton by the handsome majority of 200. In 1907 McFadden was beaten by 105.



HON. R. P. ROBLIN.

Returns from Gimli are incomplete, but Baldwinson has probably regained the seat for the Government. Dr. Thornton, one of the chief lieutenants of T. C. Norris, went down to defeat in Deloraine, J. F. C. Reid carrying the seat by six majority.

The biggest surprises were sprung in Winnipeg. The North was regarded as certain for the Conservatives, but a young Jewish lawyer, Hart Green, only three years in Winnipeg, wins by some 450 majority. The foreigners voted solid for Green.

South Winnipeg was regarded as certain for the Liberals, and was carried by the Conservatives. Andrews was looked on as a sure winner in the West, and was defeated by the sitting Liberal member, T. H. Johnson. In Centre Winnipeg, T. W. Taylor had a close run by the Labor candidate.

LOBO, RUSSIAN ELK HOUND, OWNED BY MR. JOHN MAGEE.

Reports among the passengers of the Kaiser Wilhelm II., of the North German Lloyd line, which arrived in New York recently from Bremen, that a real live wolf was on board led many to make wary visits to the sun deck of the steamship, where an animal of wolfish appearance was securely tied. No doubt a genuine wolf was among the forebears of this traveller, according to experts, but his immediate parents were Russian elk hounds of proud lineage.

Lobo, which is the name given to the dog by his owner, John Magee, of New York City, is believed to be one of the only two animals of the breed now in this country. Lobo's master arrived in New York last week on board the St. Paul, of the American line, and was sent to Mr. Magee's summer place, in Mt. Kisco, N.Y., where Lobo will join him.

King, Lobo's sire, is owned by Major Douglas McEwen, of the Highland regiment, known as Scotch Camerons. King has won fifteen blue ribbons in England. Major McEwen presented Lobo to Mr. Magee, his cousin, who will not have an opportunity to exhibit the animal here, owing to the dearth of dogs of the kind in the United States. Lobo's wolfish characteristic include his coat, the quality of which is more like fur than hair.

In Russia, their native country, elk hounds are used largely in otter hunting. They are gentle and affectionate, make excellent watch dogs and are said to be possessed of a high degree of intelligence.

THOSE FIGHT FILMS TO BE PROHIBITED

Manila, July 12.—In fear of the effect which they might have upon the Filipinos, the municipal board of Manila has resolved to prohibit the exhibition of the Johnson-Jeffries fight pictures.

Ottawa, July 12.—Rev. Father Duhaut, from his pulpit in Hull yesterday, assailed the civic and Quebec authorities for countenancing the fight pictures of the Jeffries-Johnson battle, which it is proposed to show in Quebec Province.

London, July 12.—The moving pictures of the Jeffries-Johnson fight will be exhibited in England without interference on the part of the authorities. Home Secretary Winston Churchill announced yesterday in the House of Commons that the Government had no power to prevent the exhibition of the pictures.

SOLDIERS ARRIVE AT SPRINGHILL

Halifax, N.S., July 12.—The military special from Halifax reached the colliery districts of Springhill last night, and two hundred members of the Royal Canadian Regiment with guns are pitted against twelve hundred striking miners.

The news that the military special had left Halifax and was speeding towards Springhill spread through the town and mining section with great rapidity, and when the train pulled into the station an enormous crowd were congregated on the platform. When the soldiers left the train they pitched tents in the driving park, which is owned by the company.

There is a bitter feeling between strikers and strikebreakers, and the slightest move on the part of either faction would result in a riot. Patrick De Bay, a railway policeman, was arrested for carrying concealed weapons. [illegible]

The Intercolonial will have a surplus of $125,000 to $150,000 from the operations of the last three months.

One hundred and fifty Ontario teachers are taking a short course at the Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph.

A heavy storm did some damage at Woodstock. Wind and hail damaged the growing crops slightly, but the rain did a lot of good.

It is said that President Taft is urging William Loeb, who was President Roosevelt's secretary, to accept the Republican nomination for Governor of New York State.

Some German papers are suggesting a league, including Germany, Britain and the United States, to oppose the new Russo-Japanese exclusion treaty regarding Manchuria.

Montreal is crowded with summer tourists, and they have an idea down there that Toronto's strict Sunday laws are driving that class of trade away from that city.

DIFFICULT PROBLEM

Toronto, July 12.—"There is no doubt that what Rev. Dr. Coburn says about the public schools in the eastern counties of the province is true, but it applies in only some districts. It is not a condition that applies generally," said Hon. Dr. Pyne, Minister of Education, yesterday. "It is a matter that will be dealt with, but the great question will be what is best to be done, as in these schools the great majority of the scholars are French Roman Catholics. These things are another legacy of the old Government, and when the matter is taken up will be given the consideration such a serious question merits."

Sir James Whitney said: "These matters will probably be brought to the attention of the Government, and when they are they will be considered."

SMALLPOX AT BRANTFORD

Brantford, July 12.—Fourteen cases of smallpox were discovered here yesterday by the medical health authorities, the first of which had its origin in Brantford Township. Several of the cases found are in the convalescent stage, the attending physicians having treated the same as chicken pox. Several more cases, on account of the failure to establish a quarantine, are expected. In three instances whole families are afflicted.

The Board of Health took prompt measures yesterday morning, ordering all the patients to the Isolation Hospital and tents for emergency purposes.

CAMRBELLTON FIRE SWEPT

Everything But a Few Houses Are Reported Destroyed by the Flames.

St. John, N.B., July 12.—The fragmentary reports of a disastrous fire which broke out in Campbellton, on the Intercolonial Railway, in the northern part of the province, late yesterday indicate that the town is practically destroyed. The fire broke out, says a Chatham message, in the Richards Co.'s shingle mill, and spread rapidly throughout the town. One report says only a few houses are left standing. Among the property destroyed are the Intercolonial station house and freight sheds. The Great Northwestern Telegraph office is burned, and all communication with Campbellton by either telegraph or telephone is cut off. Dalhousie, a town several miles distant, reports sending apparatus to help Campbellton, and then itself being visited by fire, which, however, was subdued by hard work. Chatham also had a blaze, a telephone message stating that the Miramichi Co.'s pulp mill was considerably damaged.

The property loss is estimated at $2,000,000.

Canadians Protest.

London, July 12.—With reference to the King's declaration the organizazers of the opposition to the change here have received several expressions of opinion from Canada. H. H. Blake writes that England is making history, let her keep profane hands absolutely off the coronation oath until Rome grants what she herself demands—worldwide religious liberty.

T. S. Sproule says: "Three hundred thousand Orangemen and hundreds of thousands of Protestants in Canada are heartily in sympathy with you."

EXPLOSION KILLS THREE

Plant of Dominion Explosives Co. is Wrecked.

Arnprior, July 12.—With a roar that was heard and a shock that was felt for miles around, the factory of the Dominion Explosives Co. blew up yesterday morning shortly before 11 o'clock. It was located at Sandpoint, five miles west of this town, and a few minutes after the explosion a telephone call was sent in for help. All the doctors in Arnprior hurried to the scene of the disaster. The factory had taken fire and there was great danger of a second explosion. The members of the fire brigade, however, did all they could, not only to prevent the spread of the flames but to rescue the injured. They succeeded in preventing the flames from reaching the magazine in which, it is stated, a very large quantity of the company's stock of explosives is stored.

The dead are:—Earl Murphy, aged 13, Arnprior; Frank Pittner, aged 37, evplosives expert, Philadelphia; John Hewart, aged 30, explosives expert, Philadelphia.

The injured are:—David Lynn, Sandpoint; Edward Lynn, son of above, skull fractured, may die; Chas. Thomas, Sandpoint; Thomas Mullett, Carleton Place; John Chatterton, Sandpoint; W. Bradley, Perth; Supt. Matchett, Ottawa; Donald McLean, Sandpoint.

The men who escaped can give no reason for the disaster. The explosive the company makes is called the "blaster's friend" and was believed to be particularly safe. Mr. Henry G. Nicoll of New York, president of the company, reached Arnprior last night and will to-day, in company with Supt. Sachette, who was slightly injured, visit the wreck of the factory. He will make no statement till after his visit.

The remains of Pittner and Hewart were found yesterday afternoon, but there is no trace of Murphy's body.

Young Lynn, whose condition is critical, was engaged rolling cartridges when the explosion occurred. He was covered with flying debris, his skull being fractured. The three people killed had just gone into the drying and mixing-room when the explosion occurred. Pittner and Hewart were experts who had come from Philadelphia to work in the mills. Hewart was unmarried, but Pittner is survived by a widow and two children, who live at Arnprior.

MARRIED, AND DIDN'T KNOW IT

Toronto, July 12.—Reuben H. Rhodes was charged in the Police Court yesterday with not supplying his wife, Elizabeth, with sufficient of the necessaries of life to keep her in a healthy condition. He pleaded guilty.

"You were married to this woman on Dec. 11 last?" asked the magistrate.

"So I've been told. I don't know anything about it." Rhodes stated he had been intoxicated on Dec. 11 and knew nothing of the proceedings till the day following.

Hotel Burned Down.

Torrance, Muskoka, July 12.—Late Saturday night, during a severe storm, lightning struck the Hotel Torrance, and it burned to the ground. Several men nearly were overcome with the shock for a few minutes. The hotel tower was shattered by the bolt, and also a large portion of the wall. Loss $10,000; insurance $2,500. The hotel was three storeys in height with 100 foot frontage on Lake Muskoka, and 60 feet frontage overlooking the C.N.R.

DOCTOR THOUGHT BABY DOPED SUSPICIOUS CASE IN TORONTO

Inquest Into the Death of Baby Walter Brown Results in Evidence by Landlady That Russell Dumas, Who Adopted Child Seemed Pleased at Prospect of it Dying.

Toronto, July 12.—"Hurrah! If he dies to-morrow, I'll be $200 better off."

These were the words which Mrs. Bertram Rainey, wife of Policeman Rainey, heard Russell Dumas utter as he entered her house, where he and his wife and sister-in-law roomed, a day or so before his adopted child, Walter Brown, then lying sick, died under suspicion of strychnine poisoning. This evidence was given by Rainey at the inquest opened by Coronto G. W. Graham at the morgue last night, and which was later adjourned for a week.

Rainey said that Dumas told his wife that the mother of the child was a very dear friend of theirs, who had died in hospital giving it birth. She was, they said, only 15 years old. The babe was all right when it first came to the house, but soon became sickly. He had noticed that whenever Dumas was in the house, and the child was crying, it stopped almost immediately. Mrs. Dumas had told his wife that her husband was giving it powders of his own composition, he having studied medicine. When Dr. James Bray was called, he told him he thought that Dumas was "doping" the child.

Dr. Bray swore that he had been called on the Tuesday before the child died. He was suspicious from the start and his suspicions were confirmed by what the policeman told him. He did not see the child after death, but issued the death certificate upon symptoms previously observed. He had taken no action to report the matter because he thought that Rainey had reported it, and because he did not like to cast suspicion upon his patients. He believed that it died of malnutrition.

"Did you suspect that the child had been doped?" asked Coroner Graham.

"Well, I thought that the symptoms were so unusual that I could not explain them in any other way than that," was the reply.

Dr. Gideon Silverthorn, who performed the post mortem, declared that he had found all the organs normal except the stomach, liver and kidneys, which were turned over to Dr. R. A. Pyne for analysis. There was no tubercular condition disclosed in the brain as diagnosed by Dr. Bray. Decomposition was so far advanced that many traces, either of natural disorder or poison, would be eradicated from the portions of the body which he had examined.

HIGH FLYING OF AVIATORS AT TORONTO

Toronto, July 12.—High flying and long periods in the air were the order of the evening at last night's exhibition at the aviation meet at Weston. Both Count de Lesseps and Ralph Johnstone did spectacular work. Johnstone made a record both for time in the air and height of flight for this meet, the first time he went up. Then De Lesseps went up and made a better performance. Again Johnstone went skyward and did the prettiest work that has been seen so far. Both reached about the same heights, 1,100 feet, but Johnstone stayed in the air longest, remaining up 18 minutes. Yesterday was the first day of competition, and the succeeding days of the meet the rivalry will probably grow keener.

The distances estimated were not accurate, owing to a misunderstanding. The aviators were supposed to cross the base line at the centre when at their highest, but one crossed too far to one side and the other went too far to the opposite side. The height finders, James W. Moffat and Prof. Louis B. Stewart, hope to be able to give accurate figure of to-day's ascents.

ANTI-CLERICAL AGITATION

Madrid, July 12.—Anti-clerical meetings continue to be held in Madrid, Saragossa, Taragone and Toledo. At Barcelona a petition signed by 22,000 women was presented to the governor of that city, endorsing the Government's religious policy. At Grenada, in Andalusia, a gathering of Catholics was attacked by the anti-clericals.

The Government has received a strong protest from the Vatican against the bill prepared by Premier Canalejas forbidding other religious orders to enter Spain, pending the settlement of the present difficulties. The Vatican contends that Spain has no right to take any step regarding the religious orders without a previous agreement with the Holy See.

Stage Fell Over Cliff.

Yosemite, Cal., July 12.—A four-horse stage coach, carrying 11 passengers bound for El Portale, the gateway of the Yosemite National Park, went over a cliff into the Mercer River, a fall of 100 feet Sunday. One man and three women were injured seriously. The other passengers and the driver jumped.

THE NEWS AS TOLD IN DESPATCHES

Scow and 800 Logs Lost.

Chatham, July 12.—A big storm raged on Lake St. Clair Saturday, as the result of which the tug D. W. Crow, towing two scows and 800 logs, met with a mishap which resulted in $2,000 loss. The logs were roped between the scows. The fastenings broke and the boiler dropped out of the first scow. The tug pulled through all right and brought back only one scow.

Refuse Entrance to Her Own Country.

St. Catharines, July 12.—Mrs. Jas. Glass of Buffalo, who after spending three weeks visiting relatives in St. Catharines, was sent back to the border, being refused entrance to her own country, is still at the hospital here as the result of her experience. Her husband has made arrangements to come back again Friday and take his wife home to Buffalo.

Fatal Wreck on New York Central.

New York, July 12.—Three trainmen were killed and a train load of passengers were badly shaken up when northbound train No. 59, on the New York Central, known as the northern and western express, was wrecked near Newton Hook, nine miles north of Hudson at 2.40 o'clock yesterday morning.

Heat Killed Fat Man.

Chatham, July 12.—Alvin Merritt of Louisville, the fattest man in the western peninsula, is dead, a victim of the excessive heat. Merritt was scarcely over five feet tall and weighed 448 pounds.

Killed by a Train.

Dunnville, July 12.—Robt. Woods, about 21 years old, was found dead on the G.T.R. tracks about five miles west of Dunnville. His home is in Hamilton, and he had been working in Senect.

Shot by Companion.

Medicine Hat, July 12.—Walter Turner, a young Englishman, was fatally shot in a boarding-house on Sunday by Arthur Hobbs. Two young men were cleaning a revolver and Hobbs slipped a couple of cartridges into it. Then, thinking that he was snapping empty chambers, he pointed it at Turner and pulled the trigger several times. Hobbs is under arrest.

Manning the Canadian Navy.

London, July 12.—The Niobe and Rainbow crews will be provided by volunteers from the active service of the royal fleet reserve and pensioners from the navy.

Reached Three-Quarters Mark.

Belleville, July 12.—The Y.M.C.A. campaign to raise $40,000 for a building reached yesterday the $32,000 mark.

Caught Their Young Fancy.

Newcastle, Pa., July 12.—Rev. R. N. Merrill of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Mahoning Town, advertised that he would preach in the dark Sunday night. The lights were extinguished because of the heat. The church was crowded when the minister entered the pulpit, and more than three-quarters of the congregation were young folks.

COAL RESULTS

We sell the very best quality of hard coal, as good as we know how to buy.

¶ Are you getting results from the you are now using? Are you sure good? Are you burning it the right way?

¶ There is a deal of difference in how you handle the range or furnace. Our long experience tells us that fact, and we are ready to advise any in doubt as to the best way to make use of coal as fuel.

HOW DOES IT SMELL?

GOOD DAY, MADAME, HOW DOES YOUR GARBAGE SMELL?

A LOST ART

Conversation seems to be a lost art. Few know how to talk of anything beyond the newest book, the weather, their neighbor, what they did yesterday and what they intend to do tomorrow. The trouble is people generally do not consider now-a-days anything beyond the next dollar. The song of the bird, the cloud in the sky, the bloom of the field, the soul of the man. Our possibilities and power are all blotted out by the relentless quest for money. Should we retire to the solitude daily and listen to the voice from the silence we would have something to talk about really worth while.

LIFE'S ANOMALIES

The editors of the St. Catharines Journal and the St. Catharines Standard are waging a bitter war over the question of circulation. There are challenges and counter challenges and committees of public men to investigate. This leads the editor of the Journal to very well say:

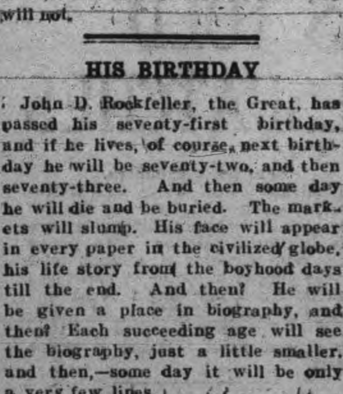
"It is no doubt natural for most people to fancy that because two editors carry on business wars through their news and editorial columns they are not friends in private life. Such an inference is to be drawn from outward signs, but as in politics and in law, men may be at variance with one another on questions of policy and still be good friends socially. Men in business, in professions may fight each other with vigor and relentlessness but when the door of their offices close they are broad-minded enough to meet with good grace in the home or the club."

Of course, there are always the exception to the rule, but most of the men of the Fourth Estate, while keen in their interest for their paper, and loyal to the core, will forget their differences as soon as the press starts and the paper is out and fraternize freely. The man is a small man who will not.

HIS BIRTHDAY

John D. Rockfeller, the Great, has passed his seventy-first birthday, and if he lives, of course, next birthday he will be seventy-two, and then seventy-three. And then some day he will die and be buried. The markets will slump. His face will appear in every paper in the civilized globe, his life story from the boyhood days till the end. And then? He will be given a place in biography, and then? Each succeeding age will see the biography, just a little smaller, and then,—some day it will be only a very few lines.

General Booth is getting old. He, too, will die, and then?—he will be buried and his face will also appear in the press of the entire globe. And the world will mourn a benefactor. The poor, the friendless, will feel they have lost its best friend. He, too, will appear in biography. General Booth will live, J. D. Rockfeller will be forgotten. The former had a passion for men's souls—the latter, he had a passion also,—for money.



KISS NOT

Mrs. L. Rechtin, of Cincinnati, has formed a new order which makes eight hundred and one thousand societies up to date for the elevation, prevention, education and and salvation of poor humanity. It is the Society of Anti-Kissers and nearly five thousand members have already been enrolled. Mrs. Rechtin is very serious. Her slogan is brief, concise and comprehensive. It is but two words,—Kiss not. Needless to say, her organization is doomed to death. She says there is infection in the kiss. What odds? She tells startling stories of a lover who contracted consumption and death from his sweetheart, through osculation. What matter? The kiss, the embrace, is a part of the system. Its in the blood, its in the air. But—

A kiss too much, and a sigh too long,
Then follows the sound of a driving rain
And things are never the same again."

If Mrs. Rechtin would put in certain provisions when it would be possible to kiss, and still be a member of her society she might have a wide world organization. She might adopt a platform something like this:

I. No lady will consent to kiss a gentleman until he cuts off his mustache.

II. No lady will kiss a gentleman who chews tobacco.

III. No lady will stand for the soul kiss; it must be made with one arm free and no hugging.

IV. No gentleman will kiss a lady who chews gum.

There is only one way to make this society true to its vows, and that is by providing muzzles for all its members.

However, Mrs. Rechtin claims to be receiving hundreds of letters daily and says that she has the endorsation of physicians everywhere.

MR. BORDEN'S RECENT TOUR

It is being charged against Mr. R. L. Borden by the organs of the Liberal party, which are fearing the effect of the triumphant tour of the Province of Ontario by the leader of the Opposition that he lacks a sense of humor. That the quiet heart to heart talks Mr. Borden had with thousands of electors in that Province have struck a note of dismay in Liberal ranks is demonstrated by the clumsy efforts to belittle the tour. It is solemnly stated that no man should aspire to the position of Premier of Canada who is not a humorist. There is in this case more than appears at the first glance. The people who for ten years, after having an opportunity of learning what it was, and is, continued the Laurier Government in office must be heartily fond of a joke even when it is at their expense. Both in its personnel and its work the Laurier Government is a practical joke upon all those who by their votes, prolong its reign of power. Take that fine old comedian, Sir Richard Cartwright. His record is funnier than quips of any "end man" in a minstrel show.

MUSIC

The Salvation Army in good strength paraded last night and gave an interested audience in front of the Oriental Hotel and Review office, a splendid programme of sacred music. Music is being ground out not by the yard, but by the mile, and there are usually one or two popular songs to be speedily whistled and sung to a premature grave. But the years make no impression on sacred music. "Nearer, My God to Thee," "Lead Kindly Light," and songs as these will but grow dearer with flight of time. That which tickles the fancy only is soon forgotten, but that which stirs the soul of a man and moves the master emotions lives lives on, and on, and on.

THE SOCIAL EVIL

Rev. J. Aspinal McCuaig, of New York, preached twice in St. Paul's church on Sunday. Mr. McCuaig is well known here. He has been in Peterborough before. Mr. McCuaig is a devout man by nature and dropped a lucrative position in business to put on the cloth. To-day he is associated with Anthony Comstock in the National Christian League for the promotion of Purity. His field is a wide one. His parish is North America.

Race suicide, personal purity, the white slave traffic are his principal subjects. Race suicide, so Prof. Wilson, of Cornell, declares, threatens the North American continent, and if the ratio continues to increase for the next 150 years there will be no children. However bad race suicide is, that is something extremely difficult to deal with. But every father can warn his young son, and every mother can enlighten her daughter of the ways of the world, and there are living examples of wasted youth to be pointed out in every city. It is poor judgment and false modesty, it is more than that, it is criminal that youths should have their eyes opened too late by the rough hand of the stranger. What's a parent for? Then Mr. McCuaig deals with the white slave traffic. He declares that there are one-half a million women leading lives of shame in America. Good God, that's an awful army. Fifty thousand recruits a year are needed to meet the demand, for the average life of these poor souls in this business is not more than ten years. First they are a child, then the darling, then betrayed, then cast aside and into the hell on earth they go. These poor unfortunates are not to blame, nine times out of ten. It is the parents who should have instructed them, who allowed them to go out into the night without warning. And they went out and are there now. It is for the correction of these evils that Rev. Mr. McCuaig is giving his life work.

THE POINT OF VIEW

TOLERABLY.

Hamilton Times.

With an increase of 80 per cent. in building activity, Hamilton should keep pace with a tolerably healthy growth.

THE GOLDEN POSSESSION

Vancouver Province.

This is the sixteenth day of the Silence of Theodore.

THE ABLE FLY.

Guelph Herald.

There's one thing certain, nobody can blame the average housefly for lack of ability to "come back."

"DINNA YE KEN."

Lethbridge Herald.

A young constable arrived in a certain borough in Scotland, and in the course of duty, found it essential to apprehend a very old offender. Arrived at the police station he ushered him into the cell with the comment: "Mind the step."

"Gee awa, mon," said the prisoner, with contempt, "I kent the step afore ye was born."

RIGHT YOU ARE.

Toronto Star.

The whole entrance class at Port Hope was successful, and nearly half of the number took honors in the arithmetic paper about which so much complaint has been made. The fact is that almost any entrance paper looks hard to grown-ups, most of whom would be plucked at thirty on the very papers which they found easy at fifteen.

THE GROOM SCORES.

Duluth Herald.

The groom, Harry Leroy Tabor, was dressed in navy broadcloth, while the bride, Miss Anna Lee Steele, wore white pongee silk, elaborately trimmed in lace and embroidery and carried a large bouquet. The groom is a handsome young man of fine physique and exemplary habits. He is a locomotive fireman and has his flat already furnished at Duluth, Minn.

OLIVE OIL.

St. Thomas Times.

"Take enough olive oil and live forever," is the latest millennium receipe. With a skin full of oil "dotage" is an impossibility, is the view of Dr. Thos B. Keyes, of Chicago, who describes olive oil as man's only real "affinity." Olive oil, properly used, he says, will not alone render one immune from tuberculosis, but from almost every other ill. It will cure the white plague, cancer, leprosy and other diseases. Dr. Keyes declares he has accomplished scores of cures under it. He has cured consumptives without removing them from the crowded districts of Chicago, treating people at home who were unable to go to a better climate. At the age of 40, he says, every person should have injections of olive oil for a certain period each year.

The Mystery of The Yellow Room

By GASTON LEROUX

COPYRIGHT, 1908 By BRENTANO'S

All this she had confessed to Robert Darzac, and, believing Ballmeyer dead, had given herself to the joy of a union with him. But fate had resuscitated Jean Roussel, the Ballmeyer of her youth. He had taken steps to let her know that he would never allow her to marry Darzac—that he still loved her.

Mlle. Stangerson never for one moment hesitated to confide in M. Darzac. She showed him the letter in which Jean Roussel asked her to recall the first hours of their union in their beautiful and charming Louisville home. "The presbytery has lost nothing of its charm nor the garden its brightness," he had written. The scoundrel pretended to be rich and claimed the right of taking her back to Louisville. She had told Darzac that if her father should know of her dishonor she would kill herself. M. Darzac had sworn to silence her persecutor, even if he had to kill him. He was outwitted and would have succumbed had it not been for the genius of Rouletabille.

Mlle. Stangerson was herself helpless in the hands of such a villain. She had tried to kill him when he had first threatened and then attacked her in the yellow room. She had, unfortunately, failed and felt herself condemned to be forever at the mercy of this unscrupulous wretch who was continually demanding her presence at clandestine interviews. When he sent her the letter through the postoffice asking her to meet him she had refused. The result of her refusal was the tragedy of the yellow room. The second time he wrote asking for a meeting, the letter reaching her in her sick chamber, she had avoided him by sleeping with her women. In that letter the scoundrel had warned her that, since she was too ill to come to him, he would come to her and that he would be in her chamber at a particular hour on a particular night. Knowing that she had everything to fear from Ballmeyer, she had left her chamber on that night. It was then that the incident of the "inexplicable gallery" occurred.

The third time she had determined to keep the appointment. He asked for it in the letter he had written in her own room on the night of the incident in the gallery, which he left on her desk. In that letter he threatened to burn her father's papers if she did not meet him. It was to rescue these papers that she made up her mind to see him. She did not for one moment doubt that the wretch would carry out his threat if she persisted in avoiding him, and in that case the labors of her father's lifetime would be forever lost. Since the meeting was thus inevitable she resolved to see her husband and appeal to his better nature. It was for this interview that she had prepared herself on the night the keeper was killed. They did meet, and what passed between them may be imagined. He insisted that she renounce Darzac. She, on her part, affirmed her love for him. He stabbed her in his anger, determined to convict Darzac of the crime. As Larsan he could do it and had so managed things that Darzac could never explain how he had employed the time of his absence from the chateau. Ballmeyer's precautions were most cunningly taken.

Larsan had threatened Darzac as he had threatened Mathilde—with the same weapon and the same threats. He wrote Darzac urgent letters declaring himself ready to deliver up the letters that had passed between him and his wife and to leave them forever if he would pay him his price. He asked Darzac to meet him for the purpose of arranging the matter, appointing the time when Larsan would be with Mlle. Stangerson. When Darzac went to Epinay, expecting to find Ballmeyer, or Larsan, there, he was met by an accomplice of Larsan's and kept waiting until such time as the "coincidence" could be established.

It was all done with Machiavellian cunning, but Ballmeyer had reckoned without Joseph Rouletabille.

* * * * * * *

Now that the mystery of the yellow room has been cleared up this is not the time to tell of Rouletabille's adventures in America. Knowing the young reporter as we do, we can understand with what acumen he had traced step by step the story of Mathilde Stangerson and Jean Roussel. At Philadelphia he had quickly informed himself as to Arthur William Rance. There he learned of Rance's act of devotion and the reward he thought himself entitled to for it. A rumor of his marriage with Mlle. Stangerson had once found its way into the drawing rooms of Philadelphia. He also learned of Rance's continued attentions to her and his importunities for her hand. He had taken to drink, he had said, to drown his grief at his unrequited love. It can now be understood why Rouletabille had shown so marked a coolness of demeanor toward Rance when they met in the witnesses' room on the day of the trial.

The strange Roussel Stangerson mystery had now been laid bare. Who was this Jean Roussel? Rouletabille had traced him from Philadelphia to Cincinnati. In Cincinnati he became acquainted with the old aunt and had found means to open her mouth. The story of Ballmeyer's arrest threw the right light on the whole story. He visited the "presbytery," a small and pretty dwelling in the old colonial style, which had indeed "lost nothing of its charm." Then, abandoning his pursuit of traces of Mlle. Stangerson, he took up those of Ballmeyer. He followed them from prison to prison, from crime to crime. Finally as he was about leaving for Europe he learned in New York that Ballmeyer had five years before embarked for France with some valuable papers belonging to a merchant of New Orleans whom he had murdered.

And yet the whole of this mystery has not been revealed. Mlle. Stangerson had a child by her husband, a son. The infant was born in the old aunt's house. No one knew of it, so well had the aunt managed to conceal the event.

What became of that son? That is another story, which so far I am not permitted to relate.

FRENCH OPENED THE ROAD.

How the General Cleared the Way at Klipdrift, South Africa.

Many Canadians are probably unaware of how brilliant a soldier Gen. Sir John French, who is now in Canada on a mission to inspect the military forces of this Dominion, really is. By critics as disinterested as the German military attaches who accompanied the British forces in the South African campaign he is regarded as one of the most brilliant cavalry leaders who ever commanded men. The feat which impressed them, and which is described at length in their report on the tactics and strategy with which the war was conducted made for the German War Office, occurred at Klipdrift, on the road to Kimberley. Gen. French was in command of the force which sought to open the way to Kimberley then under siege. He advanced with a force of six thousand cavalry and a supporting force of artillery, and on arrival at Klipdrift it was found that the Boers had fortified every height on the other side of a deep valley and had, as they thought, absolutely blocked the road to Kimberley, since they could not be dislodged except at terrible loss of life and by an enormously superior force. Scanning the hills with his glasses Gen. French discerned what is known as a "saddle" or gap between two hills. The Boers had so fortified the slopes of these that on short notice they could annihilate any force that attempted to get through the gap. Quick as a flash an inspiration came to him. He at once gave orders for his artillery to open fire and thus draw on themselves the fire of the guns of the Boers on the opposite height. This was but a cover for his main scheme. His whole force of six thousand troopers was shot like a thunder bolt down the hills, across the valley and through the "saddle" before the Boers, who were busy in their artillery duel with the British gunners on the heights opposite, had a chance to realize what was happening. Within half an hour after the order was given the road to Kimberley was open. French lost less than twenty men, and these were the victims not of the Boers but of careless riding. They were thrown and trampled in the mad rush across the valley. The departure of the whole force was accomplished in sixteen minutes, and that six thousand men could be sent away so quickly was evidence of the general's capacity for organization as great as the plan itself, of his brilliant courage and resource. To the German critics this was the most brilliant episode of the war either on the side of Briton or Boer, and one of the most amazing achievements in the history of cavalry.

Orangemen Celebrate in Lindsay—Big Crowd From Peterboro—A Great Day for the Orange and Blue

By Our Own Reporter.

Lindsay, July Twelfth.

Away they went with their flag floating proudly before them, the music of the band and the beat of the drum ringing in their ears. The Peterborough Orangemen will assuredly make an impression when they parade up and down Kent street to-day to the tune of dear old "Protestant Boys."

Many a patriarch was there with the hat his dear old father wore upon King William's day.

The rising generation with their white coats and caps and canes, were well represented and ranged in age and size from the tender child of eight or ten to the longlegged stripling, budding into manhood.

The inspiring fife and drum provided music also.

Our friends from the rural districts were there in large numbers also and swelled the procession.

Nassau and Downer's Corners lodges were well represented.

When lined up on the march three abreast the procession extended from the corner of George and Charlotte streets to the Grand Trunk station.

Mr. Archie McDonald was director of ceremonies.

The Duke of Manchester Lodge, No. 59, Diamond Lodge No. 80, and J. W. Bell Memorial Lodge were all out in full strength.

Special trains from Fraserville, Bowmanville and other points filled with Orangemen sped through the city this morning for Lindsay.

There are thousands present in Lindsay and a full report will appear to-morrow.

IN TORONTO THIS MORNING RAIN MARRED PROCESSION

Special to the Review.

Toronto, July 12.—Lowering skies and heavy rains interfered greatly with the Orange procession in this city, only about 3,000 took part. The route of the procession was along Grosvenor street, down Yonge, along Louisa, down James and along Queen down Dufferin to the Exhibition grounds.

CAFE PROPRIETOR WAS ASSAULTED ON SMITH ST.

Attacked Last Night He Claims by Three Young Men, One of Whom it is Alleged Was Ejected From Restaurant Yesterday Morning — Police Have Been Informed.

Mr. M. Douris, proprietor of the Boston Cafe, has complained to the police that he was assaulted last night on Smith street by three young men and claims to be sure the identity of one of them. Chief Thompson informed the Review that informations would probably be issued for the appearance in court of the alleged assailants of Mr. Douris. He was rather severely handled.

It is alleged that one of the young men concerned in the attack called at the Boston Cafe yesterday morning to collect an account. He claims he was roughly used by the proprietor and ejected. This is stated to be the cause that led to the trouble on Smith street.

Relations between church and state have reached the breaking point in Spain.

Query Answered

A correspondent addressed a query to the Review to-day, in which it was asked if the C.P.R. had appointed a new coroner for the city.

The C.P.R. have no jurisdiction to appoint a coroner. The late Dr. Grey was physician to the C.P.R. for Peterborough and coroner for the county on government appointment. He is succeeded by Dr. Greer as coroner and Dr. Young is the local physician for the C.P.R.

Fred E. Wheaton, S. K. R. S.

Letters were read from Supreme Chancellor Brown and Supreme vice-Chancellor Hanson, regretting their inability to attend the convention.

The Peterborough Reception Committee made an announcement of the form of entertainment for the afternoon, which was enthusiastically received.

A letter was read from the Grand Keeper of Records and Seal, Wilson, of Winnipeg, Manitoba, asking that Fort William, Port Arthur and the territory north of the Great Lakes be added to the grand domain of Manitoba, and that the Grand Lodge of Ontario waive their rights over said territory.

The question was referred to the Judiciary Committee.

A letter was read from the Supreme Chancellor, recommending that every lodge purchase a copy of Kennedy's Pythian History, which was the only authentic record of the order.

Past Grand Chancellors Davidson and Peace introduced a delegation from the city of Peterborough, who were present to Welcome the Grand Lodge.

Alderman Duffus, chairman of the Reception Committee, spoke first, in the absence of the Mayor, and welcomed the Grand Lodge to Peterborough, and hoped that the delegates would enjoy their visit so much that they would decide to return again.

Alderman Turner presented the delegates with a skeleton key, which he said would open any door in the city, except the lockup, which, he assured them, would be found wide open, in case any of the delegates found themselves billeted there.

Alderman Buller, Alderman Hicks, City Clerk Armstrong and Chancellor Commander Hamilton, of Marathon Lodge, also welcomed the delegates and wished them every success in their efforts.

Grand Chancellor Geddes thanked the delegation for their good wishes and assured them that he would take good care of the skeleton key, being a skeleton himself.

The deputation then withdrew.

Grand Lodge then dealt with the question of a Grand Keeper of Records and Seal, being entitled to a Past Grand Chancellorship after having served ten years in his office. The Supreme Representatives were instructed to vote against the change in the Supreme Statutes.

A suggestion that the election of officers in the subordinate lodges be held in November instead of December, their terms of office to begin as now, in January, was left over till next convention as a notice of motion.

The notice of motion from last year that the age limit for membership be lowered to eighteen was discussed, and the supreme representatives were instructed to support same.

The Finance Committee presented their reports, showing that they had audited the books of the Grand Keeper of Records and Grand Master of Exchequer, and found them correct in every particular.

The committee on semi-annual reports stated that they had found the reports and the books of the Grand Keeper of Records and Seal correct.

The Committee on Warrants and Charters recommended that Oshawa, No. 47, and Hamlet, No. 42, Stratford, be granted charters as requested.

The state of the Order Committee presented report No. 1, commending the Grand Chancellor for his work during the year.

Grand Lodge adjourned to 9 a.m. Wednesday.

M.H.O. EXPLAINS THE POSITION OF THE HEALTH DEPARTMENT

With Regard to the Removal of Garbage — Council Not Board of Health Has Jurisdiction in the Matter—No Attempts at Legislation Have Succeeded.

As letters have appeared in the Review criticizing the city health officials and the Board of Health, Dr. McPherson, the Medical Health Officer, was approached to-day by the Review and asked if he cared to make any explanation from the health department's standpoint of the existing state of affairs.

The complaints concerning the administration of the Board were to the effect that the garbage in the lanes and back yards was allowed to decay and breed disase.

Dr. McPherson explained that the matter of cleaning up this refuse rested with the Council, which had introduced a garbage by-law which was voted down by the people. Only a few months ago Ald. Turner endeavored to get the Council to take action on the recommendation of the Board that the garbage system be instituted but no action was taken on it.

That's how the matter stands now.

FOOTBALL

Special to the Review.

Havelock, July 12.—The Havelock junior football team go to Madoc on Wednesday to play the junior team of that town in the first game of the finals for the junior Midland series.

The local team have not lost a game this season, and are playing good ball, but they realize that they have some hard work before them yet. Reports from the Madoc camp are not very encouraging to the lightweights on the local team, as the Madoc team have some husky men on their line-up. The team will leave Havelock at noon on Wednesday and the game will be called at 6 o'clock.

Both teams are anxious to carry off the Midland penant this year and the finals promise to be a very interesting feature.

SPECIALS TO THE REVIEW

HE WAS CRAZED WITH JEALOUSY MURDERED WIFE AND CHILD

Special to the Review.

Montreal, July 12.—Marion Croche, an Italian, crazed with jealousy, murdered his wife and child at 2.40 o'clock this morning in his house at 11 St. Monique street, and then sent a bullet into his own brain.

Crouche split his wife's head open with an axe and cut his three year old child's throat before sending bullets into their heads.

The woman was shot in the left breast and the baby in the right eye. They were both murdered as they lay in bed, the child in a cot near the bed of its mother.

Croche fell between the two beds when he fired the bullet into his own head, and his body was found on the floor.

The couple had been married about four years. The husband was about 44 years old, and his wife only half that age.

LORDLY AVIATOR FELL TO GROUND WAS MANGLED

Special to the Review.

Bournemouth, Eng., July 12.—The first flying tournament of the year in England was brought to a tragic close this morning by the death of the most daring and popular British aviator, the Hon. Charles Rolls, third son of Lord Langattock. In the presence of a great company of spectators a majority of which were ladies and children, and many personal friends of the young aviator, the Wright biplane, on which Rolls was flying, fell suddenly with terrific speed from a height of 100 feet. It struck the ground close to the crowded grand stand, smashing into a tangled mass, and before the doctors and their assistants could reach the spot Rolls was dead.

"DINNY" DOBBIN WENT A "FISHIN'"

"Dinny" Dobbin, of the Review mechanical department, arose from his downy couch this morning and went afishin'.

At the C.P.R. bridge an unfortunate ten-pound 'lunge accidently connected with his bait. "Dinny" was quite elated at his good luck.

Only a few minutes previous to landing this fine catch he had a large 'lunge right up to the surface, but it straightened out the hook and got away.

Will Report Be Issued?

Ottawa, July 12.—Enquiry was made at the Militia Department yesterday as the likelihood of Sir John French's report on Canada's militia resources, which has been, or is at the present time, in the course of preparation, being made public. In the absence of Sir Frederick Borden, who has gone to Nova Scotia for a few weeks, and Col. Fiset, the Deputy Minister, who is also out of town, nothing definite could be learned.

Quite a Family Affair.

Portland, Me., July 12.—Scores of people of the Deering district are planning receptions to Thomas, Benjamin, and Fred Bustin and Catherine, Agnes and Melvena Hamilton, three brothers and three sisters whose unprecedented triple marriage has just leaked out. All six came here recently from the Provinces of Quebec and Ontario.

Suspended the Mayor.

Columbus, Ohio, July 12.—Governor Harmon yesterday suspended Mayor Herbert Atherton of Newark for 30 days, pending an investigation of his actions during the rioting Friday night, which resulted in the lynching of Carl Etherington, the "dry" detective.

Apple Exports.

Those who know say that Canada in the very near future will monopolize practically the whole trade in export winter apples from the continent of North America. It is estimated that we now produce 12,000,000 barrels a year. Our commercial orchards are confined principally to the three Provinces of Nova Scotia, Ontario and British Columbia. In 1908, besides furnishing our own home market, we supplied Great Britain with 59 per cent. of her imports of apples, and sent a considerable quantity to more than 22 other countries. In 1909, we sent Great Britain 49 per cent. of her requirements of apples. Our largest customers in 1909, besides the United Kingdom, were the United States, $37,695; British Africa, $22,689, and Newfoundland, $18,355. Our apples travel to such places as Fiji, China, and Japan. In addition our exports of evaporated apples are growing. In 1907 they were 3,718,372 pounds, in 1908, 6,939,088 pounds; and in 1909, 4,973,562 pounds. Our principal customers for evaporated apples are Holland, Germany, and the United States. The recent improvement in trade relations with Germany is expected to open a wide market for Canadian apples. In 1903, for instance, Canada's exports of evaporated apples to Germany amounted to 4,289,314 pounds, but in surtax times this went as low as 377,250 pounds.

Canada First In Cheese.

Canada is the greatest cheese exporting country in the world. Even though our exports for 1908-'09 dropped to 164,907,139 pounds, we are still ahead of Holland, our nearest competitor. Great Britain is the world's largest importer of cheese. Although she produces an estimated quantity of 300,000,000 pounds of cheese a year, yet her imports in 1906 were 289,371,824 pounds, and Canada supplied the bulk of this, or 214,877,077 pounds. Germany was the next largest importer to Great Britain, with 48,187,525 pounds; France third, with 44,714,972 pounds; the United States fourth, with 33,848,766 pounds, and Belgium fifth, with 30,333,690 pounds.

What She Wanted to Know.

She was a sweet-faced old lady, but with an expression which showed plainly that she possessed opinions of her own and the spirit to stick to them. Someone, with a mistaken idea of showing her a kindness, had taken her to the matinee to hear "Carmen" sung in a Toronto theatre, and it was obvious to those around her that she thought that in her case at least the afternoon of Victoria Day was being wasted. At the end of each act she asked the same question, "Is there any more of this?" and each time, when the answer came in the affirmative, her lips became a little straighter, her back a little stiffer, and her expression more disapproving. For her Carmen sang and danced and coaxed and intrigued in vain; it was not to such as her the cigarette girl's wiles appealed.

At last she could stand it no longer, and she made her decision clear: "Through three acts of this awful thing have I sat," she explained to the attentive young man who was her escort, "and not another minute will I endure it. I've seen troubles enough and wickedness enough to make your poor dear father turn in his grave if he knew I was here, and now I'm going home. Here have I wasted three mortal hours and, thank Heaven, I haven't understood enough to make a decent woman blush, though I've half a mind to let you stay, son, to see if that young hussy gets her deserts before the show's over."

Husbands Should Answer Promptly.

Pittsburg, July 12.—"I shot my husband because I thought he was a burglar and I would do it again under similar circumstances. Men who stay out late at night should answer promptly when their wives call 'Who's there'."

This is what Mrs. J. T. Burns said yesterday about shooting her husband in the arm at their home on McPherson boulevard Sunday night.

3,000 YEARS AGO THE EGYPTIANS CURED DISEASE WITH FRUIT

To-day, Canadians Are Doing It With "Fruit-a-tives"

—The Famous Fruit Medicine

We are apt to consider the age we live in as the most wonderful age that the world has ever known. It is, in many respects. Yet the ancients surpassed us in some things. Engineers of our 40-story sky-scrapers still marvel at the massive pyramids and the sphinx. So, too, the Egyptian physicians of 3,000 years ago, used fruit juices as a medicine for treating blood trouble, liver and kidney disease, and stomach weakness. Their method of mixing fruit juice as a medicine, is also one of the lost arts. A well known Canadian physician, however, perfected a method of utilizing fruit juices, which is one of the greatest discoveries of modern medical research.

"Fruit-a-tives" is the natural cure for Chronic Constipation, Biliousness, Indigestion, Torpid Liver, Kidney Disease, Pain in the Back, Bad Complexion, Rheumatism, Nervousness, Headache and Neuralgia.

50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, or trial box, 25c. At all dealers, or from Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

Mr. Mark Noble has a pumping apparatus, which carries the water from the spring below the hill to his stable and the house. In the house are taps combined with the stove where you may have hot water when needed.

CAMPBELLCROFT

Special to the Review.

Campbellcroft, July 12.—Mrs. Allison is visiting friends in Lindsay and Kincardine.

Mr. Cyrus Allison, who has been nursing a sore hand, has gone back to resume his duties at Lorneville station.

Mrs. Christie Wilson, an old-time resident, is renewing old acquaintances in this burg.

Mrs. Webber entertained the members of the Women's Institute last Thursday.

Mr. and Mrs. Bruce are both very ill, with slight hope of recovery.

Mr. Walter Bruce and Mr. John Corbett are home for a few days from Toronto.

Mr. S. F. McMurtry is applying the brush and liquid, at Mr. Thos. Lord's residence, which will add to the appearance when completed.

TO KEEP FREE OF FLIES

"Kill the first fly." Considering that one female fly can bring into being several millions of the pest in one summer, it would seem a good job to kill that first one.

If the first and its immediate followers are let live and the house becomes overrun, there are several suggestions for ridding the rooms of them. One course, taken from the south where mosquitoes are a public menace, is to burn pyrethrum powder in a room. This benumbs the flies and they fall to the floor and can be swept out. The trouble with this is that pyrethrum powder is not sold at many drug stores in the north.

From the American Civic Association at Washington comes this hint: Drop twenty drops of carbolic acid on a hot iron; the vapor kills the flies. Sticky fly paper has both good and bad qualities. It does trap some flies. But those that get their feet coated with the adhesive matter are likely to return to their filth heaps prepared to carry back to the house added quantities of disease-bearing matter sticking to their feet. Fly traps do their part, but Dr. C. St. Clair Drake, of the Chicago health department, says the insects are cautious.

"The flies soon learn to be wary of traps," Dr. Drake says. "Those that have had any experience with them cannot be caught, and shortly a tribe of flies too shrewd to be trapped might be evolved. The insects also avoid the sticky fly paper after one experience They are crafty little fellows and the instinct of life is as strong as in many superior beings."

Various poisons are suggested, the best of which, the doctors say, is formalin in water. Put a spoonful of the chemical into half a cup of water and leave it exposed in the room and the flies will do the rest.

In passing, it is worthy of note that this insect, with its love for odors that offend the nostrils of man, has a strong aversion for scents which the human likes. This has given a hint for still another prevention, of minor worth. Aromatic plants in rooms and at windows act as repulsives. Such plants, then, have a double value in sick rooms; they are pleasing to the sufferer, and discourage the fly that, with evil purpose, looks through the open window.—From "Campaigning Against the Fly," in August Technical World Magazine.

HAPPENINGS IN HAVELOCK

FIRE—ASSAULT—PRESENTATION

Havelock, July 6.—The house of Mr. Jno. Seeney, at the west end, occupied by himself and Mr. Orval Parcels, was totally destroyed by fire, which broke out about one o'clock Wednesday afternoon. The cause is not exactly known, but it is believed it originated in the chimney and had gained considerable headway before detected. Most of the furniture down stairs, belonging to both parties, was removed, but everything in the upper storey was completely destroyed. The loss on the building will be about $1,000, covered by insurance of $600. Mr. Seeney's furniture was insured for $200, but there was none on Mr. Parcel's. A strong south wind was blowing and great fear was entertained for the house of Mr. Kellar, which stands about fifty feet north, but a large number of helpers were soon on the spot and the fire was kept to the one building.

ASSAULT.

Maurice Kaurt, a pack peddlar and a companion, had their dinner at Chas. Rupert's, at Cordova, on June 27th, and, having paid for their meal, were assaulted by Rupert, who was not satisfied with the amount paid for the meal, Rupert came up before Magistrates Joyce and Mattison on Saturday last on a charge of assault and abusive language, and was assessed $6.00 and costs, amounting in all to $13.45.

PRESENTATION.

A large number of the school friends of Miss Shuley Morrison gathered at her home on Friday night of last week and spent an enjoyable evening, during which she was presented with a beautiful gold locket and chain, and an address in which her friends expressed their deep regret at her departure for Norwood.

The Girls' Auxiliary of St. John's church will hold a lawn social on the church grounds on Monday evening.

Havelock and Cordova Orange lodges will go to the Campbellford celebration on July 12.

FIRST HALF HOLIDAY

Wednesday, July 6th, was Havelock's first half holiday, and as usual a large number took advantage of it to get away to the cool breezes of the lakes and rivers. Two parties of young people spent an enjoyable afternoon at Healey Falls, while nearly all the other lakes and rivers were well patronized, the local liveries being taxed to their atmost to provide enough rigs.

TRICKY ARITHMETIC.

The report of the entrance examination show that nine from the Havelock school passed out of forty who wrote on the papers, and four of the pupils from surrounding rural schools out of nineteen who tried. As all over the province, the tricky arithmetic paper proved a stumbling block to the local pupils. The Havelock pupils who passed were: Geo. Black, Bertha Bryan, Alice Dobson, Marion Knox, Archie Mathison, Wilhelmine Smith, and Wilfred Waller. In the rural schools the successful ones were: W. A. Clemenger, No. 12, Belmont; Wealthy Ellis, No. 3, Belmont; Beatrice Lamb, No. 12, Belmont; Gertie Sanders, No. 3, Belmont.

DERAILED CARS.

Eight cars were derailed at Kenebec on Thursday night by a broken flange. The local auxiliary was called out and the line was cleared in a short time.

FLYING MACHINE.

The famous Bleriot monoplane "La Scarabie," owned by the noted aeronaut, Count de Lesseps, and in which he crossed the English channel, passed through Havelock by C.P.R. freight on Thursday, en route to the Toronto aviation meet. It was loaded on a flat car, but the wings were not assembled on the machine, being boxed separate, and when put together would measure about 33 feet from tip to tip. The machine was about 25 feet long, and fitted with a powerful motor. A large number from town took great interest in examining it, as well as a large number of Manitoba teachers who passed through en route to Montreal on a special train on Thursday, and took advantage of a ten-minute stop to inspect the bird machine.

Minutes of last meeting read and adopted.

The principal business was to consider applications to fill the vacancy on the High School teaching staff caused by Miss Ford's resignation.

About twenty applications were received, ranging from $600 to $900 per year. As the Board did not wish to pay more than $700, only some six or seven of the applications were considered, among which were:

Mrs. Edgar, B.A., of St. Jacob's. No salary mentioned.

Miss Winnie I. Buchanan, of Rondeau, salary $650.

Miss Beatrice Braine, B.A., of Weston; salary $600.

Miss Bella L. Scott, B.A., Toronto; $700.

Miss M. Scanlon, Aurora, at $650.

After careful consideration, and, guided by the recommendation of Principal R. G. Lawler, Mr. Cuffe moved, seconded by Mr. Finlay, that the choice of the Board be as followed, provided the ones chosen are qualified to teach the Arts course; First, Miss Scott; 2nd, Miss Braine; 3rd, Miss Buchanan; 4th, Miss Scanlan; 5th, Mrs. Edgar.

Moved by Messrs. Cuffe and Elliott,—That the Property Committee be instructed to put a new floor in the Principal's room in the Public school, and also a screen across one end of the room, as recommended by Mr. Lees, P.S.I.—Carried.

Moved by Messrs. Cuffe and Doherty,—That the chairman and Mr. Finlay be appointed to look into the matter of fire insurance to ascertain if the schools are adequately protected, and also to have a policy coming due with Mr. J. E. Roxburgh renewed.—Carried.

Orders were drawn on the treasury for expenses of examinations as follows:—R. Lees, B.A., re entrance exams, $12.25; R. G. Lawler, B.A., do, $24.95; Miss E. L. Waters, do, $21.25; R. Lees, B.A., Departmental exams, $33.10.

The Agricultural School came up for a little criticism.

The chairman and Mr. Elliott were instructed to give the matter their attention.

Mr. B. W. Leverette returned home from a trip through the Northwest last week. He says Ontario is good enough yet.

Mr. Lou Brown, who went out at same time, has als oreturned to his home in Asphodel.

Mr. Wm. Udey, eldest son of the late Wm. Udey, of Norwood, who has been away from here over thirty years, and who is at present a citizen of Uncle Sam's domain, is renewing acquaintances around Norwood at the present. He says he can scarcely recognize the place, and feels like a stranger in a strange land but for the meeting and greeting of old friends.

Miss Mabel Laing is visiting friends in Havelock.

Several Norwoodites have taken advantage of the St. Anne's trip to Quebec, including the Misses McLaughlin, Miss Stella Searight, Mrs. and Miss Downs.

FIRE INVESTIGATION.

Quite an excitement was caused last week when it was ascertained that steps were to be taken by the authorities to endeavor to ascertain the origin of the fire of the 6th of May, when the Reynolds block, the old Stephenson property, and the King's hotel were destroyed. People thought it was all talk, but when Constable Dickson, of Westwood, began to hand out papers to the tune of about one hundred and twenty-five, people began to look upon it as taking somewhat definite shape. An investigation is being held this p.m. in the town hall before Mr. Jos. E. Rogers, Provincial officer.

MORE PERSONALS

The J. Finlay & Son's Company's factory shut down on Saturday evening last for a two weeks' holiday.

Mr. and Mrs. R. G. Lawler left last week for their summer cottage down the St. Lawrence, where they will spend a portion of their midsummer vacation.

Mr. and Mrs. R. M. Callandar intend spending their vacation at Stoco Lake, Tweed.

Miss Katie Baskin, teacher in one of Toronto's Public schools, is home to Norwood on her vacation.

Miss Jessie Young, of Elora, is visiting her parents here.

CROP PROSPECTS.

Farmers in this vicinity are overjoyed by the recent beautiful showers. For two weeks and a half not a drop of rain fell, and the drouth with the excessive heat of the sun so affected the crops that harvest was coming in about two weeks ahead of time. Cover was literally cooked in the field, and in order to save it at all people were forced to cut much of it before the end of June. The consequence is that the quality of hay will be below the average, as the clover was not properly matured. Early peas were almost ruined, but later varieties promise since the rain an abundant crop.

Fall grain looks fine, while some spring grain, such as barley and oats, are very short in the straw, but on the whole the prospects are well up to the average, thanks to the rains of the past few days.

James Madden, of Brooklyn, N. Y., fell into the North River from a ferry boYat while asleep, and was only awakened when rescued.

EVIDENCE AS TO HOW VINETTE PROBABLY CAME TO HIS DEATH

Given at Inquest at Council Chamber---Expert Witness Was Sure Vinette Had Received Shock of Full Voltage--Adjournment Till Thursday Night.

From the evidence presented last night at the Council Chamber at the inquest into the death of Isadore Vinette, the 23 year old lineman of the Otonabee Light and Power, who fell to his death on Saturday from a pole at the corner of George and Perry streets, it would appear that the deceased might have been shocked from the high voltage before he fell.

Coroner Greer presided at the hearing Mr. R. E. Wood represented the Crown and Mr. S. T. Medd appeared for the company.

After a long sitting the coroner adjourned the inquiry till Tuesday evening when it will be resumed at the Council Chamber at 8 o'clock.

SHOCK WOULD BE FATAL.

Peter Kerr, superintendent of the Otonabee Power Company's lines, said he was familiar with the scene of the death of Vinette, at the corner of Perry and George streets—a power current of from 22 to 23 hundred volts passed through the wires there. The lines would be carrying power to this extent at the time of Vinette's death.

The shock from this voltage would be sufficient to cause death. The wires ran over the cross arm, the witness thought.

AN EXPERT'S OPINION.

Herbert Fife, an electrician with the Peterborough Light and Power Co., examined the wires at the point of Vinette's death Sunday between 11 and 12 o'clock.

There were three primary wires that came to the pole and these branched off again. The voltage would be sufficient to kill a man if the current passed through him. The wires were all tied to glass insulators on the pole. The wires were insulated also.

He saw no defects in connection with the wires or their arrangement. A man could work on one wire and no harm would come to him, but if he came in contact with two at once the der repair by Vinette was the south primary wire coming from the west towards the pole and crossing George street.

He wouldn't say there shouldn't be any circuit during repairs. There was more danger in repairing than under ordinary circumstances, as breaks were dangerous to handle. Whether the current should be turned off depended on the strength of it and the nature of the break.

Whether this wire came from the west to the east it was attached to a pin on the lower cross arm. The pin was broken on the cross arm and the wire sprang up and came in contact with the iron brace above the cross-arm.

This would charge the cross-arm with the same voltage as the wire.

All the work on a power pole was to an extent dangerous.

Vinette went up to put the wire back on to the pin. He fixed the pin all right, but was killed before he adjusted the wire to it.

The witness, from his examination thought the wires were insulated properly.

Besides the wires already spoken of, there was another short piece of wire hanging down.

It had been originally used to connect with the transformer, which had been on the pole. It was attached to an upper wire and carried the same voltage as the wire it tapped.

The witness could see no purpose the wire would serve as the transformer had been removed. This wire was cut at the lower cross-arm. If the witness had been sent up to the repair work he would have cut the wire off the first thing.

THEORY AS TO CAUSE OF DEATH.

Mr. Fife in giving his theory as to the cause of Vinette's death stated that he thought the victim had put his leg over the second cross-arm and rested it over the third cross-arm and in the act of putting the right leg over he caught in his right hand the charged brace and he touched the upright wire with the back of his right shoulder. When the shoulder touched the wire a burning arc would be created and at the point where the shoulder presumably touched the wire the insulation was burned off as a result of the arc.

Mr. Fife saw the body and examined it for marks. The first one he saw was the one back of the right shoulder.

This was a bad burn. Another burn was on the right hand.

To Coroner Greer Mr. Fife stated he would regard the construction at the point where Vinette met his death as faulty in one respect. The defect was in the brace from the pole to the cross arm, being above instead of below the crosspiece. This would make it inconvenient for a man to sit near the pole. This was an inconvenience the witness thought on reconsideration, rather a defect.

As to the cut wire on the side of the pole it would be no more dangerous than other wires had the transformer been on below.

If he had been sent to remove the transformer he would have thoroughly removed the upright wire. The work wouldn't be complete till this had been done. If that upright wire had not been there Vinette could have not received the current.

SHOULD HAVE CUT HANGING WIRE.

To Mr. Medd Mr. Fife said Vinette's first duty in making repairs would have been to put in the pin, which he did. His next step would have been to put the wire on the pin. This would have taken it out of contact with the brace and the brace consequently would not have been charged. As it was had he cut the wire which was hanging and which caused the arc to be formed when it touched his shoulder while his hand grasped the electrified brace, he would have been practically out of danger.

Mr. Fife didn't know if Vinette had worn rubber gloves.

Ralph Holtiman, a youth of seven years and of small voice, said he saw Vinette go up the pole and saw him fall.

He saw Vinette's hat drop, then heard him call out and saw him topple off the cross-piece.

WHAT THE AUTOPSY SHOWED.

Dr. Gallivan with Dr. McPherson, performed the postmortem on Vinette's body. There were discolorations, he said in his report, on the back of the neck and arm and hand. There were several abrasions on the body. There was a simple fracture of the left thigh. The neck was broken.

The doctor couldn't tell whether an electric shock killed Vinette.

Dr. McPherson said a postmorten wouldn't indicate if a man were overcome by heat.

The right hand was seared, Dr. McPherson said, and the mark on the shoulder looked like a burn.

SAW VINETTE FALL.

Richard Rourke, who keeps a butcher shop on the corner opposite the scene of the accident, saw Vinette fall and went to his assistance. He didn't examine him.

INTENTION TO CUT WIRE.

Lineman A. Guerin, of the Otonabee Light and Power Co., was working with Vinette on Saturday. It was the intention to reinforce the arm and cut the unnecessary piece of side wire.

Guerin took off the transformer from the pole when it was removed, but neglected to cut off the wire all the way up. Vinette had rubber gloves, but the witness could not tell whether he wore them or not.

Making such repairs as had to be made at the pole was not considered dangerous work.

Thomas Dale, who lives on George street, a few yards from the scene of the accident, heard Vinette fall and ran to his assistance. He felt for the fallen man's pulse, but there was no beat.

ORANGEISM MUST FIGHT THE BATTLES OF PROTESTANTISM

Speaker at Brockville Gathering Declares That the L.O.L. is the Public Voice of Forces of Protestant Canada—National System of Public Schools Favored by Toronto Meeting.

Brockville, July 13.—Brockville never had such a crowd of visitors as assembled here yesterday to participate in the celebration of the 12th of July. It was a monster demonstration, conducted with the greatest enthusiasm, and participated in by an almost solid Ontario East, with large delegations from Toronto, Montreal, and New York State.

The actual number of Orangemen reached over 10,000, with as many more friends and supporters of the wearers of the Orange sash.

The big feature of the day was the "walk," which mobilized in the centre of the town, and to the music of brass and fife and drum bands galore, paraded to St. Lawrence Park, along streets lined by thousands of people. The platform addresses were presided over by James Berney, grand master, of Ontario East.

One of the chief speakers was H. C. Hocken of Toronto, who asserted that Orangemen must take their legitimate position in the public life of Canada as the political arm of the Protestant Church. They must be Protestants before they are partisans of either side of politics, exercising an influence upon the representatives of the people who sit in Parliaments. He advised his hearers to study closely the political movements of the day, and be firm in maintaining the essential Protestant principles of civil and religious liberty, which are inseparably connected with the name of the Orange Association.

"We should conduct," he said in closing, "an active propaganda among Protestants, to convince them of our sincerity, and the necessity for our organization impressing upon them the impending duties and the need of united Protestant action. We must bring before the public of this country the character, aims, principles and history of the papacy. Our threefold program should be to co-operate with the Protestant churches to defend the public school, and to educate the Protestant public."

Toronto, July 13.—In no uncertain voice did the several thousand Orangemen, their wives, and friends, at the exhibition grounds, yesterday, declare in favor of a national school, an imperial policy and the retention of the present coronation oath, when a series of resolutions were unanimously, even clamorously, endorsed.

Particularly vigorous were the remarks of Rev. E. C. Laker, in seconding the first resolution, which was moved by W. D. McPherson, K.C., M.P.P.

"I support it," he declared, "because I believe the public school is the most important institution in our national life. It is the strongest bulwark of all the free institutions we enjoy. But, is the public school safe?"

Cries of "No, no!" "You bet they're not," etc., given with a vim.

"Is there no enemy?" he continued, and was again broken off with—"Now you're talking!" "Sail in!" "Give it to them!"

"He is a false prophet who calls 'peace' when there is no peace!" said Dr. Laker. "Rome is the avowed natural enemy of the public school. There are times when strong words are needed. We must not quarrel with our Roman Catholic brethren. We can speak of Romanism as a political not as a religious organization."

"The public school stood for state education and the state was the only possible, efficient supervisor for such an institution. There were two other possible agencies toward strong, sound national morality — the home and the church; but the public school was the common man's chance. A man might not become himself rich, but his children could, through the knowledge got in these storerooms.

"Where education has been carried on by the church, you find the greatest illiteracy," he said, quoting from statistics, which showed percentages of from 39 to 80 per capita of illiterate beings in districts and countries under church rule."

12,000 Visitors at Wingham.

Wingham, July 13.—The celebration of the 220th anniversary of the Battle of the Boyne was an unqualified success. In spite of the frequent showers of rain, there were over 12,000 visitors in town, over forty stands of color took part on the march. The speakers were: A. H. Musgrove, M.P.P.; Hugh Clark, M.P.P.; Rev. W. Lowe of London, past grand chaplain of Ontario West; Rev. R. Mobbs of Exeter; George Mooney, Ripley; Robert Woods of Dufferin, and others. County Master M. Dane, of Gorrie, presided.

Eighty Lodges In Line.

Stratford, July 13.—Eighty lodges were in line in the procession from the City Hall to Queen's Park. Six special trains assisted the regulars in bringing the Orangemen from Goderich, Palmerston, Centralia, London, Parkhill and intermediate points. Six brass bands assisted the many fife and drum organizations in the musical part of the historic parade.

At Bracebridge.

Bracebridge, July 13.—Ten thousand people were in town to witness the monster Orange celebration yesterday. Lodges from Huntsville, Gravenhurst, Orillia, Midland and surrounding places came in by train and boat.

BRITAIN'S GREATEST AVIATOR KILLED BEFORE BIG CROWD

The Young Officer Who Made the Sensational Return Trip Across English Channel Meets With an Accident in the Air and is Crushed Under His Machine Before Huge Crowd.

Bournemouth, Eng., July 13.—Hon. Charles Stewart Rolls, the famous English aviator, who, on June 2 last, won the honor of being the only man to make a round trip across the English Channel from England to France, was killed yesterday in the aviation meet here.

While flying in a Wright machine in the alighting competition for a prize of $1,250, his aeroplane suddenly turned a somersault, crashed 40 feet to the ground and crushed the aviator to death directly opposite the grand stand.

Almost immediately after the first signs of trouble were noticed the aeroplane turned a complete somersault and then plunged straight down. Rolls attempted to extricate himself, but the drop was too swift. The edge of the machine caught him as the two came to the ground together and fatally crushed him. His limbs were fractured and he died within a few minutes.

Upon investigation, after the accident, however, it was found that the tail of the biplane had broken. The disaster is attributed to a slight fault in the material of the machine, which left the biplane unable to bear the strain of sixty miles an hour speed at which Rolls was flying.

A pathetic sequel occurred late in the afternoon, when Rolls' father and mother, Lord and Lady Llangattock, arrived off Bournemouth in their yacht. As they came ashore they upbraided themselves for being too late to witness the start of their son's flight, which they knew had been set for a certain time. They hurried to a waiting automobile, to rush to the aviation field, in the hope of seeing Capt. Rolls before he descended. There they were met with the news of his death, which they had narrowly avoided witnessing.

DISINCLINATION TO YIELD OBEDIENCE

London, July 13.—A Cape Town letter to The Standard says an unofficial edict has gone forth that on official occasions ladies must curtsey to the Governor-General's lady. The innovation has met with a cool reception, not a few ladies, including wives of Ministers, have appeared before Lady Gladstone, showing by their upright carriage, a strong disinclination to yield obedience to the order.

McLAUGHLIN CALM ON THE SCAFFOLD

Another Murderer Went to His Death Without Showing Any Emotion—Warned People Against the Evil of Drink—Trap Bolt Had to be Hammered Loose.

Special to the Review.

Whitby, July 13.—Archie McLaughlin, who murdered his wife and his two younger children last October at Uxbridge, was hanged in the county jail here at seven o'clock this morning. McLaughlin, while walking from his cell to the scaffold reserved the same self possession which has characterized his behaviour ever since the tragedy.

The rainfall of to-night swelled the wood of the scaffold platform so much that hangman Ellis had to hit several times with a hammer the bolt allowing the trap to fall. The body fell seven and a half feet, the all breaking the neck and causing instant death. Heartbeats were perceptible for eight minutes afterwards. The coroner's jury returned a verdict of death from hanging. The body was buried in the potters' field of the Union cemetery at the instance of friends of the McLaughlin family. McLaughlin, before the execution, made a statement to Rev. W. B. Tige, to the effect that people should remember what drink had done in his case. He also left a statement to be published exclusively in a Toronto paper.

BRONZE LION'S FOR EATON TOMB

New York, July 13.—Two bronze lions, which have their prototype in one of the monarchs of the jungle now in the New York Zoological Park, are soon to be sent to Toronto. They are for the decoration of the Eaton mausoleum in Toronto, and are to be placed one on each side of the entrance to the tomb. The sculptor is Eli Harvey of Washington square, who has devoted his talent for many years to animal sculptures.

COUCHED IN STIFF TERMS

London, July 13.—Under Secretary for the Colonies Seely yesterday announced that the Government intends to communicate with the Dominion Government regarding Canada's attitude in refusing to admit certain British citizens under its new immigration regulations, and it was intimated that the Home Government's queries would be couched in stiff terms.

LOYALTY OF CHINA'S MODERN ARMY

GENERAL YIN-CHANG, MINISTER OF WAR.

MACHINE GUN PLATOON.

DRILLING WITH FIELD GUNS.

NEW MACHINE GUN.

Strong confidence in the loyalty of China's modern army is expressed by the officials of the Board of War and the higher officers at Army Headquarters in Pekin.

China's new army, modern drilled and well equipped, consists of 180,000 men.

At Shanghai and along the river the Chinese have four cruisers and eight torpedo boats under the command of Rear Admiral P. C. Chen, ten new river gunboats and four older ones under command of Rear Admiral Sheng.

The admirals in command of the two flotillas are experienced men whose ability has been demonstrated. The officials of the Board of War have every confidence in them.

FIRE COST THREE LIVES

Child and Two Doctors Perished in Campbellton, N.B.

St. John, N.B., July 13.—The latest report of deaths in the disastrous fire of Monday, which obliterated the thriving lumbering town of Campbellton, is that a child named Doyle was suffocated; that two medical doctors met death.

As a consequence of the fire Dr. Sproule is reported to have been killed by the explosion of gasoline in his auto, and that a man named O'Keefe is missing. This is not certain, for it is hard to get direct accurate news.

Relief is being forwarded to the stricken town by neighboring communities and from this city. In addition to $2,000 voted by St. John, the Provincial Government has given $2,000, and subscriptions will be opened up at various places. One, at Chatham, is headed by Lieut.-Governor Tweedie with $100.

The fire broke out in the Richard's lumber mill about two o'clock in the afternoon, and the waterworks system giving out, by 10 p.m. the town was in ashes, as was also Richardsville, a village a mile distant. The sleepers of the I.C.R. tracks for two or three miles are burned, preventing the running of trains. The I.C.R. total loss is placed at $200,000. Six lumber mills, employing over 2,000 men, are destroyed. Over 100 business houses are in ruins, and their loss is placed at $880,000, with $380,000 insurance.

It is estimated that 4,000 persons are homeless. While it is difficult to make an estimate of loss, both in Campbellton, and in Richardsville, it is thought that it will greatly exceed $2,500,000. In Richardsville there were few buildings other than the mills, and the homes of those who worked therein, but all are now things of the past.

SIR WILFRID AT WINNIPEG MAKES SOME PROMISES

He Says He Hopes to Make an Inroad on Toronto and Winnipeg at Next Election—Discusses Transportation Problems of West.

Winnipeg, July 13.—Whatever depression may have followed the triumph of the Roblin Government at the polls on Monday, there is no apparent discouragement in the ranks of the Liberal party over the defeat.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier has the faculty of drawing a crowd wherever he speaks to the public. Last night he received an almost royal acclaim from a crowd of ten thousand people assembled in the horse show amphitheatre. The place was gaily decorated with flags and bunting.

"After listening to your cordial acclaim," began Sir Wilfrid, "I am forced to ask myself if I am in this, the city of Winnipeg. Perhaps I am standing on the soil of some Grit constituency in the Province of Ontario, or the soil of the old city of Quebec, which I have the honor to represent, or in New Brunswick, or Nova Scotia.

"But, no, this is Winnipeg, and I am here reminded of another city, the city of Toronto. Toronto is one of the finest cities on the continent. The people are cultured, educated and hospitable, but when it comes to election times, Toronto is in the wrong."

"I do not despair of Toronto, and I make bold to say at the next election, we, the Liberals, the Grits, shall make an inroad into that city, and get a few of their seats. There is hope for Toronto. How much more there is for Winnipeg?"

Some Governments had been lucky, others unlucky, he said.

Isaac Campbell, K.C., was chairman; and besides Sir Wilfrid's party, on the platform were Frank Fowler, E. L. Cash, M.P., Hon. Senator Watson and Ald. Wilton.

Mr. Campbell predicted that Sir Wilfrid's trip would disclose a new world to the Premier from that seen on his last trip across the continent.

"Liberalism did not die yesterday," said Hon. William Pugsley. (Tremendous applause.) He complimented them on the election of C. Hart Green (Liberal candidate in North Winnipeg), and claimed that the votes had not been "well enough mixed," and predicted that some building up would have to be done in the future.

"These three prairie provinces will always hold a commanding position in this country," he said. There was an opportunity for great development of waterways. "We have made in St. Andrew's lock a great improvement. It is possible for steamers leaving your city to pass down the Red River, through the locks, and on to Lake Winnipeg, to all points on east inland waters," he went on.

"I am one of those who believe that with a reasonable expenditure of money it will be possible to create a great system of inland navigation, extending from the City of Edmonton to within 100 miles of the foothills of the Rocky Mountains, right down over 1,300 miles to this great city."

He looked forward to Winnipeg receiving electric power from Point Dubois on the Winnipeg River, and he hoped that improvements would be made to the Nelson River to enable boats from Winnipeg to carry their cargoes to tide water on Hudson Bay.

He criticized R. L. Borden's strictures upon his Department, and challenged him to lay his charges before Parliament.

Sir Wilfrid defended the position he had taken owing to the inability of the three provinces to agree. He did not blame the Provincial Premiers for seeking to get all possible for their provinces, but agreement was a necessary antecedent to any action by the imperial authorities. He resented Hon. Mr. Roblin's blood-and-thunder speeches, and claimed that, if any discourtesy had been committed, it was not on his part. If Manitoba continued to remain the "postage stamp province" it has been, it would be no fault of his.

The Liberal Government had brought luck to Canada. To the late Sir John A. Macdonald, he gave credit for building the Canadian Pacific Railway, although he thought some of the terms were unwise, but that railway having been built, it failed in its purpose, because there was no population tributary to the line.

"That problem of immigration has been settled," said Sir Wilfrid, "and I am glad to say that the initiator of that policy is the son of Monitoba, Hon. Clifford Sifton. (Cheers.)

The Prime Minister said that "the value of the product of the farmer is the selling price in the world's market, less the cost of transportation." Up till 1896 the west had been at the mercy of the C.P.R. in respect to rates, the original contract not giving Parliament any control whatever over traffic charges. This defect had been overcome, when the C.P.R. accepted the condition of the Crow's Nest Railway subsidy, and made a substantial reduction on staple articles. The cost of sending wheat from Brandon to Liverpool, from over 26 cents a bushel, had been reduced to 16 1-4 cents.

"The cost of transportation must still be decreased," said Sir Wilfrid. "It is ten cents a bushel less than it was 14 years ago, but it is still to be decreased, and we will work at it."

INSPECTOR ON SCENE

Special to the Review.

Toronto, July 13.—The Provincial Board of Health to-day decided to send Acting Inspector Bell on a tour of summer resorts to see that health laws are complied with. Mr. W. Moore, of Peterborough, complained that Stony Lake was being polluted by some hotels.

SHOOTING AFFAIR IN MANITOBA

Swan Lake, Man., July 13.—As a result of a shooting affray here early yesterday morning, two men were seriously wounded, and another was crippled in the arm.

George Kilbourne and Fred Bowlerwell were resting after lunch when Fred Roskelly appeared in their room. He and Bowlerwell quarrelled. Roskelly was ejected, but returned later on with Meredith Peters. They attacked the door, but were met with a fusilade of shots from Bowlerwell, who remained inside. Roskelly received a bullet in his abdomen and grave fears for his recovery are now entertained. Peters was shot in the thigh, and an operation was necessary to save his limb. In some mysterious manner Kilbourne was shot in the arm, shattering it above the elbow. Bowlerwell is under arrest.

DO NOT LIKE FORM OF OATH

London, July 13.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—Preaching in Perth, Rev. Robert Johnston of Montreal, referring to the King's declaration, said that Canada would heartily sympathize with the protest of the Scotch churches against the proposed new form. It was wholly misinterpreting the agitation to substitute for a denial of Roman Catholic doctrine a declaration asserting allegience to one particular denomination of the Protestant church.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 13, 1910.

A REMINDER

WE WOULD STILL REMIND OUR STILL AUTHORITIES THAT THE GARBAGE STILL STINKETH IN THE STILL BACK YARD, THE STILLNESS ONLY BROKEN BY THE BUZZ OF THE FLY, IN THEIR GLAD RE-UNION UNDISTURBED.

A WORD OF SYMPATHY

Our hands are extended in sympathy to Campbellton, N.B. There there are smouldering ruins, buried hopes, the sorrow and desolation of four thousand souls. There the fire has devastated, and almost the entire population is homeless. Many years' savings are wiped out, many a humble home destroyed. May they rise Phoenix like from their ashes, and move out from their sorrow and take heart again.

UNDECEIVED

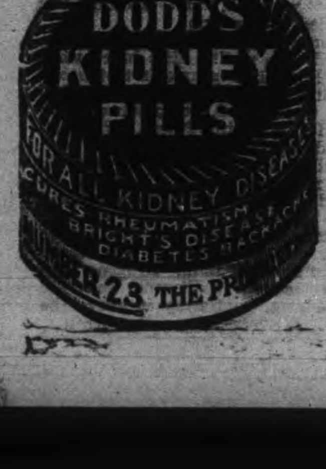
Again we are undeceived. Eight students in an air-tight box, five feet long, five feet wide and seven feet high, breathed for three-quarters of an hour in a London, England, hospital, their own expired air, over and over again. A stuffy theatre contains one-thirtieth of one per cent. of carbonic gas. The little glass cage in which they were confined contained four per cent. This proves, as Professor Hill, who conducted the experiment, says, that the carbonic acid present in a stuffy, overcrowded, and ill-ventilated room is not the cause of the unpleasant symptoms we formerly associated with these conditions. It is the moisture, high temperature, and stagnation of the air which gives us the headache and dullness.

This will be of comfort to those who have bed rooms that are small and workshops that are narrow. But it's the fresh air that gives the appetite, the flush of health and the good cheer to us all, notwithstanding.

LIFE'S ORDINARIES

James J. Jeffries has gone back to his farm. Jack Johnson will ride in the band wagon to be cheered, gaped on and wondered at, because of the punch that he has in him. Jeffries' friends have deserted him. That's the way of the world. It's nice to be a winner in politics. To have one's picture in the paper. To hear the band play, to hear the crowds shout. But some one must lose. It is inspiring to have a great church, a splendid choir and a rich congregation, yet some one must preach to the poor, to the illiterate. It is great to be unusual and noticed. To have shaggy hair and bumps on the brow. But the work of village, city, of the province, of the Dominion, of the Empire, and the world itself, is done by the average man. It isn't the piano player who can read Liszt that gives the world the most pleasure, but the man or woman who can give us music for our ordinary minds. It isn't Madame Melba Patti or Mme. Schumann-Heink that we are indebted to for the song. It is the willing voice to sing for us ordinary songs. Few of us are in the Calcium. Most of us appear ordinary. We live ordinary lives, make ordinary pay, dwell in ordinary homes, have ordinary hopes, ordinary friends, ordinary disappointments and die ordinary deaths, and are buried in an ordinary way, and leave an ordinary gap.

But we need not. There are great things in store for all of us if we only will. There is a judgeship for the man who is contented with being a lawyer, a managership to the one who is satisfied with being a clerk, being a surveyor for the one who is pleased that he can hold the line or rod. Nature has good crops for the farmer who seems satisfied with weeds. In every walk of life she has unusual prizes for the one who thinks it worth while, and who works. But most of us are too lazy. We appear ordinary lives and are one of the mob, not because we have to be, but because we are unwilling to pay the price of success. This price is hard work. There are no exceptions anywhere in God's universe, for being a genius merely means an infinite capacity for work.



CAMPAIGN NEEDED

What is the matter with our esteemed friend the Toronto News? On Monday, July 11th, in its two columns of editorials there was no touch of politics. This is surely an oversight or a tacit acknowledgement that it is too hot to be bothered with political affairs. One editorial on the House Habit, was worth comment. The News says:—

"A representative of the News has been down a coal mine in Nova Scotia and seen a stable full of horses employed in hauling miniature tram cars along subterranean galleries. The animals cannot stand the want of sunlight or first-hand air for more than a year or two at a time. Then they are brought to the surface and turned loose in the open fields to recuperate. Light and fresh air are the chief curative agencies in the physical universe. They are essential to human as well as to animal health. The girl who is over-careful of her complexion might better have a few freckles than tuberculosis. It is not necessary to stand hatless at noonday until one gets a sunstroke, but it is important that we break the house habit in the summertime. Sleep on the verandah, if you will, but, in any case, get out-of-doors and stay there as much as you can until the cold weather returns."

While writing on fresh air the News should have taken a stand on clothes. It broke up the gambling ring in Toronto. It stopped the sale of cocaine. We call upon it to commence a campaign against the wearing of so many clothes in hot weather.

"NOW THEN SMITH"

Smith is a common name, but newspaper readers will perhaps remember how that when the terrible earthquake took place in Messina on that momentuous December morning in 1908, there was a British ship AFONMEN lying in the harbor. Smith and a man named Reed, second mate, climbed up a rope leading to a high window in a tottering wall and rescued a number of children and three grown-up people. They have each been decorated with a silver medal, the Albert Medal, the Victoria Cross of civil life, King George pinning the decorations on their breast one day last month. "Now them Smith," said the captain, and up the rope he went, up a tottering high wall. Well it's done. The feat was cabled around the world and Smith was remembered and his friend Reed, who went up the rope after him. The medal is fine. The children can put it in the case and show it to their admiring friends. It will be handed to posterity.

But rough and ungrateful as the thought may at first appear to be, a good cash donation from the British Government would have helped Smith much more than a silver medal. Men do not do brave deeds for money. That is the last thing in the world, but the deed done, a cash donation, beats a hand shake, a band, a torch light procession and a lot of hot air.

"Now then Smith," and Smith went up the rope saved a number of lives at the great risk of his own. And he got a medal.

"Hurray—Hurray."

A man is winning a mile race. He also gets a medal.

THE KNIGHTS OF PYTHIAS

The Knights of Pythias are welcome. The spirit of their convention is in harmony with the age. They are a secret society. But their assistance in the hour of despair while not advertized in detail, in bulk reveals the hand of a great benefacting angel. During the year 1909 the subordinate lodges of the K. of P. expended $1,710,238.07. This is a great sum. No one can estimate the anxiety it has dispelled, the courage it has implanted and the good it has done. They deserve success and they are getting what they deserve.

MR. PUGSLEY

Mr. Borden has treated with full and convincing detail two very bad performances of Mr. Pugsley.

1. The Conservative minority in the Public Accounts Committee investigated last session the payment of some $78,600 to a real estate company which rents two buildings in Ottawa to the Government. One item was $9,465 for lighting the two buildings. The Conservatives proved that if the government had bought the electric lighting in the ordinary way of business it would have paid only $5,040. Thus there was a rake-off of $4,425. The case was so clear that the committee unanimously passed a resolution condemning the transaction.

2. The famous Sawdust Wharf case. Mr. Borden explained fully how Mr. Pugsley paid $5,000 for a ruinous wharf in a decaying village, which the heelers had just bought for $700. After explaining that the sale was effected in the heat of the election and was concealed, he continued:—"The purchase money was drawn by Mr. Murray in five and ten dollar bills. Assuming that they were equally divided, that means 750 bills which this active business man received and carried to his house. He failed to give any satisfactory or reasonable explanation as to his disposal of these. He says that he paid a certain sum, the amount of which he cannot remember, to a Mr. Robertson.

JULY 12TH

King William had little idea that when he crossed the Boyne he was going to be the cause of so much music, so much enthusiasm, the wearing of so much orange and blue. He little dreamed that he was immortalizing himself in the hearts of a host. Yesterday was the 220th aniversary of this Boyne affair, and all over the land there suddenly sprung to view badges, sashes, banners, decorations of loyalty to the cause. In villages and towns, in cities indoors and out sounded the fife, resounded the rattle of the snare or boom of the drum. It rained. Rain has little effect on the Orangemen on July 12. Thousands paraded in Toronto and Lindsay and Campbellford. There were 12,000 visitors in Lindsay, and for the hour it put on Yonge street, or Broadway jostle to holiday tunes and martial airs.

CENSUS TAKING IN CHINA.

From the North China Herald.

Two magistrates of Soochow, China, saw trouble two weeks ago in the town to the south of Soochow. The disturbances were caused by the census takers. The country people say that their names are being taken for the building of the new railways, that each cross tie requires that a name be placed beneath it, and the person whose name is thus used dies at once. In one town five people are said to have died immediately after their names were taken. The mob forced one unfortunate magistrate to issue a guarantee, stamped with his official seal that no one in this village would die within ten years.

A HARLEM TRAGEDY

By O. HENRY.

[Copyright, 1906, by S. S. McClure Co.]

HARLEM.

Mrs. Fink has dropped into Mrs. Cassidy's flat, one flight below.

"Ain't it a beaut?" said Mrs. Cassidy.

She turned her face proudly for her friend Mrs. Fink to see. One eye was nearly closed, with a great greenish purple bruise around it. Her lip was cut and bleeding a little, and there were red finger marks on each side of her neck.

"My husband wouldn't ever think of doing that to me," said Mrs. Fink, concealing her envy.

"I wouldn't have a man," declared Mrs. Cassidy, "that didn't beat me up at least once a week. Shows he thinks something of you. Say, but that last dose Jack gave me wasn't no homeopathic one! I can see stars yet. But he'll be the sweetest man in town for the rest of the week to make up for it. This eye is good for theater tickets and a silk shirt waist at the very least."

"I should hope," said Mrs. Fink, assuming complacency, "that Mr. Fink is too much of a gentleman ever to raise his hand against me."

"Oh, go on, Maggie!" said Mrs. Cassidy, laughing and applying witch hazel. "You're only jealous. Your old man is too frapped and slow to ever give you a punch. He just sits down and practices physical culture with a newspaper when he comes home. Now, ain't that the truth?"

"Mr. Fink certainly peruses of the papers when he comes home," acknowledged Mrs. Fink, with a toss of her head, "but he certainly don't ever make no Steve O'Donnell out of me just to amuse himself—that's a sure thing."

Mrs. Cassidy laughed the contented laugh of the guarded and happy matron. With the air of Cornelia exhibiting her jewels she drew down the collar of her kimono and revealed another treasured bruise, maroon colored, edged with olive and orange, a bruise now nearly well, but still to memory dear.

Mrs. Fink capitulated. The formal light in her eye softened to envious admiration. She and Mrs. Cassidy had been chums in the downtown paper box factory before they had married, one year before. Now she and her man occupied the flat above Mame and her man. Therefore she could not put on airs with Mame.

"Don't it hurt when he soaks you?" asked Mrs. Fink curiously.

"Hurt!" Mrs. Cassidy gave a soprano scream of delight. "Well, say, did you ever have a brick house fall on you? Well, that's just the way it feels—just like when they're digging you out of the ruins. Jack's got a left that spells two matinees and a new pair of Oxfords—and his right! Well, it takes a trip to Coney and six pairs of openwork, silk lisle threads to make that good."

"But what does he beat you for?" inquired Mrs. Fink, with wide open eyes.

"Silly!" said Mrs. Cassidy indulgently. "Why, because he's full. It's generally on Saturday nights."

"But what cause do you give him?" persisted the seeker after knowledge.

"Why, didn't I marry him? Jack comes in tanked up, and I'm here, ain't I? Who else has he got a right to beat? I'd just like to catch him once beating anybody else! Sometimes it's because supper ain't ready, and sometimes it's because it is. Jack ain't particular about causes. He just lushes till he remembers he's married, and then he makes for home and does me up. Saturday nights I just move the furniture with sharp corners out of the way, so I won't cut my head when he gets his work in. He's got a left swing that jars you. Sometimes I take the count in the first round, but when I feel like having a good time during the week or want some new rags I come up again for more punishment. That's what I done last night. Jack knows I've been wanting a black silk waist for a month, and I didn't think just one black eye would bring it. Tell you what, Mag, I'll bet you the ice cream he brings it tonight."

Mrs. Fink was thinking deeply.

"My Mart," she said, "never hit me a lick in his life. It's just like you said, Mame; he comes in grouchy and ain't got a word to say. He never takes me out anywhere. He's a chair warmer at home for fair. He buys me things, but he looks so glum about it that I never appreciate 'em."

Mrs. Cassidy slipped an arm around her chum.

"You poor thing!" she said. "But everybody can't have a husband like Jack. Marriage wouldn't be no failure if they was all like him. These discontented wives you hear about—what they need is a man to come home and kick their slats in once a week and then make it up in kisses and chocolate creams. That'd give 'em some interest in life. What I want is a masterful man that slugs you when he's jagged and hugs you when he ain't jagged. Preserve me from the man that ain't got the sand to do neither!"

Mrs. Fink sighed.

The hallways were suddenly filled with sound. The door flew open at the kick of Mr. Cassidy. His arms were occupied with bundles. Mame flew and hung about his neck. Her sound eye sparkled with the love light that shines in the eye of the Maori maid when she recovers consciousness in the hut of the wooer who has stunned and dragged her there.

"Hello, old girl!" shouted Mr. Cassidy. He shed his bundles and lifted her off her feet in a mighty hug. "I got tickets for Barnum & Bailey's, and if you'll bust the string of one of them bundles I guess you'll find that silk waist. Why, good evening, Mrs. Fink! I didn't see you at first. How's old Mart coming along?"

"He's very well, Mr. Cassidy, thanks," said Mrs. Fink. "I must be going along up now. Mart 'll be home for supper soon. I'll bring you down that pattern you wanted tomorrow, Mame."

Mrs. Fink went up to her flat and had a little cry. It was a meaningless cry, the kind of cry that only a woman knows about, a cry from no particular cause, altogether an absurd cry—the most transient and the most hopeless cry in the repertory of grief. Why had Martin never thrashed her? He was as big and strong as Jack Cassidy. Did he not care for her at all? He never quarreled. He came home and lounged about, silent, glum, idle. He was a fairly good provider, but he ignored the spices of life.

Mrs. Fink's ship of dreams was becalmed. Her captain ranged between plum duff and his hammock. If only he would shiver his timbers or stamp his foot on the quarter deck now and then! And she had thought to sail so merrily, touching at ports in the Delectable isles! But now, to vary the figure, she was ready to throw up the sponge, tired out, without a scratch to show for all those tame rounds with her sparring partner. For one moment she almost hated Mame—Mame, with her cuts and bruises, her salve of presents and kisses, her stormy voyage with her fighting, brutal, loving mate.

Mr. Fink came home at 7. He was permeated with the curse of domesticity. Beyond the portals of his cozy home he cared not to roam, to roam. He was the man who had caught the street car, the anaconda that had swallowed its prey, the tree that lay as it had fallen.

"Like the supper, Mart?" asked Mrs. Fink, who had striven over it.

"M-m-m-yep," grunted Mr. Fink.

After supper he gathered his newspapers to read. He sat in his stockinged feet.

Arise, some new Dante, and sing me the befitting corner of perdition for the man who sitteth in the house in his stockinged feet! Sisters of patience who by reason of ties or duty have endured it in silk, yarn, cotton, lisle thread or woolen—does not the new canto belong?

The next day was Labor day. The occupations of Mr. Cassidy and Mr. Fink ceased for one passage of the sun. Labor, triumphant, would parade and otherwise disport itself.

Mrs. Fink took Mrs. Cassidy's pattern down early. Mame had on her new silk waist. Even her damaged eye managed to emit a holiday gleam. Jack was fruitfully penitent, and there was a hilarious scheme for the day afoot, with parks and picnics and Pilsener in it.

A rising, indignant jealousy seized Mrs. Fink as she returned to her flat above. Oh, happy Mame, with her bruises and her quick following balm! But was Mame to have a monopoly of happiness? Surely Martin Fink was as good a man as Jack Cassidy. Was his wife to go always unbelabored and uncaressed? A sudden, brilliant, breathless idea came to Mrs. Fink. She would show Mame that there were husbands as able to use their fists and perhaps to be as tender afterward as any Jack.

The holiday promised to be a nominal one with the Finks. Mrs. Fink had the stationary washtubs in the kitchen filled with a two weeks' wash that had been soaking overnight. Mr. Fink sat in his stockinged feet reading a newspaper. Thus Labor day presaged to speed.

Jealousy surged high in Mrs. Fink's heart, and higher still surged an audacious resolve. If her man would not strike her—if he would not so far prove his manhood, his prerogative and his interest in conjugal affairs, he must be prompted to his duty.

Mr. Fink lit his pipe and peacefully rubbed an ankle with a stockinged toe. He reposed in the state of matrimony like a lump of unblended suet in a pudding. This was his level Elysium—to sit at ease vicariously girdling the world in print amid the wifely splashing of suds and the agreeable smells of breakfast dishes departed and dinner ones to come. Many ideas were far from his mind, but the furthest one was the thought of beating his wife.

Mrs. Fink turned on the hot water and set the washboards in the suds. Up from the flat below came the gay laugh of Mrs. Cassidy. It sounded like a taunt, a flaunting of her own happiness in the face of the unslugged bride above. Now was Mrs. Fink's time.

Suddenly she turned like a fury upon the man reading.

"You lazy loafer!" she cried. "Must I work my arms off washing and toiling for the ugly likes of you? Are you a man, or are you a kitchen hound?"

Mr. Fink dropped his paper, motionless from surprise. She feared that he would not strike—that the provocation had been insufficient. She leaped at him and struck him fiercely in the face with her clinched hand. In that instant she felt a thrill of love for him such as she had not felt for many a day. Rise up, Martin Fink, and come into your kingdom! Oh, she must feel the weight of his hand now just to show that he cared—just to show that he cared!

Mr. Fink sprang to his feet. Maggie caught him again on the jaw with a wide swing of her other hand. She closed her eyes in that fearful, blissful moment before his blow should come. She whispered his name to herself. She leaned to the expected shock, hungry for it.

In the flat below Mr. Cassidy, with a shamed and contrite face, was powdering Mame's eye in preparation for their junket. From the flat above came the sound of a woman's voice, high raised, a bumping, a stumbling and a shuffling, a chair overturned—unmistakable sounds of domestic conflict.

"Mart and Mag scrapping?" postulated Mr. Cassidy. "Didn't know they ever indulged. Shall I trot up and see if they need a sponge holder?"

One of Mrs. Cassidy's eyes sparkled like a diamond. The other twinkled at least like paste.

"Oh, oh," she said softly and without apparent meaning, in the feminine ejaculatory manner, "I wonder if—I wonder if—wait, Jack, till I go up and see!"

Up the stairs she sped. As her foot struck the hallway above out from the kitchen door of her flat wildly flounced Mrs. Fink.

"Oh, Maggie," cried Mrs. Cassidy in a delighted whisper, "did he? Oh, did he?"

Mrs. Fink ran and laid her face upon her chum's shoulder and sobbed hopelessly.

Mrs. Cassidy took Maggie's face between her hands and lifted it gently. Tear stained it was, flushing and paling, but its velvety, pink and white, becomingly freckled surface was unscratched, unbruised, unmarred by the recreant fist of Mr. Fink.

"Tell me, Maggie," pleaded Mame, "or I'll go in there and find out. What was it? Did he hurt you? What did he do?"

Mrs. Fink's face went down again despairingly on the bosom of her friend.

"For Gawd's sake, don't open that door, Mame!" she sobbed. "And don't ever tell nobody—keep it under your hat. He—he never touched me, and—he's—oh, Gawd—he's washin' the clothes—he's washin' the clothes!"

Tobacco Smoke.

The body is a factory of poisons, says a big pathologist. These poisons are constantly being poured out at the rate of eight pounds a day. One-third of all these poisonous excreta passes through the lungs in the form of steam or vapor. The lungs within their comparatively small compass contain a folded surface of about 1,600 square feet, in area equal to the floor of a room forty feet square. It is through this surface that the oxygen is drawn into the body and the poisonous carbon dioxide thrown off. Smoke in reality is nothing more or less than a cloud of fine carbon dust—soot. And when this dust comes into contact with the surface of the lungs it forms a thin coating which obstructs the entrance of oxygen laden air as well as the exit of the poisonous outbreathings. The smoker or he who inhales smoke either directly or by sitting in a smoke laden atmosphere is both starved and poisoned—starved for oxygen, the most important of all the foods, and poisoned by his own excreted waste.—Chicago Tribune.

SUDDEN DEATH

To Miss Marion Harper, eldest daughter of Mr. J. A. Harper, George street, death came with shocking suddeness early last evening.

The young lady was visiting Mrs. Pilling, on Bolivar street, her parents being in Hastings and Lindsay for a visit, and on leaving the house after supper she was seen to stagger and fall to the sidewalk. She was at once carried into the house, where she breathed her last a few minutes later, before medical aid could reach her.

A deep gash was inflicted on the right temple, presumably caused by contact with the edge of the sidewalk. The young lady was wearing a pair of spectacles at the time and this may also have caused the wound, but death was likely caused by a weakness of the heart.

Dr. McCulloch, who was called, was not willing to make any statement regarding the cause of death.

The deceased's father and mother were notified by telephone of the sad occurrence.

The funeral will be held from the family residence, George street, on Thursday afternoon July 14th, at 3 o'clock to Little Lake cemetery.

HORSE TOSSED OVER A FENCE

And Buggy Wrecked, But Driver Escaped—Accident at G.T.R. Crossing in Otonabee—Struck by Belleville Express.

Mr. Fred Milliken, of this city, had a sensational escape from death in an accident at a G.T.R. railway crossing last night about 9 o'clock by the G.T.R. express from Belleville.

He was driving a horse belonging to Mr. R. Ggbibs, the Water street liveryman, when the accident occurred about four miles from the city.

HORSE UNMANAGEABLE.

The horse, which became unmanageable, was endeavoring to cross the track when the engine struck it and tossed it over a fence into a culvert. The buggy was splintered, but Mr. Milliken was fortunate enough to escape with nothing but a slight abrasion on the forehead.

HEARD TRAIN WHISTLE.

Mr. Milliken says he distinctly heard the train whistle and attaches no blame to the engine driver.

He tried to rein in the horse, but the animal couldn't be restrained and kept right on until it was struck by the train.

THOUGHT HE WAS KILLED.

After the accident the train was brought to a standstill and an investigation took place by the train crew, and passengers, who feared the man had been killed.

Dr. Asa Walmsley, the local osteopathic physician was among those on the train. He says Mr. Milliken's escape was miraculous.

The horse is severely injured and is in charge of a farmer who lives near the railway crossing.

IMPRESSIVE CELEBRATION BY LOYAL ORANGE LODGES

Procession at Lindsay, Was Three Miles in Length and the Number of Orangemen and Their Friends, in the Town, Was in the Neighborhood of Fifteen Thousand--Accession Oath Referred to in Afternoon Addresses.

The monstrous procession was easily the feature of the celebration of the 220th anniversary of the battle of the Boyne, at Lindsay yesterday, when nearly eighty lodges from the counties of Victoria, East and West Peterborough, East and West Durham, Northumberland and Haliburton were represented. The procession was three miles in length, and took one hour to pass. As the last lodge left Victoria Park, the marshal and the busses, which the speakers occupied, arrived there, after having traversed the long route which had been mapped out.

Of course it rained, but not all the time, and occasionally the sun would shine and then cease operations to allow of more moisture. However, up to yesterday it had never rained hard enough to stop the annual walk, wherever it was being held, and J. Pluvon this occasion, while he assumed a very threatening attitude, put on the brakes, while the mighty organization showed emphatically that the Orange Order is a growing one and not otherwise, as it has been stated.

BIG CONTRACT.

Lindsay had a big contract to handle yesterday, and the town more than made good. The number of visitors reached around the fifteen thousand mark. From early morning to noon regular and special trains, all double-headers, and many of from eight to twelve coaches, brought in the Orangemen and their friends, and the stations at Lindsay never presented a more busy scene. But it was late in the afternoon and in the early evening that the immensity of the gathering was more noticeable. Train after train left, but the crowd was still there, and it was not until the Toronto flyer left at 9.30 that the town reached its normal again.

Splendid order had been kept during the day, despite the adverse conditions.

MET ALL TRAINS.

A reception committee and the Citizens' Band of Lindsay met all trains and escorted the visiting lodges to the curling rink, where colors were stacked and other paraphernalia put away till needed. The decorations, put up by Mr. A. Kingscote, of this city, were in evidence everywhere. Conspicuous amongst these were banners with the mottos of the order.

At almost every corner stood a refreshment booth, and these, with extra help at the hotels and private houses, were able to meet the demands made in a very satisfactory degree. While the noon hour saw a big rush for meals, the situation was alleviated in a short time and there was no excuse for anybody going hungry.

PROCESSION STARTS.

At 1.30 the different lodges began to muster at Victoria Park, and at two o'clock the procession was started. The line of march from the park to Kent street, to Albert, south to Russell, west to William, south to Glenelg, east to Mill, north to Russell, west to Lindsay, north to Kent, west to Cambridge, north to Bond, west to Albert, south to Wellington, east to Victoria avenue, and then to the park.

THE PROCESSION.

The procession was headed by Mr. Wm. Warren, county director of ceremonies, and Grand Marshal of the Parade J. W. Elliott, Past Master of Victoria County and John Wilson, of Durham. Then followed the speakers of the day and a number of ladies. Next came Reeve G. A. Jordan, W.M. of L.O.L. No. 557, Lindsay, and chairman of the General Committee, and Major McKay, of Cobourg.

RAIN.

Unfortunately, the programme at the park at the conclusion of the procession was cut short as the rain commenced to come down in torrents. The only speakers were, Reeve Jordon, who had words of welcome to the Orange- and their friends, and Rev. A. H. Brace, of Cobourg, Rev. Mr. Barber, of Bobcaygeon and Rev. G. R. Welsh, of Lindsay. Other notable speakers were on the platform.

Rev. Mr. Creighton, of Lindsay, opened the proceedings with prayer and Rev. Mr. Brace spoke first.

He brought warm greetings from Cobourg and extended an invitation to the order to hold its next celebration in that town.

ALL OVER CANADA.

The speaker remarked on the jubilations and rejoicings that were taking place all over Canada on this, the 220th anniversary of the Battle of the Boyne, and then launched forth on the subject of the accession oath; which King George is going to take. "When the oath was formulated in the Bill of Rights," said Rev. Mr. Brace, "a provision was made that no papist should ascend the throne of England." There was conspiracy going on then against the throne, and King James, in Ireland, was conspiring to cross the seas to take the English throne, but William of Orange, discovered the conspiracy and took his army against the King and drove him back. The throne, Protestantism and an open Bible were at stake.

"ROME NEVER CHANGES."

"What is going on to-day?" asked the speaker. Rome prides herself that she never changes, but this is not true. We would have no controversy with her if she were not political. The Roman Catholics of this country never had any better friends than the Orangemen and the feeling will still exist, if Rome will keep her hands off the Government. When she does interfere, we say, "keep your hands off, we are free and will not be governed by a king who is under the power of Rome.

TO CHANGE THE OATH.

She has ventured into a conspiracy Thirty thousand have signed against the changing of the oath and 600,000 unsigned names are ready, to say that the oath must not be changed. King George is willing to take the same oath as his father did. Rev. Mr. Brace concluded with the advice to the Orangemen to be alert.

REV. MR. BARBER.

Rev. Mr. Barber during his short address, admonished the Orangemen to think well of their duty, during the next twelve months. Members should not only think of the annual celebra-

"GENE" HURTUBISE IS HOME FROM WESTERN CANADA

After a residence of two months and a half in Western Canada, Mr. Eugene Hurtubise has returned to Peterborough.

"Gene" was employed as mechanical fitter at the stone quarries of Quinlan and Carter, Glenbow, Saskatchewan.

He a'so visited Medicine Hat, Winnipeg, Calgary and Edmonton and saw several boys from Peterborough, among them Bill Crowley and Harry Burridge, catcher for the Edmonton ball team. "Gene," who arrived in the city this morning, was accompanied as far as Toronto by Burridge. Burridge's arm went back on him some weeks ago but it was some time before he could get the Edmonton club to release him for the balance of the season.

Crowley and Jack McFadden, another Peterborough boy, figured conspicuously on a Calgary ball team in a recent game against a small town near Calgary. Crowley pitched and the other side certainly batted, for pretty nearly every ball that Crowley tossed was hit for a home run. It was another case of the pitcher going to the box once too often.

The reports of the great harm done to the crops through want of rain are not exaggerated, Mr. Hurtubise says, and south Edmonton in Alberta, conditions are alarming. The prairie lands are so dry that they are cracked and backed for miles.

In answer to a query if he had done any wrestling in the west, Gene stated he hadn't seen a mat for over a year.

AL KAUFMANN NEXT ON LIST

Chicago, Ill., July 12.—Al. Kaufmann is the white man's hope, according to champion Jack Johnson. "Al. Kauffman is the next man in the world at 45 rounds," Johnson declared, "and I would have to do him up in the first few rounds in order to be able to handle him. You can talk all about the other fighters, but I have been boxing with Kaufmann for some time and I know that he's got the punch and the nerve back of it. Naturally, I think I can beat him but I'd rather go against Jeffries any day in the week." Johnson took a spin down town in his auto early to-day and incidentally deposited $100,000 in a bank.

Patents.

The Patent Office issued 6,395 patents in the fiscal year 1909. Of this number 903 were granted to Canadian citizens, and 72 per cent. of the whole issue to citizens of the United States. Besides those pictured, other provinces of the Dominion obtained the following patents: Saskatchewan 32, Alberta 28, Nova Scotia 24, New Brunswick 18, Yukon 4, and Prince Edward Island 3. The principal foreign countries to whose citizens patents were granted were: United States 4,602, Great Britain 346, Germany 215, France 59, Australia 58, Sweden 40, New Zealand 36, Austria 33, Transvaal 12. The ratio of population to each patent granted shows that Ontario secured one patent to every 4,769 residents; Quebec, one to every 8,575; British Columbia, one to every 5,095; Manitoba, one to every 5,535; while in New Brunswick the ratio was one to 18,746; Nova Scotia, one to 19,391, and Prince Edward Island, one to every 33,668. The total revenue of the Patent Office for the fiscal year was $176,692.05.

Strong on Conversation.

The Winnipeg city fathers followed with the closest interest Jim Conmee's legislation at Ottawa and even had representatives at Parliament Hill to see that the city's power privileges on the Winnipeg River were not interfered with. When word came that the bill was killed, one of the City Council framed a telegram to be sent to Hon. Clifford Sifton, congratulating him on his stand. This particular member, while a good councillor, like a good many Western oldtimers did not have educational opportunities in his youth. He had the telegram addressed, "Hon. Clifford Sifton, chairman of the conversation committee, Ottawa." A newspaperman, however, pointed out that there was a slight difference between "conversation" and "conservation," and the telegram was changed in time.

USED GEORGIAN ROUTE

CHAMPLAIN WENT OVER THE PROJECTED CANAL.

When the Great Explorer Started Inland He Chose For His Journey to the West the Ottawa River, Lake Nipissing and Down the French Into Georgian Bay—The Nipissings Were Superstitious Indians.

The first governor of Canada to pass beneath the bold cliff on which now stands the federal capitol, to navigate the Great Lakes and traverse what is to-day the fair Province of Ontario, was Samuel de Champlain, "the crusader, the romance-loving explorer, the curious knowledge-seeking traveler, the practical navigator." Champlain's first journey to the West was made, not by way of the Upper St. Lawrence River, the great waterway of the present time, but up the Ottawa, across Lake Nipissing and down the French River into the Georgian Bay. This route, it is claimed, will be the greater waterway of the future, when made available by the construction of the Georgian Bay Canal. The Government engineers, in making the surveys for this proposed gigantic work, practically followed in the footsteps of Champlain.

On his first trip up the Ottawa, made in the early summer of 1613, Champlain did not proceed much beyond the point where the Coulonge River, flowing down from the north through what is now the County of Pontiac, joins the Ottawa a short distance above the Calumet Islands. He had heard of the Great Lakes, the inland "seas of sweet water," and of the Lake of the Nipissings, but at the Indian settlement reached on the Upper Ottawa guides could not be procured to lead him westward. In consequence the journey westward had to be abandoned, and Champlain returned to Quebec.

Two years later the expedition was renewed, and this time carried out successfully. It was midsummer when Champlain, accompanied by twelve Frenchmen and a small band of Indians, set out from Montreal in canoes on his extended tour into the interior of Canada. The journey was one of toil and hardship. All day they paddled up the river or carried their canoes and baggage over the rough portages at points where rapids and cataracts made navigation impossible —at the Long Sault above Carillon, at the Chaudiere opposite Ottawa city, at the Chats, the Calumets and the many other points where the fickle river suddenly changes its placid course into a raging torrent. "It would be hard to tell you," wrote Champlain in a letter to a friend, "how tired I was with paddling all day, with all my strength, among the Indians; wading the rivers a hundred times and more, through the mud and over the sharp rocks that cut my feet; carrying the canoe and luggage through the woods to avoid the rapids and frightful cataracts half starved all the while, for we had nothing to eat but a little sagamite, a sort of porridge of water and pounded maize (Indian corn), of which they give us a very small allowance every morning and night."

At Mattawa a river flows into the Ottawa from the west. This was followed until it dwindled to a stream too small to float canoes; and then the portage was taken that brought them to the shores of Lake Nipissing. Here dwelt a small nation whose name the lake now bears, a people so beset with demons and given over to superstitions that the Jesuit missionaries called them "The Sorcerers." Crossing the lake to its outlet their canoes now glided swiftly down the French River. The ten gluttonous Indians, having by this time devoured all the provisions, hunger became pressing, and the party landed from time to time to gather raspberries and blueberries. While collecting their dinner one day from the bushes they suddenly came upon a band of three hundred Indians, also engaged in gathering blueberries which they dried in the sun for winter use. They wore their hair in such a startling fashion that Champlain called them the "Cheveux Releves." "Not one of our courtiers," writes Champlain, "takes so much pains in dressing his locks." Their only other bodily adornment was the tattooing with which their bodies were covered. They were armed with bows and arrows and shields but were entirely naked. From them Champlain learned that the great lake was not far distant.

After leaving this remarkable band of Indians, Champlain and his party continued their journey and soon reached the broad expanse of the Georgian Bay. Coasting along its eastern shores they crossed Byng Inlet and Parry Sound, now a lake port of one of the great railway systems of the country; and finally landed a little west of the harbor of Penetanguishene. From there a path led them to the villages of the Hurons, which were scattered through the district lying between Lake Huron and Lake Simcoe, and which now forms the northern part of Simcoe County.

The visitors were received with open arms and given a hearty welcome, principally because Champlain promised to accompany the Hurons on an invasion of the country of their implacable enemies, the Five Nations of the Iroquois. The fame of the victory over the Mohawks, won chiefly through the assistance of Champlain and his white companions, during their trip up Lake Champlain in 1609, had reached the western Hurons. Firearms had not yet come into use among the Indians, and the Hurons believed that they could easily conquer even the fierce Iroquois, if they had the assistance of Champlain and his companions, armed with thunder, as the Hurons described the Frenchmen's arquebuses, or primitive muskets.

Canada Now Stands Fifth.

A statement prepared by the census and statistics branch of the Department of Agriculture shows that among wheat-producing countries of the world Canada now ranks fifth. In 1908 Canada ranked tenth. The total production of wheat in Canada last year is given at 166,744,000 bushels, as compared with 112,434,000 bushels in 1908.

London, July 13.—While Londoners last evening were discussing the tragic death of Capt. Rolls, the army dirigible balloon, manned by a full crew created intense excitement by flying from the army manoeuvring grounds at Aldershot, 35 miles away, into the City of London. High above the ground, the mammoth dirigible, under perfect control, made many daring evolutions, twice encircling St. Paul's Cathedral at the height of four hundred feet. After more manoeuvring, the dirigible pointed her nose back to Aldershot amid the cheering of more than 1,000,000 people.

Plot to Compel American Intervention

Havana, July 13.—The purpose of the conspiracy for which the mulatto, Col. George Valera and his associates were arrested Tuesday, was to compel American intervention, according to the Government's information. The Secretary of the Interior has issued an official statement that it was learned some days ago that the conspiracy existed with the design of blowing up bridges and railways and the destruction of property of the foreigners, with the hope of compelling this result.

Banker Dies Suddenly.

Cobalt, July 13.—Death came suddenly to L. R. Shaw, accountant of the Bank of Ottawa at Cobalt. Mr. Shaw had been unwell all day, and went to his room in the house occupied by the bank's employes and had retired. He was found about nine o'clock last night unconscious.

Standard Time for Paris.

Paris, July 13.—The Cabinet has decided to submit a bill for the adoption of western European time in France. During the old days of enmity towards England, the French steadily refused to accept standard time, maintaining the solar time of Paris, which is nine minutes slower.

Seized Ice Cream Cone.

New York, July 13.—More than 4,500,000 ice cream cones have been seized by United States Marshal Henkel as a part of the campaign being waged by the Government under the pure food act. It is alleged that the cones contain boric acid and are injurious to health.

Greater Berlin.

Plans for a "greater Berlin" have been worked out as the result of a prize competition among leading architects, builders and town planners. Prizes of $8,000 each have been awarded for schemes which peer three generations into the future and contemplate the Berlin that will be in the year 2000, which is fixed as the period when the capital will teem with a population of 10,000,000. Meantime it is estimated that trade and traffic will have tripled by 1920 and that the population will then be 4,300,000, or double the present total. In 1950 the total will reach 6,450,000, and in 1975 it will aggregate 8,250,000. "In a population of 10,000,000," say the professors who captured the second prize, "we divine a great peril for Berlin, a peril for which we must be prepared." It is proposed to avert this danger by a plan to regulate the construction of street buildings and parks so carefully that overcrowding will practically be impossible.

LIVE NOTES FROM NORWOOD

Special to the Review.

WANTED. A POO BAH.

Norwood, July 12.—The council of the village of Norwood have advertised for a suitable man to fill the position of constable, sanitary inspector, assessor, assistant collector, caretaker of town hall and street commissioner. Mr. D. Mahoney, the present officer, does not wish to spend the time on duty at night the council thinks necessary.

INQUEST.

At the inquest into the origin of the fire on the 6th of May last, some very interesting, and at times sensational evidence, was given. Some twelve or fifteen witnesses were examined. James L. Johnston swore he and Herb. Hudgins removed the cash register from King's hotel, and was ordered to place it back where they got it.

Mr. S. Scales swore that he had heard Mrs. King say she would not be sorry to see the place burn.

Mr. E. P. Cuffe testified that he had heard a man say he could lay his hands on the person who knew most about the fires. But the party being put on oath could not substantiate his statement to Mr. Cuffe. Very little of the evidence appeared to throw any light on the subject. Most of the witnesses could only say they had been at the fire after having been roused from sleep by the ringing of the fire bell.

Some of the witnesses were questioned as to the matter of drinking liquor around the village, but all denied having anything to do in regard to such conduct.

The inquest adjourned at 5 o'clock, to meet again at 7 o'clock.

Shorthand Notes.

Speaking of stenographers, under President Cleveland a stenographer became secretary of war, under President Roosevelt a stenographer became secretary of the treasury, and under President Taft a stenographer became collector of the port of New York, the most important customs office in the United States.—Kansas City Times.

Store Teeth.

"Her teeth are like stars," gushed the love smitten youth
In an outburst of joyous delight,
And when they were married he found 'twas the truth—
Like the stars, they came out every night.

Good Form

The person who can talk entertainingly and listen attentively is the best type of guest at social gatherings, for she who chatters incessantly is almost more undesirable than one who is too quiet, for the latter gives opportunity for other persons to express themselves, while with the former to say even one word is often a struggle.

The balance between these extremes is the art of stimulating a temporary companion to conversation, and at no place is it more important to adopt the correct attitude than at a dinner. More than one man has been obliged to talk so much when sitting beside a quiet woman that he has not eaten enough. Such conduct on the part of a woman is decidedly inconsiderate, for if she is not willing to add her quota to the evening's entertainment she should stay at home.

At dinners and also at formal luncheons it is a good idea to watch the plates of neighbors, and if one person has been talking so much as to have fallen behind in the course it is tactful to take conversation into one's own hands, giving the other a chance to listen and at the same time to eat.

It is not good form to monopolize the attention of one neighbor to such an extent as to prevent him or her from talking with the person on the other side. Often it is a temptation when on one side is an attractive person and on the other one who is dull, but politeness makes dividing the attention necessary.

If one person is kept constantly in conversation by one neighbor at dinner it means that he or she on the other side sits much of the time with no one to talk to, for the guest farther on is certainly giving some time to the person on his or her other side.

The Afternoon Call.

All afternoon receptions are considered in themselves a call and require no after call.

An evening call, however, necessitates a call, and so does an afternoon tea with "music" on the invitation.

A matron invited to a reception given by a married woman leaves one of her own cards and two of her husband's.

A woman who has been invited to help to receive at a tea must acknowledge the courtesy by a call.

No matter whether the husband is in China or Japan, the wife invariably presents his cards in calling.

When calling upon an unmarried woman or widow she leaves only one of his, but in other cases two are left.

Any invitation for luncheon or dinner, however informal the meal, necessitates a call.

Card parties also require a formal acknowledgment of the invitation, whether accepted or not.

THE GENUINE ALWAYS SUPERIO TO THE IMITATION

The experienced buyer never permits the shrewd merchant to convince him that an imitation is superior to the genuine advertised article. In refusing a substitute he protects himself and the manufacturers who have expended enormous sums in giving the public information regarding their products.

Advertised articles have stood the test of public approval on their merits and materials embracing their make-up The mere fact that they are imitated is competent testimony of their worth.

You are safe in rejecting the article offered as "just as good."

Etiquette of Present Giving.

Both girls and young men are often very much at a loss when their friendship reaches a stage when they wish to bestow gifts—quite an early stage in man, by the bye, the dawn of special interest in any particular girl being invariably accompanied in his mind by the desire to give her something.

While his generosity only shows itself in flowers and sweets, music and an occasional book, the youth is never wrong. To lavish more costly gifts before an engagement is, however, to show himself ignorant of the usages of society and place the lady in the disagreeable position of having to refuse them. As for the damsel herself, there is one simple rule—never give a man anything until he has asked many times, and not often then.

About Manners.

Here are a few don'ts written by an authority upon social usages and good form. They sound simple, but some people seem not to have learned them:

Don't deal in personalities, especially in the midst of the family.

Don't forget as hostess to be as cordial and natural as possible, but not affected.

Don't stare at people or laugh at any peculiarity of manner or dress.

Don't talk at the theater, opera or concert while the performance is going on.

What's Wrong?

A great many people can't understand why we should have a clearance sale so early in the season. "Summer's only half over," they say, "and here you are holding a clearance sale. What's the matter?"

There's nothing the matter with the season or the goods. Business has been fine—much better than former years. We sold thousands of dollars worth of goods and made a profit on them, now we're willing to dispense with profit on certain lines. You don't get the pick of the stock—the selection that the early buyers got, but you get just as good goods, with half the Summer and all the Fall yet to wear them in.

Are you getting your share of the bargains?

Our store will be closed to-morrow (Thursday) afternoon and, observing our usual custom, we have laid aside a specially attractive list of summer necessities and further lowered the price several points on them to make shopping during the forenoon of greater interest.

Tempting groups in every section of our store from which to make selections.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

To the Editor of the Review.

Sir,—Do not fail to take a look at the new town park, when out strolling north-east corner Murray and Stewart streets. The flowers in full bloom, the rustic seats, the lake view, the handsome approach and sidewalk, bridge and steps.

ADMIRER.

To the Editor of the Review.

Sir,—Now that "Stony" Lake is mentioned in the press and advertisements scores of times daily, it is inexcusable for the learned to spell it "Stoney" however inexcusable it may be for the ignorant.

Tourists will be apt to think that this educational centre is sadly wanting in the art of spelling.

Yours sincerely,
ORTHOGRAPHY.
Peterborough, July 12, 1910.

To the Editor of the Review.

Sir,—I see that the collector of our water rate is threatening through the press to mulct us in a fine of twenty per cent if prompt payment is not made. Would it not be consistent and honest to exact payment off those who get water, and a proportion off those who only get water sometimes, and nothing off those who can never get any.

Yours truly,
FAIR PLAY,
Peterborough, July 12, 1910.

To the Editor of the Review.

Sir,—Under the heading of 'Still Stinking," in your issue of Monday, you are still hammering away at our Rip Van Winkle officials, and very properly so. You evidently give the impression, though, that we are without law or in a state of anarchy. The fact is we have plenty of law and plenty of paid officials to enforce it, and yet no action is taken by the Board of Health with its M.H.O. or the constabulary, or any other high sounding official whose duties are to enforce the laws, even if they are not just what we should have. Perhaps our new chief of police, who comes with a good record, will see to it at once, so that our laws may not any longer be brought into contempt.

Yours respectfully,
CIVIS.

IF YOU WANT TO FIGHT IT OUT

From the age of 45 years the eyes have undergone a natural change (which no eye escapes) so that they are either out of focu for distance or near vision, usually there i difficulty in reading, especially at night You cannot see distinctly with the paper a foot from the eyes and you need strong light, your real need is suitable glasses. If you want to fight this difficulty out with nature you may do so, millions have done it before you and have been worsted in the fight. We are relieving the eyes of such cases every day. Perhaps you will be wise by taking the matter in time.

DELEGATES ON PLEASURE BENT BRACING TRIP TO IDYL WYLD

The K.O.P. had a long session of informal fraternity when they went to Idyl Wyld yesterday afternoon on the steamer 'Otonabee," returning in the evening at 10.30.

About 175 took in the outing, and no doubt a much larger number would have gone had the rain held off. An orchestra of four pieces enlivened the trip by excellent music.

An appetizing fish supper was served at Idyl Wyld.

The party took the street cars back to the city, car No. 4 being reserved for Knight McVicker.

FOURTEEN BICYCLISTS EACH FINED FOR SPEEDING

For riding their bicycles on the sidewalk, fourteen citizens were fined $2 at the police court this morning. None of the offenders appeared in court, all having pleaded guilty.

This looks like business on the part of Chief Thompson, and those who pedal about the city should take the tip and keep off the sidewalk.

ONE OF THE OLD BRIGADE.

James Price claimed to be an old soldier on his way to a soldiers' home, but he didn't say just where. He was drunk last night and P.C. Newhall had to dodge a soldering iron in the hands of James, while making the arrest.

He asked for a chance to vamoose and was accommodated.

AN OLD BOY.

While there was no old boys' reunion here yesterday, Patrick Barrett, after an absence of sixteen years, blew in for a visit.

Pat fell by the wayside and got into all sorts of trouble. He was chased from one hotel, and his next appearance was at the G.T.R. station, where his conduct was not flattering to the city.

He said he had $50 on his arrival here and all he had left was $2.00.

The latter amount will go for local improvements, and Barrett will move on to the next town.

FORGIVEN.

A case of dispute regarding wages was dropped. The complainant was willing, and the two parties contributed the costs of 85 cents.

ENLARGED.

The case of a blacklister, who was found under the influence, was enlarged till Friday morning. He was given his liberty on his promise to appear.

CHARGE OF ASSAULT.

A young man, who, it is alleged, was implicated in the assault on Mr. M. Douris, of the Boston Cafe, Monday night, appeared, but an enlargement was made till Friday morning. He, too, was allowed out.

City Clerk S. R. Armstrong presided, in the absence of His Worship Magistrate Dumble.

A LARGE DAY AT BUCKHORN

A fishing party, captained by Mr. I. Eastwood, of the Palace Hotel, went to Buckhorn yesterday and had good luck.

tion, but should also be in their place on lodge night.

"We want to bring up sober, Godly Orangemen," he said. Pass over all that is not right and leave it behind. Go forward believing that our Bible is the bulwark of Protestantism and for all that we stand.

REV. G. R. WELSH.

"We can say fearlessly that we have no quarrel with Roman Catholics," said Rev. Mr. Welsh, "but we have an eternal controversy with the institution they represent. It is a menace to our schools, our national harmony, and the young country which we have built up. That institution is both tireless and timeless. We not only need to carry the open Bible, but read it with both eyes."

At the conclusion of the reverend gentleman's remarks three cheers were given for the king and the National Anthem was sung.

RAINDROPS.

Peterborough representatives showed up well. The respective lodges were out in good force and the 57th band was made up of three detachments. At the station in the evening, the 57th in full force attracted notice by giving a number of selections.

Col. Sam Hughes, M.P., Lindsay; J. A. Sexsmith, East Peterborough, M.P.; J. H. Devitt, M.P.P., J. J. Preston, M.P.P., Dr. Mason, M.P.B., Fenelon Falls, S. J. Fox, M.P.P., Lindsay, were in the procession.

A tally ho from Bowmanville brought a party to the celebration.

The veteran, T. B. Collins, of Millbrook, added another to his long list of walks. "I'm good for a few more yet," said Mr. Collins.

The tallest man in the procession was Mr. Vance, of Millbrook, who was 6 feet 9 inches.

The flag carried by Mr. N. A. Howard Moore in front of the Peterborough contingent was presented to him in 1902 in Ottawa by a number of ladies of Syracuse, N.Y. It was used in connection with the Boy's Brigade in Ottawa, and when the veterans were welcomed home from South Africa it headed the procession of troops who took part in the ceremonies.

Mr. John Kelly, of L.O.L. No. 557 Lindsay, walked. He has been an active Orangeman for 61 years. He is 81 years of age.

A large number of the banners were new and some were very imposing.

The next walk will likely be held in Cobourg.

Carlton Lodge No. 2119, only recently organized, had a turnout of 51 members out of 53.

In Woodstock muzzled dogs are now allowed off the chain.

Sir C. S. P. Pelletier, Lieutenant-Governor of Quebec, is seriously ill.

FIRST PASSENGER AIRSHIP HAD MODERN LUXURIES

DIRIGIBLE PASSENGER AIRSHIP IN FLIGHT.
PHOTOS FROM THE SPHERE.

Despite subsequent disaster, the recent flight of the Zeppelin airship from Friedrichshafen to Dusseldorf with passengers was an event to mark an epoch. The main view shows the exterior of the passenger saloon, in which refreshments were served during the voyage. As the first journey lasted nine hours this was, of course, necessary. The success of the journey should be another blow to the superstition of the unluckiness of the number thirteen (the number of persons on board). The portion of the journey between Mannheim and Dusseldorf was covered in four hours, whereas a railway express takes six hours for the same journey.

COUNT DE LESSEPS IN HIS BELOVED MACHINE FLIES OVER TORONTO

In His Bleriot Monoplane La Scarabee, French Bird-Man Sets Out From the Grand Stand at Weston and Runs to Toronto and Back.

Toronto, July 14.—In his beloved La Scarabée, the 50 horse-power, seven cylinder Bleriot monoplane, in which he crossed the English Channel some months ago, Count de Lesseps last evening added to his well established fame as a navigator of the ether wastes, when he flew from the Weston aviation camp to Toronto and return, executing the journey in almost 30 minutes, and attaining a height of 3,500 feet at least. Including the time occupied in preliminary circlings of the field, he was a stranger to terra firma for 36 minutes.

The start and return was witnessed by three thousand persons, the largest gathering of the meet outside of last Saturday's throng, and the demonstration which hailed the reappearance of La Scarabee and its intrepid rider was one of the greatest enthusiasm. It seemed to the great majority of the beholders an incredibly short time for the voyage, the fact that the powerful motor can propel it through the air at close to a mile a minute, being overlooked in the computation.

Just how far the count traveled is a secret of the stars. The aeroplane carries no speedmeter, and calculations only are possible. It is said to be fifteen miles from Weston to Toronto and return as the crow flies, but the aerial craft has some lessons to learn from that sagacious bird as to directness. It is estimated that the count flew at least 20 miles, and some calculators say 25, and even 30. The count himself doesn't know, he being chiefly concerned about the wind, which was from the southeast by west and a lively breeze, as his inflamed eyes showed.

"The wind nearly broke my face," he sang out gaily as he alighted in the centre of the field, where he was seized upon by the French consul, Charles Rochereau de la Sablierre, another compatriot, and Captain Williams, who is in charge of the camp.

He was borne on their shoulders across the field to the south side, where the Baden-Powell Boy Scouts, about 400 strong, were drawn up under Capt. J. K. Keefler. The lads cheered him to the echo, and the other spectators joined in the spontaneous tribute. The count was manifestly pleased and bowed his acknowledgements. Then, surrounded by his countrymen, all bubbling over with enthusiasm, he proceeded to his tent.

The count, in reply to the consul's questions, said he had not been able to locate the City Hall tower, "because the wind was too bad," but that he had traveled far over the city—a statement readily confirmed by citizens who witnessed the aeroplane's circuitous sweep. The count was much pleased with the manner in which Le Scarabee had acted under the adverse conditions, for while the wind, which blew at 35 miles an hour during the day, dropped at sundown, it was still far from ideal for aeroplaning.

While Count de Lesseps will not be officially credited with more than 3,000 feet altitude, his sister, Countess Begassiers, said that to her it appeared that he was much higher in the air than at Montreal, when the judges gave him credit for 3,000 feet. His own barometer registered 3,500 feet, while before his downward glide he was 1,656 feet up.

While it was announced several days ago that the count would pay the city a friendly call in his airship during the meet, no definite time was set until yesterday afternoon, when the daring aviator said he would do so before night. During the morning he, with Count de la Sablierre and two French aviators, went to the top of the city hall tower, where Count de Lesseps carefully studied the surrounding country through a pair of field glasses. After lunch he stated that he would make part of the trip out over the lake and bay, thereby reducing to some extent the element of danger, his plane being equipped with a rubber cushion filled with gas, making for sufficient buoyancy to keep the craft above water in the event of a fall. He started out with the plan of following the course of the Humber in a general way through Lambton to the lake, with a return by that route.

It is said that at luncheon the count made a playful wager with his brother that he would fly to Toronto yesterday and that this held him to his purpose, despite the wind to be encountered.

BOTHA WELL RECEIVED

Johannesburg, July 14.—(C. A. P. Cable.)—Premier Botha, speaking in English, outlined his political program at Wanderers' Hall in the presence of a vast audience, mainly British. The utterance created a most favorable impression. It was a triumph to the personality of the man, who met a reception at the some time enthusiastic and sincere. Gen. Botha was cheered in a manner that proves that racialism is almost dead among the mass of the people and would not survive for one week if not employed for political ends.

In respect to education he was heckled somewhat on Hertzogism, but reasonable people are satisfied with his statements. The general view is that the Free State on this matter will fall in line when the provincial council is elected.

A Durban despatch says that the speech is regarded in Natal as a magnificent imperial deliverance. Botha's promises are trusted and the union is looked to to redeem them.

A Fatal Joke.

Canarsie, N.Y., July 14.—Robert Vietin, a 16-year-old youth, was swimming in Fish Creek with a crowd of other boys when one of the party threw up his hands and cried for help. Vietin swam toward him, and the supposedly drowning boy jumped on a log and paddled away laughing. He had been joking, but his heroic would-be rescuer was taken with a cramp and drowned.

GERMAN AERONAUT KILLED WITH HIS FOUR COMPANIONS

Oscar Erbsloeh, While Giving an Exhibition, His Big Dirigible Suddenly Breaks and Her Passengers Are Thrown to the Earth.

Leichlingen, Rhenish Prussia, July 14.—Oscar Erbsloeh, the German aeronaut, who won the international balloon race at St. Louis in 1907, and four companions, were killed yesterday when the dirigible balloon Erbsloeh burst at a height of several hundred feet and dropped to the earth a crumbled mass.

The craft was of the non-rigid type, 178 feet in length and 33 feet in diameter. The motors were of 125 horse-power and drove the airship at a speed of 28 1-2 miles an hour. The war department recently purchased one of Erbsloeh's balloons.

The cause of the accident is a matter of conjecture, but it is believed that the bursting of the bag was due to the expansion of gas by the warm sunshine.

The Erbsloeh rose gracefully, pushing its way through the fog to a height estimated at several hundred yards. At this altitude a series of evolutions was begun. To the onlookers the airship appeared to obey her helm perfectly. Suddenly there was a loud report, and at the moment the fore part of the vessel crumpled up and the gondola was twisted about until it appeared as though standing on one end. As the gas escaped from the forward compartment, the prow swayed downward. For a flash the airship fluttered like a wounded bird, and then fell swiftly to the earth.

Erbsloeh and his companions were killed the second that they struck the ground. Their heads were battered in and every limb broken. The wreckage fell so heavily that the gondola was broken to bits and the motor was buried in the ground.

Oscar Erbsloeh had made many daring and successful balloon flights. In the St. Louis aerial race, when he took from the United States to Germany the International Cup, which had been won the year before by Lieut. Frank P. Lahm at Paris, he covered a distance of 876 miles in the balloon Pommeru, landing at Ashbury Park, N.J., two miles further from the point of ascent at St. Louis than his nearest competitor, M. Lablanc of France, who came down at Herbertsville, N.J.

In February, 1909, Erbsloeh made a remarkable balloon trip across the Alps. His balloon was the Berlin, and it remained in the air for 30 hours, reaching a maximum altitude of about 8,000 feet.

One hundred feet of C.P.R. track was washed out just west of Kenora, and an engine slid into the lake.

THE BRITISH SIDE BEGINS

The Hague, July 14.—(C. A. P. Cable.)—On the opening of the court yesterday J. S. Ewart began his pleading for Britain. He said the British interpretation of the words "three miles from bays" in the treaty of 1818 was simply three miles from bays. On the other hand, the American interpretation was complicated, and had changed several times in the course of last century.

The difficulty of determining the limits of bays was annarent. Britain and America had often concluded treaties. Dealing with bays, but without defining the word "bay." In the treaty of 1874 America had for the first time advanced the territorial theory in contradistinction to the terms of the treaty which spoke of three miles from "bays," but not "three miles from the shores of bays." For the rest, no nation recognized that these territorial bays could not be broader than six miles from headland to headland.

AMONG HIS OWN PEOPLE

Sir Wilfrid Gets Rousing Welcome From Manitoba French.

St. Anne, Man., July 14.—Quaint types and picturesque surroundings gave an interesting touch to Sir Wilfrid Laurier's meeting here yesterday. The Prime Minister was among his own people, he spoke to them in their native language and more than ever was a Canadien.

The meeting took place in the garden surrounding Reeve Richer's residence, St. Anne, in the County of Provencher, in an entirely French-Canadian settlement.

Several hundred thronged the grounds, climbing on posts, trees and roofs to hear the Premier.

Addressing his compatriots, Sir Wilfrid said the French language was dear to him. He repeated his remarks about the object of his trip, and referred to the decrease in transportation tolls since the Liberal Government came into power.

Hon. George P. Graham, referring to Departmental matters, spoke of the Hudson Bay Railway, which, he declared, would be completed during his term of office. He emphasized the policy of the Government to provide the best possible facilities to transport the products of the country to the markets of the world.

E. N. McDonald and F. F. Pardee were the other speakers.

After finishing his speech, Sir Wilfrid received a note from a Metis, who complained that, while the Premier had complimented Canadians of British and French origin, he neglected those of Indian extraction. This led to a second speech, in which Sir Wilfrid pleaded for patience and consideration for the half-breed.

The Prime Minister officially opened the Winnipeg Industrial Exhibition and later took luncheon with the directors.

HONEYMOON IN THE AIR

Frederick Philip Schneider, engineer and aviation enthusiast, and Miss Eva Matildfa Leonhauser, of this city, who are to be married July 20, will spend their honeymoon in an aeroplane of the former's own manufacture. They will start from some quiet place over in Long Island and begin a series of flights, whither, they do not care, so long, as the bride-to-be said last night, "it isn't in the ocean on on a barbed wire fence."

UNKNOWN ENEMY ATTEMPTS WRECK

Ottawa, July 14.—Orangemen who had been celebrating the 12th at Cantley, Que., just escaped disaster at the hands of an unknown enemy.

Five hundred of them and their friends were on the Gatineau train, and had it not been that there was an hour's delay at Blue Sea Lake, owing to a piston rod of the engine breaking, the train would probably have been wrecked at Kirk's Ferry, a dangerous point. Fortunately a hand car was thus enabled to precede the train by about five minutes. It struck an obstruction, was derailed and thrown into a ditch.

An inspection of the track showed that horseshoes had been slung on the rails, and cleated to the ties, with the very evident intention of wrecking the train. The track had been doctored in the same manner for a distance of thirty feet, and it took some time to remove the obstruction. The spot chosen by the wreckers was a rock cut, into which not enough light penetrated to reveal the danger to the engineer.

AVENGES HER FATHER'S DEATH

New Orleans, July 14.—Joseph Manzella, proprietor of a saloon and grocery, fell a victim of the so-called "blackhand society" here yesterday, but his death was avenged a few seconds later, when his 17-year-old daughter shot and killed the assassin as he was attempting to escape.

Manzella had recently received many letters signed "Blackhand Society." Yesterday an Italian called at the store and demanded money as a representative of the society. When ordered to leave the place he shot Manzella in the breast. As Manzella fell he drew his revolver and fired. Young Josephine Manzella rushed into the store and gave chase to the assassin, firing at him as she ran.

When the police arrived the girl was bending over the body of her father, weeping. The slayer lay in the gutter near the entrance, with three bullet wounds near his heart.

Patrolman Gave Sacrament.

Hartford, Conn., July 14.—While Mrs. Guissippe Tellegrino of No. 225 Market street, sat in the doorway of her home late yesterday afternoon, her infant son in her arms, eagerly waiting for the arrival of a priest to bless the child, who was dying with convulsions, a Catholic policeman exercised the prerogative of a Catholic layman by assuming the function of a priest and administered the sacrament.

The mother refused to send the baby to the hospital until this right had been performed. After the policeman had performed the rite of baptism on the little one the mother allowed the child to be taken to the hospital, where it died shortly afterward.

A MESSAGE FROM THE GRAVE

Archie McLaughlin was hung in Whitby jail yesterday morning. He became infatuated with another woman poisoned his wife, set fire to the house and two children also perished. He left a message:

"I am going to the gallows without any fear. My position to-day arises from two causes, an inordinate love of women and liquor. This is the message that I would send to young men, yes, all men, single and married, to warn them to avoid the causes of my troubles. I would urge all men to abstain from whiskey, to refrain from flirtation, and to lead strictly moral and upright lives."

That is good advice, and McLaughlin is dead by reason of his crime and because he didn't listen to his conscience. His advice against whiskey is the advice of every man who has ever hit the high spots very often. Whiskey is a fine antidote for snake bites, and for heart failure it is a great remedy. It is excellent to rub on legs and arms where numbness sets in. That's about the end of its excellence. But as for the ladies, that's another question. If Mr. McLaughlin had only waited a little longer he would probably have tired of the strange face and found it only a passing fancy and turned to his wife again. The scribbler hath written:

"Would you have a little love,
Monagamie,
Try a little love polygamie,
For the more you have to do
With the rip roaring crew,
And the more you have of their fun
You'll be sicker of loves,
And fair turtle doves
And cling all the closer to one."

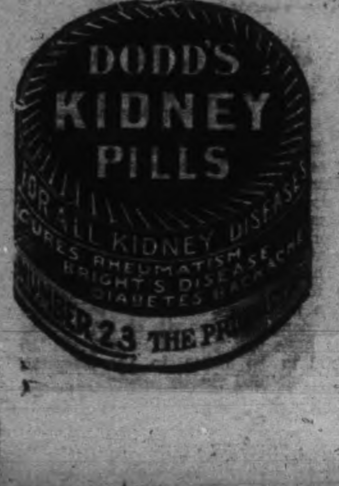
There is no love like the old love, and it takes a loss, a sickness or a keen disappointment to prove it.

LORD SHOLTO DOUGLAS

Lord Sholto Douglas is working for the C.P.R. in the west on a surveying crew at $2 a day. This harum scarum fellow is a brother to the Marquis of Queensbury, who gained notoriety through his code of pugilistic rules. Lord Sholto met a show girl named Margraet Mooney, spent all his money, separated and now takes, metaphorically, to the hod. There are not many lords that have squandered their fortune and have to take to working for $2 a day, but there are any amount of men as good as any lord, who have. Nearly every city has a bunch of has beens who were once rich and who drank or gambled their money away. Lord Sholto does not deserve credit because he is a bankrupt. But he certainly does deserve a kind word because he has got enough sense of independence to work for himself without trying to marry an American heiress.

A PROBLEM SETTLED

Rev. R. N. Merrill, of the Methodist Episcopal church in Newcastle, Pa., has solved the drawback of poor attendance at his evening service. He delivers his sermon in the dark. Rev. Mr. Merrill advertized last week that he would extinguish the lights on account of the heat and his church was crowded. Nearly all who attended were young people and thus is the problem of non-attendance in the summer time settled in a jiffy. Turn out the lights and let the congregation hold hands in the dark. If that does not do, pass the ice cream and cake.



TREATMENT OF THE HORSE

Fred Richetts, of Granum, Alberta, stands charged with pulling a horse's tongue out. The animal balked and Richetts lost his temper. He is out on $2,000 bail and the horse has been shot. If he is guilty he should be flogged. The horse is a noble animal and next to the dog, man's closest dumb friend. On Tuesday night two drunken men raced their horses up Water street at top speed, lashing the animals between shouts. The hoof beats died in the distance, and so did the lashes and the shouts. The horse is a patient brute and goes jogging along in the hot days or stands patiently in the cold. It deserves better consideration than most of us give it.

THE MAN WHO WHISTLED

Last evening a man ran down Dublin street to catch a car on George. The conducter did not see him and the car sped on, when a man on the opposite side of the street, placing his fingers in his mouth, whistled. It was a loud shrill whistle and the car stopped. The man who was trying to catch the car and who had stopped, ran on again and caught it. Just because the other fellow knew how to whistle. There is more in life to be caught than street cars, but the reason so many of us get left so often is simply because we don't know how to catch on.

A whistle was the only thing to catch that car, and it wasn't a parlor whistle either. The clerk who catches on is the clerk who does not worry about the slow passage of the hours, but who tries to understand all the peculiarities of his business. The mechanic who makes good is the man who knows mechanics better than the horse race or the leaders in the Eastern league and the averages of the batters in the National. The bank clerk who finds himself going up the ladder towards a managership is not the one one who makes a hit with the ladies, but who scores high with the head office.

Neither is the preacher who catches the public mind, comparable for real service with the one who catches the still small voice in the room alone. The saying of pleasant things is not preaching. The musician who counts, who makes good is the musician who, vocal or instrumental, is desparately in love with the work which at once ceases being work and becomes fascination, recreation or whatever one likes to call it.

To know how to whistle loud enough to stop a street car in the distance is an accomplishment.

And in our several walks of life if we are only prepared to work, we can also have our little world stop and stand to attention.

THE HAPPY FLY

WHAT IS THE USE OF THAT FLY PAPER, MADAM? THERE ARE A THOUSAND EGGS IN THE GARBAGE PILE TO SOON HAVE LEGS AND WINGS FOR EVERY FLY YOU CAN CATCH. WHEW! PUT ON THE LID. GENTLEMEN IN AUTHORITY, IS IT NECESSARY TO HAVE GARBAGE IN HUNDREDS OF BACK YARDS? IS THIS AN UP-TO-DATE CITY? IN THE MEANTIME THE FLIES ARE HAPPY AND THE HOUSEKEEPER MAD. SOME TIMES WHEN THEY ARE NOT IN THE GARBAGE PILE THEY ARE IN THE MILK OR ON THE CAKE. AND SO PASSETH THE HEATED SEASON IN FLYDOM.

SPEAKING OF OUR FRIEND THE FLY, THE MONTREAL WITNESS SAYS:

There was a little girl,
And she had a little curl,
Which stretched down the centre of her forehead,
And when she was good,
She was very, very good,
And when she was bad she was—horrid.

The party of journalists which visited the Nickel theatre this morning, at the special invitation of the management, were irresistibly reminded of the old nursery rhyme when a film called "The Fly Pest," was thrown on the screen for their special edification before being shown to the patrons of the theatre.

The moving picture when it is good resembles the little girl referred to above, but unfortunately in too many cases the shows are in the hands of the wrong men, and then civic campaigns are necessary to keep them in order.

This film, which was made by Mr. Charles Urban, in London, by microphotography, shows the common house fly about the size of a large fowl. It depicts a fly laying its eggs in putrid meat; the eggs are large enough on the screen to be distinctly seen, as, also, are the various stages through which they go in twenty-four hours before commencing duty as full grown flies."

The second act shows how the fly carries contagion. Having walked round some putrid fish and other garbage, plentifully loading its feet with rotten matter, the fly commences cleansing itself on a lump of sugar and afterwards on the nipple of a baby's bottle. Point is given to the danger of the pest by the finale, which shows a pretty baby placidly sucking from the bottle the flies have just vacated.

LADIES OF PETERBOROUGH, THIS IS THE SAME KIND OF A FLY THAT IS DOING BUSINESS HERE.

THE BIG SHOW

Sir Wilfrid Laurier has started out on his western tour. He is travelling in state such as never before was affected by a Canadian Prime Minister. Here are some of the paraphernalia:

A Special Train.

Four Special Cars.

A round dozen of newspaper men, who are being taken along to chronicle the Big Chief's progress.

And besides, there is the advance car of properties—decorations to be put up at each town to show its spontaneous welcome. All these things are managed according to a system, you see, and the decorations travel with the Premier. One town used them to show its irrepressible affection; then they are taken down and shipped ahead to enable the next place to exhibit heartfelt attachment. When that meeting is over they are taken down and sent ahead, yet another move to enable town number three to offer convincing proofs of loyalty.

That is the way the Liberal leader of to-day goes about the country. It is made a sort of royal progress. At least one of the Liberal newspapers is openly exulting at the state in which Sir Wilfrid Laurier travels, and sneers at Mr. Borden because he journeys in ordinary railway cars with the populace. And this is the Liberal party which made the heavens ring because Conservative Ministers used an occasional single private car. Liberalism in practice is a gorgeous spectacle.

By the way, it will be noticed that this must be a very expensive journey. We cannot take a special train all over Western Canada and back and escape payment. On a careful estimate, the expense will run from $12,000 to $15,000. That is a good deal. Where does the money come from?

The belief which prevails in Ottawa is that certain agricultural implement manufacturers have found the money; that that is their part of the contributions to the Liberal campaign fund.

NOT OSTRICH. BUT OCTOPUS.
Toronto World.

The biggest ostriches yet in Canada are the railroad ostriches that have let and are letting the radials, the electrics and the automobiles take the bulk of the passenger business!

The express business, and the mail-carrying business will go next; then the smaller freight. Oh you ostriches!

AUTO RULES.

The limit for automobiles by Government act is set at 10 miles an hour in cities, towns and incorporated villages, and elsewhere 15 miles an hour. Councils may set apart streets (and pass by-laws relating to them) on which a greater speed may be allowed "for the purpose of testing" such motor vehicles. Motorists must slow up to 4 miles an hour passing a standing street car.

BRITISH EMIGRATION.

According to a recent return of the British Board of Trade, the net emigration from the United Kingdom to countries outside of Europe during the years 1908 and 1909 was as follows:

Country.	1908.	1909.
Australia	11,476	17,377
Canada	41,455	50,437
New Zealand	8,947	7,863

South Africa	4,780	2,487
All others	602	(5,306

VERY DOUBTFUL.
Brockville Times.

It is safe to wager that eminent sportsmen will be remembered proportionately longer than eminent men of literature or science. There are far more people who can tell who Heenan and Sayers were and what they did than there are who can remember the names and careers of contemporary scientists, artists or distinguished men of letters. John L. Sullivan's name has become proverbial for a fighting man. Toronto will be remembered as the home of Ned Hanlan, the famous oarsmen, long after Goldwin Smith's name has faded out of remembrance.

THE BEAUTIFUL MISS MERRIAM.

She Had a Surprise In Store For the Man She Won.

By HARRIET LUMMIS.

With Miss Merriam the incredible had happened. She was tired of hearing that she was beautiful. From her earliest recollections strangers had exclaimed over her pretty face, and her lovers one after another had hung the variations on the same theme. Miss Merriam listened politely and found herself extremely bored.

"To be loved for your face is like being loved for your fortune," Miss Merriam confided to her journal. "Beauty has wings just as truly as riches. If a man falls in love with your complexion, what is he going to do when you come down with the smallpox? If I were a pretty fool I might be prefectly satisfied with things as they are, but I know I'm worth loving for myself—if only they had the sense to find it out."

Unfortunately for themselves Miss Merriam's adorers never suspected her peculiar views. If there had been one of their number shrewd enough to compliment her intellect instead of her dimples and to have talked about her sparkling wit rather than her sparkling eyes he would have found the short cut to her heart. As it was, they were unanimous in deciding that the aforementioned article had been omitted from her composition. And Miss Merriam expressed her displeasure in the following paragraph in her journal: "Beauty, beauty, beauty! How tiresome it all is! I wish I might never hear I was beautiful again."

Rash prayers sometimes bring unwelcome answers. Not very many days later the city was electrified by the news that Miss Merriam had been thrown from her automobile at a well known watering place and seriously injured. Pictures of the beauty appeared in all the leading newspapers of the country, with reference to her possible disfigurement. Miss Merriam's relatives when appealed to on this important point refused to say anything to relieve the suspense or to satisfy the popular curiosity. And the explanation of their reticence was apparent when Miss Merriam made her appearance in society a few weeks later. Across the faultless curve of the girl's cheek ran an unsightly scar, a scar so aggressively prominent that it held the attention of the observer and made him forgetful of all else. It seemed likely that Miss Merriam was to have her heart's desire and never again be forced to bear that she was beautiful.

Lloyd Hollister saw her for the first time at one of the opening functions of the season, a few days after his return from abroad. "Notice that girl over there," a friend said, pulling his sleeve. "Last spring she was the 'beautiful Miss Merriam,' and see her now. Hard luck, isn't it?"

Hollister looked as directed. He saw a small head regally carried, a mass of dazzling hair and eyes that shot violet lights from under their arched brows. Then Miss Merriam turned her head, and he saw the scar and nothing else.

"I'd be sorrier for her," the man at his elbow went on, "if she hadn't turned down half the fellows in her set. I guess she thought she was good for a duke with that face of hers. Introduce you, did you say? Why, certainly, my dear fellow."

It was the innate chivalry of Hollister's nature which had prompted him to ask the honor of Miss Merriam's acquaintance. He was as sorry for the girl as he was disgusted with the cold blooded comments of the man who had pointed her out to him. For the first few moments of their conversation he unscrupulously kept his eyes away from her. He could not bear to witness the beauty in eclipse, and he fancied that she who had been so used to reading admiration in the eyes of every man must wince at the pity which tact could not conceal.

Presently he found that admiration was getting the better of his sympathy. This quondam beauty was not crushed by her misfortune. She met this thunderbolt of fate's spite with a gallant courage which quickened Hollister's pulses. Her easy gayety, her apparent unconsciousness of the pathos of her situation, appealed to him as no woman's beauty had ever done. He made the discovery that Miss Merriam was brilliant if no longer beautiful and that her cleverness, unlike that of many of her sex, owed nothing to ill nature.

In the months that followed he saw a great deal of Miss Merriam. It was clear that the girl's liking for social pleasure remained unaltered by the change in her circumstances. She went everywhere and to all appearances enjoyed herself in spite of the sudden falling off in the number of her admirers. There had been a time when the man who wished a word with the beautiful Miss Merriam was obliged to fight his way through a double ring of black coats, but Hollister had no difficulty in gaining her side whenever he went. Yet the deposed queen of hearts seemed so unconscious of anything about her which called for sympathy that Hollister suppressed his pity as if it had been a form of disloyalty, and after a time he no longer found this difficult. He admired Miss Merriam too much to be sorry for her. In every quality of mind and heart she met his ideal of what a woman should be. As for the scar, he looked at it now unshrinkingly. Whatever he did, he meant to act with his eyes open.

The night he asked her to marry him they sat in Miss Merriam's little library, where the flickering light of the grate fell full upon her face. No man worthy of the name is voluble when he lays his heart and life in the hollow of a woman's hand. Hollister stammered through his lovemaking like a boy. As he went on Miss Merriam turned away her face so that the profile was toward him. The light of the fire flashed on the scar, and it stood out in livid relief. As a rule, Hollister was not fanciful, but for an instant the gash seemed the mocking mouth of a demon.

Hollister waited a long time for an answer to his question. Miss Merriam's face was averted, and he could see that she was stirred by some strong emotion. When he made a movement to take her hand she turned toward him suddenly, and he saw that her eyes were brimming with tears.

"You are a brave man, Mr. Hollister," she said in a voice not quite steady. "Have you thought of this?" Her fingers touched the scar with a strange, half caressing gesture. "Have you thought what it will mean to have every passerby look at your wife pityingly and whisper as you pass?"

"I love you," was Hollister's answer. "If there is a hard thing in your life it is my right to share it." Then his head whirled at the look of sudden adoration that leaped from her eyes.

"Oh, I wanted to find a man like you," Miss Merriam whispered. "I was sure there must be such a one in the world." And then she was in his arms, with the poor, scarred cheek pressed to him, sobbing out her heart in a burst of exultant triumph that enraptured him without his understanding it in the least.

When they said good night Miss Merriam clung to her lover as if reluctant to let him out of her sight. "I must see you in the morning, dearest," she said. "You must spare me a few moments." And Hollister, who was looking forward to the separation of a few hours as if it had been as many weeks, agreed with a sudden lightness of heart.

He wondered a little when he came next morning that she should keep him waiting. His heart leaped at every footstep in the hall for the first half hour, and when at last she stole into the room, closing the door behind her, she took him by surprise. Hollister sprang to his feet, then stood staring blankly.

An enchanting face smiled up at him, a face rosy with blushes. He saw the play of the dimples and the curve of the cheek as if he were looking on it for the first time. The scar was gone.

"My!" said Hollister helplessly, and he dropped into a chair, his own face dead pale. Miss Merriam ran to him and dropped on her knees beside his chair, looking into his eyes with a fascinating mixture of timidity and confidence.

"Forgive me, dearest. Don't be angry with me for deceiving you. If you only knew how tired I grew of men who couldn't see anything in me to love but my pretty face! That little accident with my automobile was too good an opportunity to miss, and the scar was easily put on. An actress showed me how to do it, but I flatter myself that after a little I improved upon my teacher."

She smiled at Hollister shyly and did not seem to find his silence discouraging. "Please don't say you like me better the other way. I almost grew to hate my beauty when it blinded people to all the rest in me, but now I'm glad to have it to give to the man who loved me for myself."

Several complexion specialists claimed the credit for removing the scar that had ruined Miss Merriam's beauty and reaped golden harvests thereby. But the beautiful Miss Merriam never regained her title for the reason that her identity was soon merged in that of the beautiful Mrs. Hollister.

A Gigantic Goddess of War.

In the Japanese capital there is a gigantic image of a woman made of wood, iron and plaster. The time of its erection and the name of its designer are in dispute, but it is known to have been dedicated to Hachiman, the god of war. In height it measures fifty-four feet, the head alone, which is reached by a winding stairway in the interior of the figure, being capable of holding a company of twenty persons. The goddess holds a sword in her right hand and a huge painted wooden ball in the left. Internally the statue is the finest anatomical model in existence, every bone, joint and ligament being represented on a gigantic scale in proportion to the height and general size of the huge figure itself. The large eyes are magnifying glasses, through which a fine view of the surrounding country may be had.

Willing to Please.

The fair, fat and forty landlady of No. 51 was showing the prospective lodger over the house.

"I think you'd find everythink comferable," she assured him. "This 'd be the livin' room."

He poked his head inside and nodded.

"An' this," said the landlady, conducting him down a way that was dark, "this is the bedroom. Good an' hairy, you see!"

"Quite so!" assented the victim, withdrawing.

"An' this," proceeded the dame, "is our barthroom. Nice little room, ain't it?"

The young man stared blankly.

"Yes," he agreed, "but"—

"Oh," broke in the lady, "if you should ever want ter use the barth I dessay we could find another place for the coal."—London Answers.

A Crucial Period.

Wellington, July 14.—Lord Islington, in responding to an enthusiastic welcome, said the next decade would be a crucial period in the Empire's destiny. It was to be hoped that the nation would set itself with serene determination and fearlessness, but no spirit of aggression, to maintain the position it held in the world today.

Hogs Lower—American Cattle Markets Active With Higher Prices.

Montreal Live Stock.

MONTREAL, July 13.—(Special)—The improved demand for ocean freight space has continued, and the bulk of it now from this port for the months of July and August has been engaged, of which fully 75 per cent. is for northwest ranch cattle. There has been no further change in rates. All the Liverpool has been closed out for July and August at 25s to 30c; London at 20s to 25s, Glasgow at 25s, and the bulk of Manchester at 20s to 27s 6d per head. Prices in the foreign markets for Canadian cattle so far this season have been well maintained, on account of limited supplies, as compared with previous years, and, altho exporters have had to pay high prices in the west for them, the season up to the present has been satisfactory for them, but the question now is, Will these high prices, viz., 14½c to 15¼c for Canadians, and 13½c to 14c for ranchers, in Liverpool, and 14¼c to 15¼c for the former, and 13¾c to 14¼c for the latter in London, be maintained when these increased shipments of northwest ranchers begin to arrive on the markets?

At the Canadian Pacific live stock market this morning the offerings amounted to 850 cattle, 750 sheep and lambs, 700 hogs and 600 calves. Prices were firm at the advance noted on Monday. The supply was a little larger, but, as butchers generally were short of stock, the demand was good, and quite an active trade was done, which resulted in the market being cleared at an early hour. Choice steers sold at 7c to 7¼c; good at 6½c to 6¾c; fairly good at 6c to 6¼c; fair at 5½c to 5¾c, and common at 5c to 5¼c per lb. Among the offerings there were a fair number of cows, which met with a better sale, and prices ranged from 3c to 5c per lb., as to quality. There were no choice bulls, and the top price realized for the best was 4c, and the lower grades sold at from that down to 3c per lb. Supplies of small meats were more plentiful than they have been of late, and especially of lambs, but, as the demand was good for all lines, a steady feeling prevailed in the market, and prices show no change. Yearling sheep brought 3½c to 3¾c per lb., and spring lambs sold at $3.50 to $5. Calves were cheaper on account of the poor quality of the stock offered, and sales were made at from $2.50 to $8 each, as to size and quality. The demand for hogs was good, and sales of selected lots were made at $9.50, and mixed lots at $9 per 100 lbs., weighed off cars.

Pulpwood Burned.

Ottawa, July 14.—By a fire which started in the Cummings' lumber yards, situated a mile above Maniwaki, from some unknown cause, and which burned all day Monday and Tuesday, over 2,000 cords of pulp wood and several hundred sawlogs were destroyed. The heat was so intense that it was impossible for the volunteer fire-fighters to get within working distance of the blaze, and it was only through the heavy rains of Tuesday night that the conflagration was eventually stopped. The damage will be several thousand dollars.

Boy Badly Hurt.

Port Credit, July 14.—Charlie Cox, the 13-year-old son of William Henry Cox, lies at the point of death in his home adjoining the Port Credit brick works, the result of an accident, when a gyn-pole or small derrick, weighing about 100 pounds, collapsed on him and pinned his head to the ground.

Nineteen-year-old Arthur Pope, a farmer's son living near Belleville, died of sunstroke.

CORONER'S JURY THOUGHT VINETTE FELL FROM SHOCK

And Sustained Injuries Which Caused His Death--Considered That the Arrangement of Wires Was Dangerous -- Widow Will Seek to Recover Damages.

After a long session of the coroner's court last night in which many witnesses were examined and after a lengthy deliberation by the jury, the following verdict was returned shortly before 12 o'clock;

"THAT ISADORE VINETTE CAME TO HIS DEATH AS THE RESULT OF AN ELECTRIC SHOCK, RECEIVED FROM THE OTONABEE LIGHT AND POWER COMPANY'S WIRES WHILE IN THEIR EMPLOY, AND WHICH WIRES WE CONSIDER WERE CARELESSLY CONSTRUCTED, CAUSING HIM TO FALL AND RESULTING IN HIS DEATH.

"WE, YOUR JURY, WOULD RECOMMEND THAT SOME SYSTEM OF EXPERT INSPECTION OF ALL WIRES SHOULD BE INAUGURATED IN THIS CITY FOR THE SAFETY OF ALL ENGAGED IN THAT WORK AS WELL AS THE GENERAL PUBLIC."

Rocque Gordon, who lives near the scene of the fatality, saw Vinette after he had fallen. Vinette had no gloves on.

THOUGHT WIRES DANGEROUS.

Rocque Briou, who has had considerable experience in electric wiring, examined the wires and found them in a dangerous condition. One wire was coming down that should not be there. On account of the limbs of the trees a man would have great difficulty in getting round while working on the poles. Gloves would have protected the deceased to some extent, but if the wire touched any other part of his body while his hand clutched the live brace a shock would have resulted.

Mr. G. N. Gordon, who appeared for the widow of the deceased, asked to be permitted to question the witness, but Crown Attorney Wood objected on the ground that the inquest was for the purpose of finding out the cause of Vinette's death. Mr. Gordon was appearing for the widow of the deceased, he said, and not for the purpose of facilitating the finding of the cause of death.

The coroner did not think that Mr. Gordon should have the privilege of cross-examining the witnesses, but was willing that the Crown Attorney should ask any reasonable questions suggested by Mr. Gordon.

The latter produced a photograph of the upper portion of the pole, which Mr. Briou identified.

To Mr. Medd, Briou admitted that an experienced man going on to that pole would have first cut off the superfluous wire. The brace on the cross arm should have been below instead of above.

It would have been necessary to cut off the power to do the job safely. The Cordage Company would not have to be shut off if the power had been turned off for the repairs the witness said. He knew this of his own knowledge.

Mr. Wood thought the evidence was pretty much along the same lines and did not care to call any more witnesses unless they were suggested by others interested.

A DANGEROUS WIRE.

Mr. James Greer was then called and said he was in charge of the power house at the Auburn dam. In company with Mr. Fife, he examined the pole. He considred the unusued wire that formerly connected with the transformer, to be dangerous.

Mr. Greer thought that it would not have been necessary to shut off the power to effect the repair to the wire. He thought the wire should not have been placed under the brace.

VINETTE'S BROTHER.

Baptiste Vinette, a brother of the deceased, and a lineman for the C.P.R. Telegraph Company, said he had examined the pole since the accident. He said he found an upright wire at the top of the pole that should not have been there and he made an examination of the wire that Vinette was supposed to have put up but it was impossible for him to do so as it was tied down to the other side of the street by a piece of marline.

He said his brother had very little experience as a lineman—only about seven months altogether. A foreman should have done the work himself unless the line was deadened.

The witness said he cut the side wire in question himself while a lineman for the company and left it in the condition it was in on instruction of the foreman.

Thos. Sprotte, foreman for Bell Telephone Company, said that some men became experienced linemen much more quickly than others, according to their ability. He thought it would be wise for the jury to consider that a thorough system of inspection would be advisable in connection with electric wiring.

WILL SEEK DAMAGES.

Mr. G. N. Gordon, the young widow's solicitor, said that she would seek damages from the company.

TRAMP WAS INDIGNANT ON BEING AWAKENED

Last evening a north end resident had an experience which lead him to believe that the man who minds his own business, even under extraordinary circumstances, gets just as much thanks as the other fellow who does not. The gentleman in question, while on his way home, came upon a member of hobodom, lying in a bed of poison ivy and in a gully in the vicinity of the Margaret Cox Home for Girls. The knight of the ties was sleeping, blissfull unconscious, of the the nature of his outdoor bed. A bottle of sleep tonic served for a pillow. On being awakened, he proceeded to show his proficiency regarding the art of using cuss words, and his meek friend came in for a lot of abuse.

Probably to-day Mr. Tramp is fully aware that he did a very foolish trick when he used that bed of poison ivy for sleeping purposes.

PRESBYTERY MET AT COBOURG

Call Extended to Rev. J. G. Potter of St. Andrew's Church Was Discussed

The Presbytery of Peterborough and representatives from surrounding cities and towns were in session at Cobourg on Tuesday, July 12th.

Rev. H. J. Keith was the representative from Peterborough.

Reports were read from delegates who attended the last conference, held at Halifax, in June, but the most important question discussed was the call extended to the Rev. J. G. Potter to accept a pastorate in Montreal.

A special meeting is called for on August 5th, in St. Andrew's church, Peterborough, to further discuss the question.

Owing to the fact that so many ministers were absent on their vacation, the attendance was rather slim.

The question of church union was also brought up for discussion, many of the members giving their views on the subject.

WHAT ABOUT THE GARBAGE DISPOSAL?

Review Approaches Mayor and Aldermen on This Much Discussed Question — The Opinions Expressed by Some of the City Fathers—What They Say.

The garbage question is a live matter—this, of course, refers only to the question.

For some time past many citizens of Peterborough, have expressed the opinion that the sanitary conditions of Peterborough are not what they should be, owing to the fact that festering garbage is allowed to lie unremoved in lanes and back yards.

In view of the fact that the garbage disposal problem is the chief topic of discussion during this hot weather, the Review thought that it might be well to get the opinions of the mayor and aldermen as to how this problem was to be solved.

WHAT THE MYAOR HAD TO SAY.

The mayor called the attention to the fact that the people had turned down the by-law when it was submitted to the people. On account of this the disposal of garbage has not been considered very much since. The mayor was prepared to support any legislation which he considered would be effective and timely when the question was brought up in council.

ALD. PHELAN.

Ald. Phelan said he had been out of the city and had not seen the discussion in the Review and did not care to express his ideas as to the best means of dealing with the garbage till he had considered the question more thoroughly.

FAVORS PROMPT ACTION.

"They put out cans in other cities," said Ald. Gillespie, "and these are called for regularly every day by the scavangers employed for that purpose. I don't see why the same thing could not be done here, although I don't want you to quote me as advocating this method for I have not carefully enough considered the matter to express a definite opinion. However, you may say that I appreciate the necessity of a garbage system being introduced into Peterborough as soon as possible."

Ald. Metheral.—"I would like to see a garbage system inaugurated, but what the best method could be I cannot say without further deliberation."

ALD. DUFFUS.

Ald. Duffus said he would strongly approve of the passing of a garbage by-law affecting the central and residential portions of the city.

ALD. TURNER.

Ald. Turner would support any measure that would satisfactorily answer the garbage question.

MEETING OF THE POLICE BOARD

New Summer Uniforms for Force, Also Bicycles and Dark Lanterns—Men Will be Paid Twice a Month in the Future.

Chief Thompson presented a report containing several recommendations at the meeting of the Police Commission this morning.

Judge Huycke was in the chair, and Mayor Morrow and Magistrate Dumble were also present. Ald. Duncan, chairman of the Property Committee, attended the meeting.

As suggested in the chief's recommendations, the following motions were put through:—

That the Chief Constable be authorized to secure new summer uniforms and blue helmets for the members of the police force, and also three dark lanterns.

That the Chief Constable be authorized to purchase two bicycles for the members of the police force.

That the clause in the recommendation of the Chief Constable regarding the consolidation and printing of the city by-laws be forwarded to the council with the recommendation that this be done.

That the members of the police force be paid twice a month, on the 15th and last days of each month, as heretofore.

That the members of the police force be given two weeks holidays at times to be arranged by the Chief Constable.

BETHANY TABERNACLE HAD SPLENDID OUTING

Another excursion, which brought enjoyment for all, was the annual outing of the Bethany Tabernacle to Juniper Island and South Beach, yesterday, per steamer "Otonabee."

Weather conditions were ideal and the excursionists numbered about two hundred. It was a hungry and happy crowd that visited Juniper Island, for the noon hour meal, and similar conditions prevailed at South Beach, when the "Otonabee" arrived there late in the afternoon.

The return trip was indeed a pleasant one, and the Review was informed by Mr. R. Pinchin, manager of the Ontario Navigation Co., that the general appearance of the boat after the excursionists had left, was an agreeable contrast to what it has been after after other excursions of a like nature.

And our feelings sure are hurt.

All have lots of time to spoon,
For the cards are there to tell us
This is closed this afternoon.

COMPLAINT IS LAID

Toronto, July 13.—At the meeting of the Provincial Board of Health, which concluded to-day, the principle was laid down that no sanction will in future be given to the pollution of provincial waters or lakes by the discharge into them of crude sewage.

Mr. W. H. Moore, a Peterborough Water Commissioner, appeared before the board to complain against the emptying of sewage and refuse into the Otonabee river by a number of the summer residents at Stony Lake. Since the city of Peterborough draws its water supply from this source, it was vitally important that the matter should be taken up and the grievance remedied at once. Dr. Bell, inspector and acting chief officer, was instructed to visit Stony Lake and report to the board, which will take such action as it deems expedient.

WEST ENDS HAVE NEW PLAYERS FOR SATURDAY

The West End Athletic Club will likely run an excursion to Lindsay on Saturday, July 23rd. The program there will include a baseball game between the locals and Lindsay's best.

At a meeting held last evening in the club rooms, it was decided that if satisfactory arrangements could be made, the excursion would be put on.

Mr. Jack Oldham was in Lindsay to-day and arranged for the game.

While the undertaking is a big one, there is no doubt but that it would be asuccess, as the club is a strong one and such an outing would be popular.

NO GAME IN JUNIOR FINALS

Special to the Review.

Havelock, July 13.—The first game of the finals in the junior Midland series did not come off last night as scheduled, as Madoc were unable to get a team ready for Wednesday, owing to the absence of a number of players. No definite date has as yet been set.

WEST ENDS MAY GO TO LINDSAY

And now the fun is about to commence. The West Ends have grown tired of taking the small end of the score in the City Baseball League, and have called for reinforcements, and Jack Oldham & Co. are going to win from the T.A.S. next Saturday—so it is said. A couple of real stars with the shine all in them, are billed for a place on the infield.

T.A.S. are just a little shaky these days. The regular team is not available, but Quinlan can help to fill up any holes. This game will start at two o'clock, and the Straths and P.A.C. will meet at four o'clock.

SPORTING COMMENT

Winnipeg Maroons, of the Western Canada Baseball League are now down in the low position of the league standing. Manager Lohr was fired recently and the next game played was won. The majority of the clubs in the league have been swapping players right and left, and the dim outline of apptomb stone looms up.

No Rehearsal—

There will be no rehearsal of St. John's choir to-night, owing to the absence of the choirmaster.

Still another lacrosse player has been punished for rough work on the field during a game. At Orangeville the judge in a Division Court awarded the plaintiff, who was assaulted, the sum of $10.00. Perhaps some day lacrosse will be played without any fistic exhibitions.

The Peterborough Golf Club will be represented at Toronto to-morrow, where they will play a game at High Park.

The Brooksides' Big Four were put out of the running in the tournament at Niagara, but they made a creditable showing.

That excursion to Lindsay, proposed by the West End Athletic Club, shows considerable enterprise. The club is going ahead all the time and the officers and members are to be congratulated.

Dr. Roberts has been appointed bread inspector of Hamilton.

Must Have Wireless.

London, July 14.—Sir Edward Sessoon's bill, making compulsory the equipment of all passenger vessels with a wireless system, passed the first reading in the House of Commons yesterday. A penalty of $5,000 in the event of failure to obey the law is provided.

Not Influenced by the U. S.

Tokio, July 14.—Marquis Katsura, the Premier and Minister of Finance, denied yesterday that the recently made convention between Japan and Russia was influenced by Secretary Knox's proposition for the neutralization of the Manchurian railway.

Habitants Go West.

For the first time in the history of Western settlement the "habitant" is going West. Recently a priest from Vanda, Sask., returned from the East with eleven carloads of French-Canadians most of them returning Canadians from the weaving towns of Maine. The priest who piloted the pilgrims over the Canadian Northern to the "Promised Land" says thousands will follow these as soon as the news of their first harvest goes back to New England.

This one train, which ran special all the way from Montreal by way of Chicago to Saskatoon, took 633 men, women, and children. The habitant is naturally a farmer. He entered the mills of New England mainly because the hills of Quebec were all occupied. He will make good in the West, where the open fields await him.

And though it may embarrass the mill managers of New England, the transplanting of these habitant men adds just so much to the world's output of wheat and postpones just so far the predicted time when we shall go supperless to bed. Only six per cent. of the wheat lands of the West have yet been broken in Canada.

And while these Easterners are plowing into Northern Saskatchewan an average of three hundred carloads a week are coming in from the South, breaking up at Saskatoon and scattering to the open lands north, east and west. The price of wheat lands in this immediate vicinity has gone up at the rate of $1 an acre a month for the last six months.

To Survey Big Water Route.

The Government has decided to make an immediate survey, with the idea of ascertaining the possibility of establishing a navigable water route between Winnipeg and Edmonton and the North Saskatchewan River and Lake Winnipeg. It is believed that a six or eight foot route can be established at a moderate cost.

L. R. Boliguy, one of the sub-chiefs on the Georgian Bay Canal survey, will be in charge of the survey, which will be made this summer by five parties, to be sent out from Ottawa.

Up and Down.

The next hardest thing to getting up in the world is to keep from getting down.

A Good Prize.

It is a curious fact that Sir William Ramsay, professor of chemistry at the London (Eng.) University, who is appealing for funds on behalf of new laboratories, was warned against adopting chemistry as a profession. "There are too many blanks and too few prizes," he was told. But Sir William has proved himself quite capable of drawing some of the prizes. He it was who, together with Lord Rayleigh, discovered the new element "argon," the two scientists sharing a prize of $10,000 awarded by the Smithsonian Institute for the discovery.

A RUTHLESS SLAUGHTER

ELEPHANTS PRACTICALLY EXTERMINATED IN AFRICA.

For Two Hundred and Fifty Years the Great Beast Has Been a Target For the Gun of the Ivory Hunter—French Society Makes Plans For His Preservation—Britain Is Working In Same Cause.

For many years, in fact almost ever since the white man and his native allies have been killing off the elephant, there has been discussion of means of preserving the big beast from extinction. The discussion has concerned the African elephant chiefly, because the Indian elephant through hard work as a helper of mankind has become a valuable member of society and has practically saved himself; but the big fellow of the African veldt has merely basked in the sunshine, played in the pools, tramped down the early settler's corn and been such a nuisance and an idler that he has been considered a good target for ivory hunters' guns.

Now a French society, known as The Friends of the Elephant, as bestirred itself in his behalf. This society has awakened so much interest that not only has France given it support but other nations that have African possessions are seeing what can be done to prevent the loss of this interesting and valuable animal. The plan advocated by the society is that of establishing preserves or sanctuaries where the elephant might live in some sense of security with his family and not be disturbed by hunters seeking his tusks to sell for ivory.

There is no doubt that he has got very much the worst of it ever since the white man went to South Africa. His case has a parallel in this country in the buffalo. As the buffalo was able to make out against the Indian, so the elephant was able to live and thrive with the black men that surrounded him. He was not in great danger of extinction from the pitfalls and assegais of the natives. It was when the white man with firearms appeared upon the scene that he began to lose ground. When the Dutch landed at Cape Town about 250 years ago his evil days began.

One of the old time hunters left an especially interesting record for daring and skill. It was a trick with him to call attention, according to the stories that are told of his prowess, to some fine big old bull in a herd, make a chalk mark on him and then kill him. The wagers that this hunter made with tenderfeet, it is said, kept him in gin and tobacco until he happened to run across a lively old brute that objected to being chalked and plugged with lead to adorn a hunter's tale. This hero of the herd turned on the great hunter, tusked him, and trampled him until there was not an unbroken bone in his body.

Jacobus Botha, ancestor of one of the Boer leaders in the war against England, was famous as an elephant hunter. He used to kill four or five elephants a day and in this way laid the foundation of quite a respectable South African fortune. A historian who wandered along the African coast at that time reported that Botha killed 22 elephants on two different occasions and that he shot as many as 13 elephants in a day. Some one who knew Botha declared that it was doubtful if he ever said such a thing and suggested that some one else told the story for him in order to see how great a tale that historian would believe.

Oswell, who was one of the greatest African hunters of Livingstone's time, relates that in one of his expeditions he saw 400 elephants in one herd. "As far as the eye could reach in a fairly open country," he said, "there was nothing but elephants. I do not mean in serried mass, but in small groups."

Gordon Cumming was another famous African hunter who killed his full share of big game, and F. C. Selous was another. The latter is said to have shot 23 elephants in three seasons with an old Dutch elephant gun.

The result of this slaughter has been to exterminate the elephant in South Africa. To-day there are no herds south of the Zambesi and the Cuene rivers except two or three small protected herds in Cape Colony, a small troop or two in Bamangwato and Bechuanaland and a few in Mashonaland and perhaps in Matabeleland. This is all that remains of the herds that 60 or 70 years ago roamed in freedom over most of the South African interior.

The English have taken a special interest in the elephant since they have seen it disappear rapidly from their South African colonies and several societies have been formed to preserve it. These societies have apparently been gathered into one which has for its purpose the preservation of the fauna of all the British empire.

The African native ever since he has been able to obtain and use firearms has killed the elephant regardless of size or sex. He has found that it is the most profitable trade that he can engage in because ivory finds a ready market at a good price. There have been laws made by some of the colonies that no cow elephants or immature bulls shall be killed, and the minimum weight of tusks that may be bartered has been fixed according to the colony at from 9 to 30 pounds; but the great difficulty in enforcing this rule is that the native has found that if he cannot sell the underweight tusks legally he can always find some one who will take them off his hands as contraband.

The French society has taken all these points into consideration and has directed its crusade against the slaughter in the interior of the continent, in the valley of the Congo. From here has been coming recently much of the contraband ivory as well as much of the finest that has been finding its way into the European markets. The killing of the big beast has been ruthless and without discrimination.

A surplus of $125,000 is figured for the first quarter of the fiscal year of the I.C.R.

FIELD CROP REPORTS; ONTARIO'S FARMS MAKE GOOD SHOWING THIS YEAR

General Condition of Crops in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta is Away Below the Average for Lack of Rain—Hay and Clover Better.

Ottawa, July 14.—Census and statistics office yesterday reported on the condition of field crops and the number and condition of farm animals of the Dominion at June 30. For the three years from 1908 to 1910, the field crops range in condition from 82.16 for spring wheat to 91.42 for hay and clover this year, to 80 for spring wheat and 82 for rye and pears in 1908. Fall wheat is 85.47 this year, compared with 77.28 in 1909, and 89 in 1908. Oats were 90 in 1908, and 93.81 in 1909, and this year they are 86.29. Peas are 86.94 this year, last year they were 84.40, and in the previous year 82. The condition of mixed grains is nearly the same, being 84.53 this year, 86.58 last year, and 84 in 1908.

Hay and clover are better this year than in either of the previous years, being 91.42 compared with 76 in 1909 and 87 in 1908. The condition of alfalfa has been recorded this year for the first time, and its average is 86.94. Pasture has a condition of 89.02 this year, compared with 99 in 1908, and 87.74 last year.

The condition of all field crops are good in Ontario, the highest being 94.29 for fall wheat, and the lowest, 84.79 for spring wheat. Quebec crops range from 74.45 for mixed grains to 102.58 for hay and clover. Peas are 84.42 and their condtiion is the next above mixed grains. In Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia all field crops are reported for a condition above 90, except alfalfa, which is 83.33 in the island. Hay and clover are 104.31 in the island and 105.79 in Nova Scotia. Wheat, oats, mixed grains and alfalfa are reported in a condition above 90 in New Brunswick, and all other crops between 83 and 89, except alfalfa, which is 97. Hay and clover are reported at 109.68.

Monitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta have low averages throughout, owing to a light rain fall in June. The general condition of crops in Manitoba is much below the average. Correspondents in nearly every district report no rains. only a few light showers and hot dry winds that absorbed the moisture and withered the crops. The lowest average condition is reported from around Brandon and Morden, and the highest from Marquette, where it is placed at a standard. In Saskatchewan the crops do not appear to have suffered from climatic conditions to the same extent as in either Manitoba and Alberta, as there have been many local showers. The reports from Lloydminster, Battleford, Indian Head and Qu'Appelle are very favorable, the condition of wheat being placed at 100 and over.

The prevailing condition of crops in that part of Alberta south of townships No. 30 is below the average in consequence of drought and hot winds. In the Edmonton district, the grains, although suffering to some extent from the same causes, are in much better condition. The best reports come from the Strathcona district, and those from Athabasca Landing and Saddle Lake districts are also particularly favorable. The field crops of British Columbia are all good.

The areas of late cereals, buckwheat, flax, corn for husking, beans, potatoes, turnips and other roots, sugar beets and corn for fodder have increased this year to 2,150,362 acres, which is 279,526 acres more than last year, and 247,869 acres more than in 1908. But this increase is altogether in flax, which, owing to the high price offered for seed, has come into favor with the farmers of the northwest. The only farm animals which show a noticeable increase since 1907 are horses, while sheep and swine have declined. The condition of all these animals over the Dominion exceeds 99.

AN INFANT PRODIGY.

Cochrane Has Now the Air of a Thriving Metropolis.

A year and half ago Cochrane was not on the map. To-day it is a thriving, bustling community, taking on the airs of a metropolis, basing great expectations on two facts, one that it is the centre of a district rich in timber, mineral, water power, and agricultural land, and second that it is the junction point of two great railways, the new National Transcontinental, building by the Dominion Government, and the T. & N. O., built by the Ontario Government.

Real estate always furnishes a measure for a community's hopes. And it is but a few months since the T. & N. O. Commission auctioned off the lots that constitute the townsite of Cochrane, so christened at that time in honor of Ontario's Minister of Lands and Mines, the Honorable Frank. The prices then realized were surprisingly high, but are vastly inferior to those already commanded for the same lots.

And a year and a half ago the site was the forest primeval. At that time the T. & N. O. rails were laid to within a couple of miles of the present town. A hardware merchant named McManus, with the adventurous spirit of the pioneer, decided to establish a store here. He bought a carload of hardware in Toronto, brought it to the end of the rails, and proceeded to haul it by team along the trail for the rest of the journey. Before he had it transported he had sold over half of the whole car. McManus was the first settler. To-day he is still the first citizen, being the duly elected mayor of a town of around 2,000 inhabitants.

Already Cochrane has its "oldest building." It is a section of the freight shed of the T. & N. O. Railway, large and respectable looking, and filled to the ceiling with merchandise, chiefly railway supplies, canned goods, and canoes. Alongside this building lies the railway diamond, that cannot but prove to be historic. From this diamond fur lines of railway stretch away towards the uttermost limits of Canada. To the south lies Toronto, to the west the great prairie and Prince Rupert, to the east Quebec and the Atlantic, and while this at present is the northerly terminus of the T. & N.O., the tracks have been laid for a mile or so into the "last North." And there is not so much of this "last North" either, 480 miles north of Toronto, Cochrane lies within 180 miles of James Bay. It will be no serious matter to connect Toronto up by rail with James Bay the moment there is any real reason to do so. Then we will be getting on the train at Toronto's Union Station at 10.20 p.m. and be at Arctic waters by the next night. At last Canada is conquering its geography.

For the present Cochrane is the northerly jumping-off place. To reach James Bay you take to the canoe. Seven days is the journey, and it holds no terrors for even a neophyte in the woods. The other day a woman and her baby set out for what was to her a return trip over the route. The wife of a Hudson Bay Co.'s official on James Bay, she has lived there for twenty years without a break. She came out at last to see her former friends near Wingham, Ont. But to her James Bay was home, and she said she was glad to get back.

Place one leg of a compass at Toronto, the other at Cochrane, and make a circle. You will encircle Quebec city, Chicago, and skirt the boundaries of far-away Georgia on the south.

To the south Cochrane has a regular train service, one train each way daily over the T. & N. O. Railway, but east and west the National Transcontinental is still in the hands of the contractors. Eastward for 100 miles Foley Bros. have the route, and while a large section of the track is laid, communication is cut off by the Abitibbi River, seven miles from Cochrane.

NOVA SCOTIA'S AWAKENING.

Maritime Province Is Again Coming Into Her Own.

Is it not possible that a country regarded with a slightly contemptuous pity by reason of its inactivity may be all the while merely strengthening its fibres for future action?

Such at all events has been the experience of Nova Scotia. Previous to confederation no province of Canada exhibited a greater commercial activity. From her great shipbuilding yards staunch vessels slipped into the water by the hundred and sailed away with the fruits of her industry to distant marts and returned as heavily laden. Small shopkeepers grew into prosperous merchants, prosperous merchants developed into merchant princes. Work and money were plentiful, and the flag of prosperity flew high.

The flag of prosperity descended with the hoisting of the Canadian National ensign in Nova Scotia. Confederation, that splendid achievement in the making of Canadian destiny, wrought havoc with the Nova Scotian shipping trade by strangling the arteries of traffic with iron tariff bonds. The shipbuilding industry in Nova Scotia fed largely on foreign trade, and the sudden check placed on that trade killed the principal industry by a slow starvation. Isolated by her geographical position from the rest of Canada, cut off by artificial barriers from the outside world, the province was forced to rest content with a limited internal commerce. Yielding to the force of circumstances she rested from her labors, and so far as the outside world was concerned Nova Scotia slumbered.

It was a natural sleep, however, and not the coma that precedes death. The years of sleep were not wasted years. Slowly, but steadily, the province built up new tissue, strengthened its tendons and gathered fresh energy into its nerves for future endeavors. The public school system was developed and improved; increased facilities were provided for the encouragement of exact scholarship; and as a result Nova Scotia has given to the world perhaps more college professors and principals than any other province in Canada. The period of so-called slumber ripened the country and prepared it thoroughly for the present industrial advancement.

The exploitation of her rich coal measures by great moneyed interests finally aroused the province from her commercial lethargy. H. M. Whitney of Boston and his associates formed the Dominion Coal Company in 1893, took over vast areas of coal in the neighborhood of Glace Bay, Cape Breton, equipped splendid collieries with the most modern appliances for coal digging, and furnished fuel for Montreal furnaces. The energy exhibited by the Dominion Coal Company and the instantaneous success achieved, created a buoyant ozone throughout the commercial atmosphere. Other coal companies dug deeper and faster and shipped more swiftly. Coal measures in Cumberland, in Pictou, in Inverness and in Cape Breton counties were developed. Fully equipped collieries sprang up over the country. Submarine areas were exploited. Practically every known coal seam in the province was delved into by the modern magician who transmutes black diamonds into yellow gold.

The industrial impetus given the province by the coal interests was augmented by the establishment of the Dominion Steel works at Sydney. Eagle eyes had marked the south bank of Sydney harbor as an admirable location for the Steel industry, and the result was an expenditure of $25,000,000 which reared the mightiest steel making plant in Canada and transformed a straggling village into a hustling city. Other companies also found the smelting and refining of iron ore a profitable enterprise, and as a result the steel industry in Nova Scotia is on a thoroughly substantial footing and is assuming large proportions. These are only two of Nova Scotia's booming industries which will put her back in the forefront of the wealthy provinces.

What's Wrong?

A great many people can't understand why we should have a clearance sale so early in the season. "Summer's only half over," they say, "and here you are holding a clearance sale. What's the matter?"

There's nothing the matter with the season or the goods. Business has been fine--much better than former years. We sold thousands of dollars worth of goods and made a profit on them, now we're willing to dispense with profit on certain lines. You don't get the pick of the stock--the selection that the early buyers got, but you get just as good goods, with half the Summer and all the Fall yet to wear them in.

A GLOBE TROTTER TELLS OF HIS INTERESTING TRAVELS

Mr. D. McPherson, of Vancouver, Paid Flying Visit to Peterborough—Studied Conditions in Many Lands—Travelling a Great Educator, He Says.

A GLOBE TROTTER—

Mr. D. McPherson, of Vancouver, arrived in Peterborough last Tuesday, and has been registered at the National. He is a brother of Dr. A. W. McPherson, of this city, and is a traveller of note, being at present on a trip around the world.

A WORLD TRIP.

Leaving Vancouver six months ago, where he was proprietor of a large hardware business, Mr. McPherson, in company with a friend, set sail for Japan, where a stay of some weeks was enjoyed, great interest being taken by them in studying the customs of these brilliant little people.

Proceeding on their voyage, they sailed down the coast of China and stopped at all the larger seaport towns and cities.

Italy, Spain, France and Germany were also visited in turn.

In Germany Mr. McPherson endeavored to study the national feeling towards England, of which so much has been heard of late, but refused to commit himself for publication on account of the briefness of his stay there.

Mr. McPherson made a stay of two or three weeks in each of these countries.

STUDY OF LABOR CONDITIONS.

In the old land he was a keen observer of the condition of the working class, and of the struggle between capital and labor.

Mr. McPherson landed in Canada, at Halifax, a couple of weeks ago, and arrived in Peterborough early this week.

He is now in the way to his home in Vancouver, greatly benefited by his trip.

TRAVELLING A GREAT EDUCATOR

He is a firm believer in the great educational value of travelling, and does not regret the outlay involved in such a trip, as he says the increased knowledge obtained through travel well repays the expenditure.

Mr. McPherson left on the early G. T.R. train this morning for Toronto.

He expressed himself as greatly pleased with the appearance of Peterborough, which he characterized as a trim and lively city.

PICTURES OF FIGHT CAUSED SMALL RIOT

New York, July 14.—There was trouble at the Savoy Theatre, in Thirty-fourth street, New York City, on Monday, July 11. Walter Rosenberg, manager of the theatre, had been advertising that "ringside pictures of the Jeffries-Johnson fight at Reno" would be displayed at the Savoy.

The theatre was jammed at one o'clock on July 11, although the admission was doubled. The pictures proved to be simply snapshots taken from time to time, and there was no "moving pictures," which was what the crowd wanted.

Soon the spectators made a dash for the ticket office on the sidewalk and demanded the admission money back.

Mr. Rosenberg declared he had not promised moving pictures, and immediately he became the centre of a fight. The ticket booth was overturned, signs were smashed, glass broken, stands upset. Mr. Rosenberg agreed not to advertise the pictures as he had, and the sign in the theatre at night added: "These are not motion pictures."

THE LATE DR. SUTHERLAND

AN APPRECIATION.

(Dr. Carman in Christian Guardian).

"My meat is to do the will of Him that sent me, and to finish his work." These words of Christ are the statement, the full explanation of the life character and labors of the sincerely lamented Dr. Sutherland, whose death strikes us with awe, and pierces our hearts with an unutterable sorrow. Were there no faith in it all, no vital union with a risen Lord, and the joy and strength of a world's redemption, the darkness of despair and remediless grief must settle down upon us. But there were consecration and vigor, willing obedience and service in the life; and so, through Christ, we have hope and comfort, healing balm and ever brightening prospects in the death. As he enters into his rest and his glory, angels may triumphantly sing, "A faithful laborer is rewarded, a fearless warrior crowned."

Our venerated and honored Missionary Secretary, Rev. Dr. Sutherland, had a work to do, and he did it. Longer in office than the entire earthy sojourn of Jesus Christ, he did his Master's will. If ever a man studied his field, his opportunities, and pushed his enterprises, he was the man. I see him now, ever busy under the pressure of office engagements; I hear his unfaltering voice in the high places of his ever-expanding charge. In committee he had fullness of detail; in correspondence, clearness, definiteness and accuracy of statement; with the missionaries under his superintendence, wisdom and energy, abounding sympathy and brotherly regard. His brethren all trusted his leadership with an unwavering confidence. But the hand that directed is now cold in death; the eye that encouraged is closed; the voice that instructed and cheered the workers on is silenced in the grave. The loss to our Methodism is inestimable. But the God of Moses, of Elijah, of Paul, the God of Wesley, of Ashbury, of Sutherland, will, if we be true, give us a man.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Some of the old members of cow testing associations, appreciate the system very much, and are realizing a profit from it. In the Shearer, Ont., association, for instance, one man states that he has delivered to the factory almost as much milk from ten cows as he did two years ago from fourteen cows. He has sold one of the ten for $45 for beef. At her best she gave 31 lbs. of milk per day; she is replaced by a cow costing $50, now giving 41 lbs. of milk per day.

This statement shows the immense saving of labor that can be effected by keeping cows selected on their records. It is too hot weather to work around and bother with four unnecessary cows if the smaller herd, as indicated above, brings as good a return. If it pays to milk a cow it pays to milk a good one. The herd needs pruning of the dead, unprofitable wood. Dairy records of individual cows show conclusively which to lop off. Blank forms are supplied free of charge on application to the Dairy Commissioner, Ottawa.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

The Review does not hold itself responsible for opinions expressed by its correspondents

To the Editor of the Review.

Sir,—It is really refreshing these dog days to read the medical health officer's explanation for the non-performance of his duties as contained in your paper of Tuesday. The autocratic ruler of all the Russias has no greater power over his people than has our M.H.O. over the Health Department of our city, by virtue of the authority conferred upon him under the Public Health Act. He has absolute power to abate all nuisances and, if necessary, may call to his assistance all constables and peace officers, and such others as he may think fit, in the performance of his duties. If he has no power to act, why was he appointed and why are we paying him his salary?

Yours truly,

A CUNNING WEASEL.

The Trick by Which He Trapped His Big Rat Antagonist.

Once a sawmill in a western town was infested with rats, which, being unmolested, became very numerous and bold and played round the mill among the men while they worked during the day. But one day there appeared on the scene a weasel, which immediately declared war on the rodents.

One by one the rats fell victims to the weasel's superior strength, until only one very large, pugnacious rat was left of the once numerous colony. The weasel had a go at the big rat several times, but on each occasion the rodent proved more than a match for his slender antagonist and chased the weasel to a hiding place.

Shortly thereafter the weasel was seen busily digging under a lumber pile near the mill. He was engaged for some time, but later appeared again in the mill, seeking his old enemy. He soon found him and at once renewed hostilities. As usual, after a lively tussle the rat got the better of the argument, and the weasel ran, pursued closely by the rat, straight to the hole under the lumber pile.

He ran in, still followed by the rat, but immediately reappeared round the end of the pile and again dodged into the hole behind the rat. Neither was seen again for some time, but the weasel finally reappeared, looking no worse for the fight.

The curiosity of the men in the mill being aroused, they proceeded to investigate the hole under the lumber pile. They found that the weasel had dug the hole sufficiently large at the opening to admit the rat, but had gradually tapered it as he proceeded until at the other end it barely allowed his own slender body to pass.

When the rat chased him into the large end of this underground tunnel he quickly slipped through, and while the rat was trying to squeeze his large body into the smaller part of the hole the weasel dodged in behind him, caught him in the rear and in a place where he could not turn round and finished him at his leisure.—Harper's Weekly.

POISON IN FLOWERS.

Dainty and Beautiful Blossoms In Which Lurks Death.

When the good friar in "Romeo and Juliet" reflected upon the properties of the simple flower, "within whose infant rind poison hath residence and medicine power," his observation embraced a goodly category of well known flowers whose secretions furnish the world with so many poisons.

For instance, the laburnum, which has been compared to a fountain of gold leaping into the sun—a most charming sight—is one of the most poisonous things imaginable, inasmuch as it is poison in leaf and flower and seed. Even the grass growing beneath it is poisonous by reason of its proximity to the innocent looking blossoms overhead, and it has been found necessary to guard against cattle eating this grass for fear of fatal results.

The bulbs of such dainty and beautiful flowers as the narcissus, hyacinth, jonquil and snowdrop secrete the most deadly poisons, not to speak of the oxalis, the monkshood and the foxglove, all of which furnish noxious liquors sufficient to destroy life.

To these may be added certain of the crocuses, the lovely lady's slipper, the quaint old jack-in-the-pulpit and the laughing little buttercup. The latter, despite its most innocent appearance, is one of the worst of the poisonous flowers. Even the cow is aware of that and carefully avoids it. The cousins of the buttercups, the peonies, the larkspurs and the rest, all contain toxic fluids.

Another source of deadly poison is the olenader tree, while the bark of the superb catalpa tree contains many deadly doses.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

INTERNATIONAL RAILWAY BOARD IS A PROBABILITY

Chairman Knapp of the U.S. Interstate Commerce Commission, and Hon. J. P. Maybee, Head of the Railway Commission of Canada, Will Confer With Regard to an Arrangement.

Washington, July 15.—An international railway commission with supervisory authority over the railways of the United States and Canada probably will be the result of the action yesterday by the Government in the appointment of Chairman Martin A. Knapp of the Interstate Commerce Commission, as the representative of the United States to confer with Hon. J. P. Mabee, chief of the Railway Commission of Canada, on the subject of the joint control of international traffic rates.

It is understood that meetings between Mr. Knapp and Mr. Mabee will take place in the United States or Canada, or both, during the summer, and, upon the completion of the conference, a report with recommendations will be made by the commissioners, either jointly to both Governments, or separately to their respective Governments.

The appointment of Judge Knapp and Mr. Mabee is the result of a considerable period of correspondence and diplomatic interchange between Canada and the United States, in which it was pointed out that the increasing traffic between the two countries would render full control over rates in the future more difficult unless some joint action was taken.

It was realized that the acquisition of Canadian terminals by American roads, and of American roads and terminals by Canadian railways, presented ever-increasing difficulties. In the present circumstances, it is not possible to compel railway or express companies to establish joint through rates to and from points in the two countries. The reasonableness of the rates between points in the United States and points in Canada also is a question of serious importance to shippers. In order to determine any given question as to rates that may arise, it is necessary for the shipper to institute a proceeding before the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Canadian Railway Commission, and even then the result is not satisfactory.

Out of this situation grew the suggestion that a joint international commission should be created, which should have supervisory authority over all interstate and international transportation lines, whether by rail or water, between the two countries. It has not been determined yet whether such a commission might better be created by concurrent legislation, or whether it might better be established through treaty arrangement between the two countries. At the conferences that subject will be discussed and very likely determined.

While no definite arrangements have yet been perfected for the conference, it is likely that Chairman Knapp and Mr. Mabee will meet in Ottawa some time in August. It is not improbable that a subsequent conference may be held in Washington. It will be the effort of the representatives of the two Governments to adjust the matter so as to make it possible to submit a report and recommendations before the beginning of the session of the American congress in December.

Ottawa, July 15.—Those interested in navigation here are beginning to feel anxious about the depth of the water in the Ottawa River. On June 13 it stood at 13 feet at the foot of the locks and now it has gone down to 9 feet 9 inches, a drop of three feet three inches within the last month.

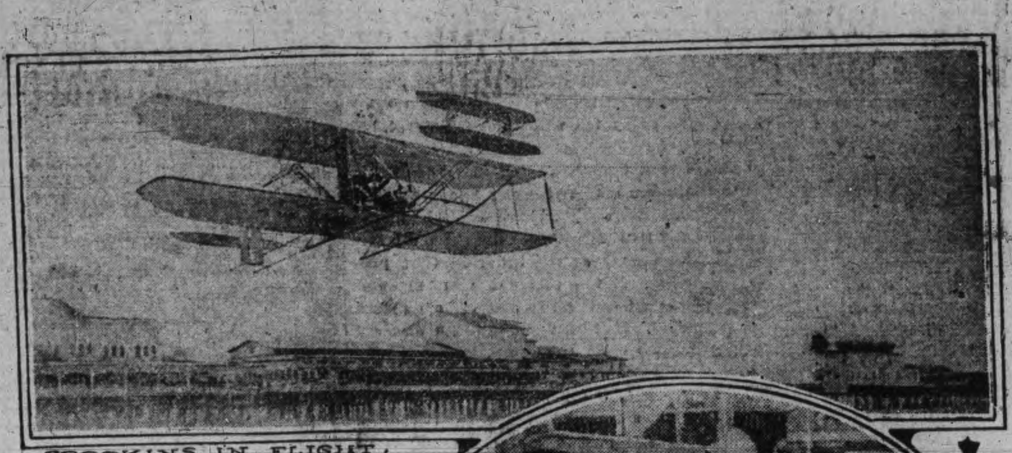
BROOKINS AND HIS MACHINE AT TORONTO MEET



BROOKINS IN FLIGHT.

WALTER BROOKINS.

Walter Brookins, in a Wright aeroplane, was acclaimed by 50,000 people at Atlantic City, N. J., as "king of high fliers," after a sensational drive into the clouds in which he broke all former records for height.

Official figures are not at present obtainable, but the engineers who are working out the exact altitude reached by the intrepid sky pilot credit him with having exceeded 6,000 feet. The officials representing the council of the Aero Club of America announce that he has smashed all records.

The barograph, an instrument for recording altitude, which Brookins carried into the clouds with him, registered 6,100 feet, and, from the measurements made from the beach, the experts say, that in their judgment, the barograph's record is practically accurate.

For a little more than one hour and two minutes the young aviator remained in the air, making sweeping circles more than two miles in diameter, but every moment going higher, until the aeroplane looked little more than the size of a huge bird.

BEES SWARM IN A TROLLEY CAR

New York, July 14.—A swarm of bees tried to hive in a trolley car of the Bloomfield avenue line, occupied by 50 men and women between Verona and Caldwell yesterday. They were not driven off for nearly 20 minutes. While the crew assisted by a few passengers attacked the bees, the women ran screaming from the car as soon as it was stopped, and did not board it again until they were sure that the last bee had been chased out. Several men jumped out of windows.

Frank Amburg, the conductor of the car, says that he saw the swarm approach, but thought it would fly over the car. When he entered the vestibule, he tried to enter the car and shut the door, but was not quick enough.

SCOTLAND YARD MEN ARE SEARCHING FOR H. CRIPPEN

Discovery of a Body in the Celler of His House in London, Eng., Leads to Belief That He Has Murdered His Wife—Once Practiced in Toronto.

London, July 15.—Scotland Yard authorities to-day are bending every effort to locate Dr. Hawley Crippen, an American dentist, who disappeared last Saturday. The body of a woman, supposed to have been that of his wife, who was formerly Belle Elmore, a noted singer, was found late Wednesday night buried in the cellar of their house, No. 30 Hilldrop Crescent, Islington, on the outskirts of London. The head had been crushed to a jelly and the body mutilated.

The first thing the police did yesterday was to cable to the police of American ports asking them to search incoming steamers for Crippen, who was described with the aliases of Peter Crippen and Franckel Crippen. The police believe that he sailed on Saturday. They state that he is accompanied by Ethel Clara Leneve, a French woman, whom he had recently introduced as his wife. This woman, the police state, is believed to be dressed in male attire. Before leaving Hilldrop, Crippen sent out for a boy's suit, and this, the police surmise is now being worn by his companion. Miss Leneve was the doctor's stenographer.

Despite the calling in of all the neighbors, the police have been unable positiveley to identify the decomposed body found in the cellar as that of Mrs. Crippen, though they are firmly of the belief that it was that of the famous singer. None of the neighbors have seen Mrs. Crippen since February, when her husband gave it out that she had gone to the continent for a visit. A short time afterwards there appeared a notice in the papers that Mrs. Crippen had died abroad. Then another woman, also known as Mrs. Crippen, appeared at the Hilldrop Crescent house. The dentist and the second "Mrs. Crippen" were seen in the house as late as last Saturday.

The belief is now held that Crippen's relations with women will reveal a startling career as a bluebeard according to the authorities.

New York, July 15.—Belle Elmore was a Brooklyn girl. The first news of her death was received here by Mrs. R. H. Mills, step-sister, now living in East Williamsburg, Queensborough, in a letter from London, dated April 7, and signed Dr. Crippen, which is nearly two months later than the death notice published in London papers.

Once Lived In Toronto.

Toronto, July 15.—Dr. Crippen lived in Toronto during 1896-98, having assisted in establishing the Dr. Munyon Medicine Agency here. T. H. Humble, advertising writer, remembers him. He was about 5 feet 5 inches in height, of light build, light complexion, light hair, mustache and neatly trimmed beard, said Mr. Humble. "He was fastidious in his dress and very pleasant in manner. He was married when he came here. Mrs. Crippen was an attractive woman, dashing and frivolous in manner. She was fond of display in dress, and was always decked in diamonds and other jewels. She was a woman who would attract attention anywhere. Dr. Crippen was very jealous of her."

ST. ANDREW'S LOCK OPENED

Winnipeg, July 15.—"There is no such word as impossible for the west," said Sir Wilfrid Laurier, at thee opening of St. Andrew's Lock, yesterday.

This is the first link in the Government's trans-prairie scheme of waterways, and when completed will cost about $1,500,000.

The lock, which has a lift of 21 feet, is a splendid specimen of concrete construction, 290 feet in length and 45 feet in width. It has raised the level of Red River at Winnipeg over five feet. The dam, 788 feet in width, is of camose tip type, and is the only one on this continent. There is another at Rose, France.

Hon. Mr. Pugsley, Minister of Public Works, officially declared the lock open to the free commerce of the Provinces of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba.

Sir Wilfrid spent a busy day. In the morning he visited the store of the T. Eaton Co., and lunched with the president. St. Andrew's occupied the afternoon, and a garden party, given by Sir Daniel McMillan, the Lieutenant-Governor, and Lady McMillan, filled the remainder of the day.

IMMIGRATION OFFICIAL WAS SUSPENDED

Ottawa, July 15.—An unintentional injustice was done an immigration official at Windsor in reporting the recent incident in which W. J. Taylor of Woodstock was concerned, when he was confused with the official who had caused the trouble. It was not Mr. Gilboit, but Arcene Dufour who has been suspended for a month and will be given duties that will remove him somewhat from contact with the public. His previous record was good.

MONTREAL FINANCIER SELLS OUT TO PRESIDENT HARRIS

Montreal, July 15.—What was known in financial parlance as the Forget-Osler group, which had acquired a great deal of Nova Scotia Steel stock, and who were defeated at the battle of New Glasgow, has ceased to exist, and for cause. In other words, Rudolphe Forget has sold out his 20,000 shares to President Harris and his associates for about $2,000,000, and thus gets out of "Scotia" affairs altogether.

It is understood that the upper province people began to realize that the provincial feeling was being worked too strongly by their opponents, hence their desire to part company with their stock. It is also understood that Forget wanted to engage in a bull campaign in the Quebec merger, hence his desire to make use of the money locked up in Scotia.

It is pretty well understood that $2,000,000 is the correct figure, and that $300,000 is the profit cleaned up by the Forget faction.

There was a dramatic scene on the Stock Exchange when, at 2.30 Rudolphe Forget, Robert Harris, president of the Scotia, and J. W. McConnell walked into the Exchange arm in arm, thus giving evidence that the war was over. The street believed it anyway, and the stock, which opened yesterday morning at 81 1-2, advanced to 86 on a fair turn over.

President Harris of the Nova Scotia Steel Co., announced last night that the upper province representation on the board will be increased at a very early date, and that he will be able to announce that the new directors will be men of the very highest business ability.

BIG FIRE AT OWEN SOUND

Owen Sound, July 15.—The dry kilns of the Keenan Woodenware Co. were totally destroyed by a fire which started at 5 p.m., and which was still burning at 9 p.m., though under control. All the kilns were practically full of stock. The fire at one time was a solid mass 20 feet high and a hundred feet square.

The loss will be in the neighborhood of $20,000, pretty well covered by insurance, mostly in Lloyds and Rimouski companies.

The firm will start immediately to rebuild the dry kilns, and expect to be running again in thirty days.

GERMANY APPROACHED FOR PEACE

London, July 15.—During the debate on the naval expenditures in the House of Commons yesterday afternoon, Premier Asquith reiterated that it was the desire of the British Government to come to a friendly agreement with Germany, looking to the curtailment of armaments.

"I wish," said the Prime Minister, "that an arrangement could be reached with Germany for a reduction of the naval expenditure. This Government has approached the German Government on the subject, but the latter can do nothing, owing to the navy law on their statute books. That being so, we must make our program accordingly."

Mr. Asquith repudiated the suggestion that the British expenditure was in any sense hostile to Germany. He declared that the relations between the two countries were most cordial, and pointed out that by April, 1913, Great Britain would only have 25 Dreadnoughts to Germany's 21.

St. John, N.B., July 15.—Inspectors appointed by creditors of J. T. Whitlock, late cashier of St. Stephen's Bank, have preferred the following statement of his affairs with the bank: Notes made by him for his own benefit, $60,590.56; other notes made by him as collateral, $19,699.50; joint notes in which his name is one of many, for money largely used by others, $63,387.90; notes on which he is one of many endorses, $200,766.77.

Total liability direct, indirect, $344,444.73.

Three notes are held by various persons and banks and are secured by collaterals which at time were marketable. A large amount of the discounts with the St. Stephen's Bank will be paid by other endorsers or from collateral security. The total assets, consisting of stock, bonds and real estate have a par value of $391,146.20.

A PAIR OF MAN-BIRDS HAD FALL

Duisburg, Rhenish Prussia, July 15.—Herr Strack, the aviator, during a flight with a monoplane yesterday, fell from a height of 100 feet. The machine was wrecked, but Strack escaped with slight injuries.

Bournemouth, Eng., July 15.—A. Rawlinson, the English aviator, fell with his biplane last evening, while making a flight at the aviation meeting. One leg was broken. The machine was smashed.

At the Toronto Meet.

WOULD BE END TO ARBITRATION

London, July 15.—At The Hague conference, Mr. Ewart, continuing on behalf of Canada, contended that there was no argument to show there had been British laxity in enforcing its view of the treaty, for if the tribunal took that as an argument and gave effect to it there must forever be an end to international arbitration, or there must be an end to international endeavors among nations to get along with one another in the best possible fashion.

In Canada they knew that Canada was part of the Empire, they were prepared to take bad with good, and sometimes suffer for the benefit of the Empire. Locally there might be some irritation, but better men had larger views of the interests of the Empire as a whole, and they could not in widespread empire help these difficulties arising.

MAY HAVE BEEN MURDERED

Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., July 15.—Word was received here from Nipigon district that the body of Geo. Grant, who was drowned there, was recovered and would be sent to the Soo for burial.

Two of the other persons drowned at the same time are said to have had $1,100 in gold in belts about their bodies.

There are rumors to the effect that the other two and Grant were robbed and drowned or shot.

NEAR BEER IS INTOXICATING

St. Catharines, July 15.—Yesterday Magistrate Campbell gave judgment in a case in which the question was whether "Proxy," in other words, the near or pale beer now being manufactured by the breweries for sale in local option municipalities and unlicensed hotels, is intoxicating or not.

The magistrate held that "Proxy" is intoxicating, seeing the man was drunk, and fined the hotelkeeper $100.

FIREMEN HAVE DESPERATE FIGHT

New York, July 15.—With the knowledge that any moment a huge tank in which there were half a million cubic feet of gas might blow up, with probable appalling loss of life and the destruction of many buildings. Chief Croker, Deputy Chief Skelly and the fire-fighters brought to the scene by two alarms, battled desperately for an hour and a half to subdue a fire in the stair factory of J. J. Wallace & Co., 508 East 19th street. The fire was stopped thirty feet from the tank.

World's Record Marksmanship.

Wakefield, Mass., July 15.—In a phenomenal exhibition of marksmanship, which continued until after 7.30 o'clock last night, Corpl. Perry B. Scofield of Company E, 5th Massachusetts, of Bedford, nearly doubled the world's record for 500 yards at the Bay State rifle range.

He scored 116 consecutive bull's-eyes. The previous world's record, held by Capt. Stephen W. Wise, inspector of small arms practice of the 6th Massachusetts, was 60 consecutive "bulls."

COAL RESULTS

We sell the very best quality of hard coal, as good as we know how to buy.

¶ Are you getting results from the coal you are now using? Are you sure it's good? Are you burning it the right way?

¶ There is a deal of difference in how you handle the range or furnace. Our long experience tells us that fact, and we are ready to advise any in doubt as to the best way to make use of coal as fuel.

WHAT A RIPE EGG DID

Mr. A. R. Peacock, of Pittsburg, got a ripe egg at breakfast a few days ago. Being a millionaire, he could do more than turn up his nose and try another. In revenge, he has resolved to start a hen farm, declaring that it appears the only way a person can get a strictly fresh egg and a tender bit of chicken was for a man to have a poultry plant of his own. It will cost $60,000. But we can get fresh eggs cheaper than that. We can also enjoy nearly all the really essential things of life on the same plane as the very rich. We are saluted by just the same breeze as the millionaire, and the same restful sleep that closes our eyes, and refreshed the monopolist also closes the eye of the man who carries the lunch box. Monopolist! What monopoly has he on friendship, the poor have their real friends more often than the rich. Can he corral health? Has he the love of a nation in his vault? What sight more beautiful that the little family waiting at the door for "daddy" as he comes marching home from work. For him, for a trifle the daily paper becomes a willing servant of the working man, and tells him as cheerfully the world-wide news, as it does the millionaire. The sun shines for him, the bird sings for him, and kind Providence watches him as gently as [illegible] on the throne. We can[illegible] be rich, but we can nearly all enjoy nearly all the things a rich man finds necessary to his happiness.

AT OTTAWA

Day by day the United States Government is drawing ahead of the Canadian Administration as established at Ottawa in honesty and efficiency. The latest advance is that President Taft has undertaken the reform of the system of dealing with United States river and harbor improvements. Improvements are to be systematically planned for years ahead by governments' engineers, whose recommendations will form the basis of Congressional action.

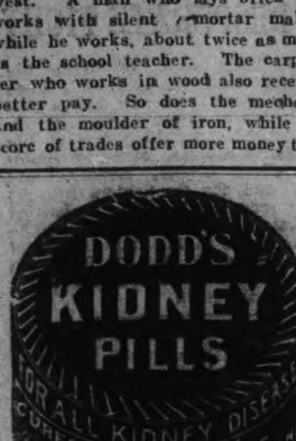
That is exactly what the Laurier Government, as personified by the slippery Mr. Pugsley, will not do. It forms no general plan. It decides upon each expenditure for party purposes; and in the general confusion it manages to slip in all sorts of wasteful pieces of business, such as the sawdust wharf deal. It shows not a sign of pursuing any such business like method as that initiated by the United States

Again, the United States authorities effected marked improvements in the United States Printing Bureau at Washington. What has the Laurier Government done at Ottawa? It refused in 1908 and 1909 to grant an investigation which would have exposed the graft that was going on in the Printing Bureau, and it in 1910 has been forced to acknowledge that much graft has been going on for years.

CAN YOU BLAME THEM

A page of advertisements for teachers appear daily in the Toronto papers It is a case of the niggardly salary in Ontario, and the call of the west. A man who lays brick and works with silent mortar makes, while he works, about twice as much as the school teacher. The carpenter who works in wood also receives better pay. So does the mechanic and the moulder of iron, while a score of trades offer more money than is paid to these workers in flesh and blood these moulders of mind. It is only recently that the awakening has commenced.

A man is careful as to whom he hires to drive his motor car and pays him a good salary. It is a salary better than many a teacher gets to guide a class. A good chef who tickles the appetite and fills the stomach is better paid than the principal of a school. Can you blame the teachers for going where the call of money is louder, can you blame the youth of the land for taking some other profession?



THE QUESTION OF THE HOUR

PETERBOROUGH HAS FINE FRONT YARDS. THE EVIDENCE OF CARE ON THE PART OF THE CITIZENS IS EASILY SEEN. THE VINES AND FLOWERS TELL OF GOOD TASTE. BUT OH! YOU GARBAGE PILE IN THE BACK YARD. ISN'T IT NEARLY TIME THAT SOME ONE WITH EXECUTIVE ABILITY AND BACK BONE TOOK HOLD OF THIS NUISANCE? BECAUSE THE CITIZENS DID NOT CARRY THE BYLAW DOES NOT MEAN THAT THE GARBAGE QUESTION IS NOT A LIVE ONE OR ONE THAT DOES NOT NEED IMMEDIATE ATTENTION. THOSE THAT VOTED FOR IT WANT THE QUESTION LOOKED AFTER, AND DOUBTLESS MANY OF THOSE WHO HAVE BEEN BURYING THE REFUSE IN THEIR YARDS WOULD NOT NOW MIND PAYING A FEW CENTS TO HAVE THE STUFF CARTED AWAY. IT'S NOT A GREAT PROBLEM. LITTLE WELLAND LONG AGO PASSED A GARBAGE BY-LAW, AND ON CERTAIN DAYS A MAN CALLS AND EMPTIES THE REFUSE FROM A TIN OR PAIL INTO A WAGON AND DRIVES AWAY WITH IT. IS THERE ANYTHING VERY DIFFICULT IN FRAMING UP A BY-LAW TO MEET THE REQUIREMENT? IT DOES NOT REQUIRE A GREAT DEAL OF THOUGHT TO GRASP IT. LET A PROVISION BE MADE THAT THOSE WHO LIKE FILTH AND FLIES CAN KEEP IT WITHOUT COST.

THE MAN ON WATER

"Put all your eggs in one basket and keep your eye on the basket." Andrew Carnegie is said to have coined that expression. His rise from a poor lad is known the world over. A man on Water street was washing off a dairy wagon last evening. There was a leak in the hose and half the water escaped through the hole while the other half flowed weakly through the nozzle. There's a leak in most of our lives, in the lives of the sinner and saint, in the rich and noted, in the poor and obscure. We will not concentrate. In baseball men who can pitch are not supposed to be first basemen or catchers. And 1st basemen are not supposed to be pitchers or catchers. In law, the man who is strong on technicalities is not usually the eloquent one. There is the physician who is an authority on certain diseases. He conserves his spare time securing more light on his life work. Most of us have no life work. Our work is governed by the whistle and commences with it. The rest is idleness. Not until we have learned the value of time, and an ideal, will we be more than partial successes, while many will wake up to find that they have been rank failures. We have no special ambition beyond the next holiday, no special interest in our work other than the opening of the pay envelope, or getting the check cashed. And time ticks us on with little growth in ability, in power, in personality or in anything that goes to make a marked man or a notable woman. The case of Stewart, of Guelph, comes to mind. He worked in a cooper shop. Every spare moment he studied. His fellow workmen made merry over his industry, but Stewart studied on. One day he threw down his tools. To-day he is a professor in a university. From a cooper shop to a chair in a university is a silent tribute to a conservation of time and energy in the right direction. The poorest subject has as much time as King George, Emperor of India and ruler of the Dominion over the seas. He can demand fortune and success, and nearly always he can attain it if he does not turn back in the struggle.

DISCOVERY

We can never get past Columbus. The Halifax Herald has a long editorial on this immortal. The writer points out that he came back in irons after his third voyage to the new world. He died later, obscure and broken down at Valledoid with little knowledge of what he had accomplished. What odds if you are not appreciated, if you are treated lightly, or contemptuously. If you are ignored or hated. Cheer up that's a good sign. You are not a dead one. Every one treads lightly when they are in the presence of a corpse. They speak softly and remove their hats. You are a live member. Do something, achieve something, be something. There are few new countries to discover, few new rivers to explore or mountains to name. But from the great and inexhaustible storehouse of the unknown are secrets to be wrested, more profound than the mystery of the New World four hundred and eighteen years ago. Have you an idea worth while. Give it out. Many a man has the needed thought that he withholds till the hour is too late. This is the hour. To-morrow never is. There are greater things than flying machines to be discovered—what of the flight of the soul?

NO ROOM FOR FEELING

"The Orangemen at Cantle, Quebec, narrowly escaped disaster on July 12th, when a train containing 500 of them and their friends, was saved from being wrecked by the fortunate discovery of obstacles placed on the track." This dispatch was wired broadcast, but it has since been denied. Feeling between Catholics and Protestants in Quebec may not be as happy as it is in Ontario yet there would be no act like this perpetrated by the most bitter enemy of the order in that province. If the attempt was made it would be the attempt of a diseased mind. If it was not made, a diseased mind spread the story, and if it was successful, and the Orangemen were wrecked, those who would give them first aid would likely be Catholics, Catholic priests and those angels of mercy, the Sisters of Charity. This world is too small, life is too brief and the grave too certain to hold enmity because of a difference in religious belief.

FATHER CONWAY

Father Conway is retiring from active work as a priest. For fifty-five years he has labored. That is a long time. During the flight of the decades he has lightened many a pain, and cheered many a stricken one. Fifty-five years of work among men and women and children as a priest would provide material from the field of reality to outrival the pen of the greatest mind, or the flight of the widest fancy.

The sick, the dead, the dying, he was there. The marriage; he has often officiated. In light, in shade, in sunshine and sorrow, Father Conway figured. He was a priest, but he was a man, and it was for his human side that he is beloved. To-day is a fitting tribute to the one who now retires from active life, to that higher life of meditation.

THE POINT OF VIEW

THE LOVE OF A DOG.

By Walter R. Hadwen, M.D.

Have you known the love of a dog, my dear?
Have you known the love of a dog?
A love that clings in its speechless awe
To virtues that none but a dog e'er saw,
That knows no limit in Nature's law,
But speaks with its eye and its fondling paw—
Have you known the love of a dog?

Have you felt the love of a dog, my dear?
Have you felt the love of a dog?
A love that only the lover knows,
That breathes its warmth when the harsh wind blows,
That gains in its strength when weaker grows
The love you had pined for in human woes—
Have you felt the love of a dog?

Have you tested the love of a dog, my dear?
Have you tested the love of a dog?
A love that bows in its wounded pride
To the angered soul and its angered chide,
And creeps the closer, as if 'twould hide
Its depth of reproach, to its master's side—
Have you tested the love of a dog?

Have you seen the love of a dog, my dear?
Have you seen the love of a dog?
Have you seen its strength at a master's grave?
A love that peasant or prince may crave,
A love that glows in the faithful brave,
With death to face or a life to save—
Have you seen the love of a dog?

Can you paint the love of a dog, my dear?
Can you paint the love of a dog?
Would you paint the lily of spotless white,
Or a rose's blush in the morning light,
Or the dauntless hope, that still wings its flight,
When the last ray fades in the hero's sight?
Then paint me the love of a dog.

Can you learn the love of a dog, my dear?
Can you learn the love of a dog?
Would YOU be loyal and brave as he?
Would YOU be as true in your misery?
Would you stay a slave where you might be free?
Or kiss the hand of your tyranny?
Then learn the love of a dog.

DICKEY'S ATONEMENT

The Romance That Was Played After the Tragedy.

By SARAH B. KENNEDY.

Miss Delaney, who had been to Washington and seen several theatrical "stars," might tilt her nose as she pleased, but the fact remained that the entertainment given by the "Smithville Thespians" was a success. Miss Delaney said the performance was lacking in "artistic finish," but Smithville went and paid its money without regret and laughed as it had not laughed in years. True, the intention of the Thespians was not to make people laugh, for in their self adulation they had essayed a tragedy. But from tragedy to comedy was an easy step with Dickey Holt in the cast. Something was always sure to happen to Dickey.

That which befell him this particular night seemed trivial in its nature, but was farreaching in its consequences. He quite forgot that afternoon to purchase a pair of long hose to wear with the knee breeches of the colonial costume in which he was to enact the heavy villain and at the last moment bribed the maid from the girls' dressing room to surreptitiously borrow a pair for him. These he donned so hurriedly that he failed to notice the owner's name worked in bright silk just below the knee. But there were opera glasses in the house, and soon the audience knew what he did not. The applause accorded him was as unexpected as it was gratifying, and he looked compassionately at John Moore, the "leading man," who thought to reap all the honors. But in the most thrilling scene of the second act, where his villainy was denounced, there came an awful moment.

"You are a penniless impostor!" stormed John, giving the lines as they were. "Why, the very shoes in which you stand are not your own!"

And then before Dickey could make his grandiloquently scornful reply a small boy in the front row rose and cried excitedly:

"And neither is the stockings his, for they've got my sister Belle's name on 'em!"

After that a permanent return to pompous tragedy was impossible. Even John Moore's imposing voice and Jessie Lane's well simulated tears failed to keep the spectators in awe. Dickey's stockings were the "stars of the goodlie companie," and every time he appeared he was greeted with shouts and applause. Though the delighted audience went out into the night regretting no penny spent for tickets, behind the scenes Dickey had the whole troupe about his ears. But the only criticism that hurt him was Jessie Lane's. With Jessie he had long believed himself in love, and it hurt him when she said:

"You quite spoiled most of my part, and you made my poor little sister Belle more miserable than I can tell you."

The next night he called upon her to make his peace and found John Moore in the parlor ahead of him.

"Oh, I have quite forgiven you," laughed Jessie, "but Belle has vowed vengeance against you, and if you are wise you will go out yonder on the porch and pacify her. You used to be quite a hero in her eyes."

So Dickey left John with Jessie and went miserably out to where Belle, aged sixteen, swung in a hammock and pouted. He had known and petted her in days gone by, and he thought soon to smooth her ruffled plumage. Instead he found her obdurate and full of reproaches. However, he must pacify Jessie's sister. So Dickey spent the evening by the hammock. The next time he came it was the same. John sat with Jessie, and he was banished to the porch and Belle. That young lady had framed an elaborate program of reparation for the humiliation to which she had been subjected. He must bring her bonbons and flowers and sing to her in the summer moonlight to his mandolin. Dickey undertook these things in a spirit of penitence and martyrdom. Night after night he sat on the porch and strove to be amiable while mentally he was fuming against John. He sometimes wondered why nice girls like Jessie had to have small sisters.

During the second week of his enforced reparation he made a discovery. Belle had lengthened her dresses and twisted her braids into a knot on top of her small head, and with these personal changes there had come also a touch of coquetry to her manner that made her the most delightful companion. He found he was fretting less over John's advantage, but now and then the old jealous thoughts would come.

"Are you not almost placated?" he asked laughingly one night.

Belle answered with spirit: "Do you think six boxes of chocolate and three bouquets would atone for all that laughter in the dress circle and those catcalls from the gallery. No, indeed!"

Dickey acknowledged that she was right and went on playing the agreeable, and as he was as much philosopher as martyr he set himself to get all the pleasure possible out of his new role. It was really surprising how quickly time passed in Belle's presence. As she swung in the hammock with her lengthened skirts froufrouing about her she made him tell her all about his hopes in his profession and never doubted but that he would achieve his ambitions. Sometimes she talked of Jessie and wished, with a languishing glance into Dickey's eyes, that she were like her sister, "it would be so lovely to have a man like Dickey in love with her." He, looking close to find the coveted likeness, discovered she was very much more beautiful than Jessie and wondered that he had never known it before.

After six weeks of this sort of thing Belle sighed prettily and said she supposed he had spent quite enough time and money on her to salve her hurt and that he had better resume his attentions to Jessie. Of course she would miss him, she added, with drooping lids, but she trusted she was no usurer to claim more than her debt. Dickey went away with an odd sense of something lost tugging at his heart. The next evening he came, intending to go into the parlor and begin his rivalry with John, but somehow the lonely little figure in the hammock drew him aside, and he spent the evening as he had spent the preceding ones—in the moonlight.

"Goodby," he said at parting. "Tomorrow I really must break into John's game and recover my lost ground."

She sighed and then laughed so quickly that Dickey could scarcely separate the two. He stood confused for a moment, and when he recovered himself he found that he was still holding her hand and that she was watching him shyly. He went away with his brain in a whirl. In his efforts to soothe her feelings had he made the child love him? Far into the night he sat smoking and thinking, and in the morning the queer feeling was still in his breast, and Blackstone lay open but unread before him all day. In the afternoon as he left his office there was a commotion at the nearest street corner, and a runaway horse dashed into view, dragging a dogcart in which sat two girls, Jessie and Belle. The quick turn about the corner sent the cart careening on one wheel, and almost as Dickey recognized the occupants they were spilled in the dust. With a cry Dickey rushed forward and, passing one prostrate form, caught the other in his arms with words of solicitous endearment. But the figure drew resolutely away.

"This is not Jessie. This is"—

But Dickey only held her the closer. "Not Jessie, but the girl I love, the only girl I ever really loved! Let John take care of Jessie. Are you hurt, dear?"

There was a contented sigh against his shoulder. "I haven't any pain now, not even in my heart, which has often ached at your indifference."

"John and Jessie are to be married in the winter," she told him later.

"I'm glad of it. We'll dance at their wedding," he laughed. "But, dear, I'm only a poor young lawyer, and"—

"And I'm ages too young to marry, so I'll wait a whole year for you, and if you give up smoking and send me only one box of chocolates a week you can save no end of money."

And so it was arranged, and when Miss Delaney next spoke of the lack of artistic finish to that theatrical performance Dickey stoutly declared the "finish was the finest on earth" and held to his point.

A Japanese Romance.

Prince Ito, the Japanese statesman, married a geisha girl who saved his life. He was pursued during the struggle forty years ago between the followers of the mikado and the shogun. He took refuge in a tea house, where he implored a geisha to save him. Every Japanese house has a dust hole. As the ground floor is raised about two feet above the earth, a square hole is cut in the floor to serve as a receptacle for the sweepings of the rooms. With great presence of mind the geisha put Ito down this hole, which she covered with a board, placing a brazier on top. When the pursuers arrived they found a languid girl sitting by the fire, who expressed her surprise at their visit and assured them they were at liberty to look through the house. After a search they departed, disappointed, not one of them having thought of the dust hole.—Washington Herald.

The Queen of an Ant Colony.

The queen of an ant colony is at first winged. Just as soon as she has strength enough she picks a mate, and they have a marriage flight. When she comes back again she rubs off her wings and prepares to raise a brood. Although the queen lives to be thirteen years old, on an average, the only flying she does is on her nuptial flight, which might be compared to the honeymoon of a pair of newly weds. As soon as she gets back to earth she takes her abode in a piece of bark or other suitable place and remains there for nine months. There she raises a brood of workers; these workers go out and bring in food to the queen, and through the workers the ant colony is kept up. After the queen loses her wings the muscles undergo a physiological change. The substance of the muscles goes into the blood. The queen becomes so light that she would float on water.

The Rod Not Spared.

John Wesley's mother believed in birching children at the earliest possible age. Each one of her family was compelled to celebrate his fifth birthday by learning the alphabet by heart. In order that this task might be accomplished Mrs. Wesley, after issuing strict orders that no one should disturb her, shut herself up for six hours with the child and drove the letters into his brain with the aid of a rod. Mme. Quinet, a French contemporary of Mrs. Wesley, was an equally firm believer in the virtues of corporal punishment, but was not sufficiently strong to administer what she considered a satisfactory flogging. She therefore engaged a constable to call twice a week and flog her three children. If by chance they had not been naughty then the punishment was referred to the account of future transgressions.—London Chronicle.

"If I had a dollar for every time a barber has asked me if I wanted that mole removed," remarked a man the other day after he left a tonsorial shop and was drawing his hand across a smooth shaven face, "I would go down to the office in the morning and tell the company to give my job to some one who really needed money, and then I would start on a long trip and just enjoy myself the rest of my days. Every time I strike a new barber he asks me if I want him to remove that mole, and I tell him I do not. As a rule, I can train a barber in four lessons not to ask the question, but a man can't always get the same lather peddler in a shop, and the question continues to come at me. As a matter of fact, I need that mole. If I wanted it removed I would not expect a barber to do it anyway. Why can't barbers refrain from asking the question? It isn't their mole. It's my mole. It's always been mine too."—Detroit News.

The Spanish Moors.

When the people of the rest of Europe were little better than barbarians the Spanish Moors were in the midst of a splendid culture. As early as the tenth century this country was the source of learning for all Europe. Their libraries, schools, arts, sciences, luxurious refinements and all round material and intellectual advancement differentiated them from the rest of Europe as clearly as ancient Greece was from the peoples that surrounded it.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

The Review does not hold itself responsible for opinions expressed by its correspondents

To the Editor of the Review.

Sir,—Your interview with the mayor and councillors on the garbage system of our city shows the silliness of their attitude. They assume that there is no law for the protection of our citizens, and hence nothing can be done, while in fact there is plenty of law but they do not insist on the good officers carrying it out. If, as they say, we need a garbage by-law, then why in the name of heaven have they allowed all these years to pass without passing one, as other cities do? It is absurd for them to say that if somebody else will introduce such a measure they will give it their consideration. Whom do they expect to introduce it, if they do not do it themselves? This sort of evasion has been going on for years, while people are suffering and going to their early graves in consequence of such neglect. The summer is half over, and nothing whatever has been done to mend matters. We have been treated to the same twaddle for the last ten summers.

Yours truly,
ACTION.

Peterborough, July 15, 1910.

AN EXCURSION FROM LINDSAY

About three hundred members of the Cambridge street Methodist church, Lindsay, are in the city to-day. they having chosen Peterborough as a suitable place for holding their annual excursion.

They arrived here on a special train about 10.30 this morning. The train stopped at Jackson Park where most of the passengers alighted. The afternoon was spent in games and races and the visitors are congratulating themselves on having been blessed with such a beautiful day for their outing.

Rev. J. P. Wilson, formerly of Peterborough, was with the party. They leave the park at seven o'clock tonight for home.

NO WONDER

James Wilson, of Peterborough, came to Lindsay on Tuesday to witness the celebration. Now, James is an Indian Ester in that town, and he was not long here until he carried a jag that was an incandescent success. He is a very modest individual when sober, but when "pickled" becomes very noisy. James varied the programme of tunes played on the Twelfth by lustily singing "Has Anybody Here Seen Kelly," and generally acted in a boisterous manner. He finally landed in the cells, and informed the police that if he was not liberated he would kill himself. He had a ticket in his possession for Peterborough, and he was shipped back to that city.—Lindsay Post.

KEENE

Special to the Review.

Keene, July 6.—A pleasant gathering met at the Methodist parsonage, Keene, on Monday afternoon, July 6th, to witness the marriage of Miss Jennie Brough and Mr. Charles Reynolds, of Peterborough. The ceremony took place at 5.30, and was performed by Rev. Mr. Johnston, in the presence of about twenty guests. After congratulations had been given, Dr. Harrison, in a neat and appropriate speech, presented the bride with a certificate of life membership in the W.M.S., the gift of her sister, Miss Maggie Brough of Keene, who also prepared the wedding supper, which was thoroughly enjoyed by those present. After supper the happy couple returned to Peterborough, where they will reside.

RAN DEAD HEAT

Sensational Race Between Lemberg and Neil Gow for Eclipse Stakes at London To-day

Special to the Review.

London, England, July 15.—Lemberg, the Derby winner, and Neil Gow, the latter owned by Lord Roseberry, ran a dead heat for the famous Eclipse stakes of 10,000 sovereigns, ($50,000) to-day, after a most sensational race. Dillon was on Lemberg, while Danny Maher, the American jockey, rode Neil Gow.

The purse was divided.

Six horses started. The betting favored Lemberg with Neil Gow a hot second choice.

GREEN SILK TENTS FOR GOVERNOR GENERAL'S CAMP

The Governor-General is going camping.

While there is nothing startling in this announcement it is nevertheless a social item of considerable interest. When the Governor-General goes camping it is no ordinary every day down the river outing paraphenalia he takes with him.

The firm of J. J. Turner and Sons, of this city, have just completed an order for twenty-six green silk tents which the vice-regal representative will have for the accommodation of himself and his party on their expedition to the Hudson Bay and British Columbia.

The Governor-General and his friends are no more immune from mosquito bites than the ordinary mortals and in consequence each tent will all be augmneted with a special inner misquito tent.

The local firm will ship the tents tomorrow.

TRAIN MEN SO FAR FAVOR STRIKE

Special to the Review.

Montreal, Que., July 15.—The strike vote of the Grand Trunk trainmen is not yet complete, but so far as it has gone it is stated to show a large majority in favor of a strike. As regards the position of the C.P.R. trainmen and their demands it is announced that the men will not sign the agreement as it now stands and have appealed the case to Sir Thomas Shaughnessy.

AN IMMENSE CROWD AT SACRED HEART LAWN SOCIAL

Seldom has a lawn social been crowned with such complete success in every way as that which was held last evening on the spacious grounds of the lately erected Church of the Sacred Heart.

It was the first function of this nature that has been held in connection with the church since its erection, and the large attendance and financial receipts of the evening must prove exceedingly gratifying to the committee who were in charge of the proceedings.

From five o'clock till after ten the grounds were thronged with people, and the excellent supper served was a magnet to the army of guests.

The 57th Regiment Band, under the leadership of Mr. Gliddon, was stationed at one end of the lawn, and furnished suitable music for the evening, several selections of favorite Irish melodies being heartily encored.

BIG SALE OF FLOWERS.

On entering the grounds one was immediately assailed by flower girls, and although their clamorings to buy from them did not take the form of song, many a floral combination adorning many bosoms testified to their successful selling abilities.

Quite a tidy little sum was realized from the sale of these flowers.

GAY ILLUMINATIONS.

Two large refreshment booths, gaily illuminated by Chinese lanterns, and in charge of attractive young ladies, were kept busy during the entire evening, catering to the wants of the thirsty patrons.

A MONSTER ATTENDANCE.

It is estimated that between three and four thousand people were on the grounds during the evening.

Mayor Morrow and other civic officials visited the scene about nine o'clock and congratulated Rev. Dr. O'Brien and the committee in charge on the splendid success which attended the function.

BIG RECEIPTS.

The merry-makers dispersed about 10.30.

About $500 was taken in through the sale of tickets and other sources

PROFESSIONAL MEN GUESTS OF LOCAL MERCHANTS

It has been the custom for the local lawyers and doctors to entertain the merchants as their guests on a biennial excursion.

Yesterday the latter reciprocated the much appreciated favors from the professional men of the city and gave a delightful excursion to Idyl Wyld.

The day was a glorious one and the supper served at Gore's Landing placed mine host Harris in fasting favor with the members of the party.

55 YEARS A PRIEST OF CATHOLIC CHURCH

Solemn High Mass Celebrated at St. Peter's Cathedral in Honor of Rev. Father Conway's Anniversary—A Ceremony of Much Interest—Presented With Address and Purse of Gold

The pioneer priest of the diocese of Peterborough, Rev. Father Conway, of Norwood, celebrated his 55th anniversary this morning. In honor of his long service to the Catholic ministry Solemn High Mass was celebrated at 8 'oclock this morning at St. Peters' cathedral. Father Conway, who is seventy-nine years of age, has retired from his parish, Norwood, and will live privately in Peterborough.

THE CLERGY PRESENT.

There were present in the sanctuary His Lordship Bishop O'Connor, Father Conway, Ven. Archdeacon Casey, Lindsay; Rev. Father McColl, rector of St. Peterborough's; Rev. J. P. McGuire, Downeyville. Rev. Father Schweitzer, St. Jerome's College, Berlin; Rev. George Whibbs, Campbellford; Rev. Father McGuire, Douro; Rev. Father Fitzpatrick, Ennismore; Rev. Frank J. O'Sullivan, Port Hope; Rev. Father Keeley, Kingston; Rev. Dr. O'Brien, of the Sacred Heart parish, and the priests of the cathedral staff.

ADDRESS AND PURSE.

The mass was celebrated by Father Conway with His Lordship on the throne. Father M. J. McGuire was deacon, Father Fitzpatrick sub-deacon, and Rev. Father Casey, of the cathedral, master of ceremonies.

At the conclusion of mass the following address was read by Ven. Archdeason Casey and a purse of gold from the priests of the diocese was presented Father Conway:

Reverend Dear Father Conway,—On this, the fifty-fifth anniversary of your ordination to the holy priesthood allow us, your brother priests, of the diocese of Peterborough, to congratulate you on the great length and success of your ministry, and join with you in returning thanks to Almighty God, the Giver of all good gifts, for His manifold graces and blessings during these long years.

It is not permitted many to see the golden jubilee of their sacred ordination. You have seen it and a lustre of years more. During your ministry you have witnessed the growth of the church in Ontario. You have met the Catholic pioneers who came to this province to establish for themslves homes in the wilderness. You witnessed and took part in the struggles they had to make, in order that the faith might be preserved to their children. You witnessed the battle for Separate schools, when bishops, priests and laymen united to secure the right of Catholic education in the school room. The early years of your priesthood were passed in the midst of this struggle. Then churches were few and far apart. Priests had to travel in the saddle to bring to the scattered settlers the consolations of hearing mass occasionally and of receiving the sacraments. To-day, magnificent churches, with resident priests, are found in all our towns and in most of our villages. Religious communities of both men and women have come to afford our children the highest education and to help fulfil the churche's cherished mission of mercy to the afflicted. Hospitals, Houses of Providence and Orphanages are now found in every diocese, where the poor and afflicted may find shelter. All these changes you have witnessed within the fifty-five years of your sacred priesthood. There is indeed much to recall to mind. As memory brings back the past, how many times you can say, "Magna pars fui."

During those years you have labored in many fields in the dioceses of Toronto and Peterborough. Everywhere your memory is held in benediction. By your fidelity to duty, by your zeal and earnestness you have ever endeared yourself to your flock. By your gentlemanly and upright conduct you have always held the respect and confidence of the non-Catholics among whom you have lived. The churches and Presbyteries you have built or enlarged, the good works you have done in the diocese of Toronto remain monuments to your zeal and energy. Of your work in this city of Peterborough we need not speak—"curcumspice." When called by the late Venerable Bishop Jamot to Peterborough as rector of the Cathedral in 1882 at a momentous time, soon after the diocese was formed, when everything was only beginning, you worked not only for the external glory of God, but for the extention of His reign in the hearts of men.

Sent by your bishop over twenty years ago to establish the parish of Norwood, with the mission of Havelock, you began at once to build the presbytery and improve the church. Norwood was soon a parish complete in all its requirements. About this time the village of Havelock, made a terminal point on the C.P.R., was becoming important. There was no church. Mass was said for the few Catholics in a private house. You seized the opportunity and purchased a building where the people might hear Mass regularly. As the town grew and the number of Catholics increased, a more central place was selected, and you began and completed the present church in Havelock.

During these twenty years you have labored for your people with the same active zeal which everywhere marked your ministry. You interested yourself in their temporal advancement, but their spiritual and eternal welfare became the dearest desire of your priestly heart. You were faithful to the duties of your office. While teaching catechism to the children, you not only enlightened their minds by the doctrine you imparted, but you inflamed in their hearts a love of virtue and an undying affection for Holy Mother Church, which now bear fruit in the increase of piety and in the more frequent reception of the sacraments. Whenever advice or consolation was to be given you were ever at hand. At the altar, Sunday after Sunday, you offered up the Holy Sacrifice for your people, and broke to them the Bread of Life. You preached no new-fangled doctrine, no popular theories, but the pure, unadulterated doctrine of Jesus Christ and of Him crucified. In the confessional the penitent always found you a loving father, and a prudent guide. When sick calls came, at any hour of the night and in all kinds of weather, you were ever ready. Full of kindness, you consoled the afflicted family and brought peace and resignation to the dying. Above all, your warm Irish heart opened to the little ones of the flock. To have them educated in truly Catholic principles was the one aim you had always in view. You sought to make them not only good Christians and good citizens, but worthy children of Holy Mother Church, and obedient followers of Jesus Christ. By word and example you led them along the way that leads to eternal life.

Now after so many years of strenuous labor in the vineyard of the Lord, He calls to you as He did to the Apostles, when they had returned from their mission, "Come apart and rest awhile." You can certainly claim a rest after the missionary work of so many years. You have fought the good fight. You have kept the faith. It only remains for you to await with faith, hope and charity, the crown of justice, which our Lord has promised to those who love and serve Him.

Again we congratulate you and ask a continual remembrance in the Holy Sacrifice and in your prayers. As a mark of esteem and loving fellowship we wish you to accept this purse in memory of this glad and joyful day and we pray that your remaining days may be days of peace and grace to be in God's good time followed by an eternity of glory with Jesus Christ, our High Priest.

Signed in behalf of the priests of the diocese of Peterborough.

The aged priest, who was honored by the mass and in recognition of whom so many fellow clergy had assembled, expressed his deep gratitude to His Lordship and the priests for their kind words and congratulations and their generous gift. He also gave his thanks to Almighty God for His goodness in allowing him so many years of health and strength to labor in His service.

He recalled some of the events of his lifetime, particularly those having to do with his residence in Peterborough and took advantage of the

SPORTING NEWS

A LIVE BILL FOR CITY LEAGUE FANS

The report from the West End camp these days is to the effect that the score board at Riverside Park on Saturday will show the T.A.S. with the lowest number of runs in the first game. The same thing has been said before, but this time the westerners hope to make good. The team has undergone a big change. "Happy" Brydie goes to the garden, and that means that there must be something out of the ordinary in the air. The man to work around the third cushion comes from the burg which Hans Wagner has made famous on the baseball map, and he has a reputation of being a hitter.

Heffernan will ramble round the first sack, and the outfield to be selected will be a particularly strong one. Either Rose or Cresswell will twirl.

Yebbie Flaherty will break into the game again and take Mike O'Brien's position. The remainder of the team will be the same as last Saturday.

The game should attract a large crowd.

The following are the probable line-ups:—

T.A.S.—Quinlan, p; McFadden, c; Flaherty, 1b; Corkery, 2b; Giroux, ss; Callaghan, 3b; Cahill or Doherty, lf; O'Brien, cf; V. Corkery, rf.

West Ends—Rose or Cresswell, p; Smith, c; Logan, 2b; Minorgan, ss; Condon, 3b; Gibson, lf; Campbell, cf; Brydie or Dickie, rf; Heffernan, 1b.

JAPANESE HEROISM.

The Brave Record of the Loss of a Submarine Vessel.

Subjoined is the translation of a message written by Lieutenant Tsutoma Sakuma, who was in command of the Japanese submarine No. 6, which foundered while maneuvering in Hiroshima bay. The message was found in the conning tower of the submarine after she had been brought to the surface:

"It is with the deepest regret that I write this message to describe the loss of this boat with my fellow officers and men, due to my own fault. I would here specially mention that all steps have been taken to raise her, my comrades and men working earnestly and calmly till the end. I ordered the ship to dive with the engine running, but as I found she went down too far I tried to shut the valves which admit the sea water to the ballast tank, but unexpectedly the chain working these valves broke, and I was left helpless, unable to control the boat. Meanwhile the tanks filled with water, and the boat went down at an incline of about twenty-five degrees. After striking the bottom the water began rushing in, the switchboard was immersed in water, all electric lights went out, the fuses burnt away, and the boat was filled with poisonous gases, so that we experienced the greatest difficulty in breathing.

"Under these conditions we worked our very utmost with the hand pumps to empty the main ballast tank, which, I believe, we succeeded in doing, although we could not read the gauges owing to darkness. No electric current was available, as I mentioned before, and our last hope of rising to the surface lay in working the hand pumps only.

"I write this in the dim light coming from the conning tower—11:45 a. m.

"I earnestly beseech his majesty to grant me forgiveness and to succor the families of my comrades and men who have lost their lives in this perishing boat. This is my only wish. 12:30 p. m.

"It is with the utmost difficulty that I can breathe, though I am sure we must have blown out the gasoline entirely from the tanks. I cannot continue any more. 12:40 p. m."—London Times.

A DOMESTIC TRAGEDY.

She Tried to Fascinate Hubby and Was Rudely Shocked.

She had been reading that a titled Englishwoman advises married women to flirt with their husbands. As she finished the article her husband came home to dinner.

She ran to meet him.

"A little late tonight, duckydoozelum," she said, with a dimpling smile.

"What's that?" he growled.

She looked at him archly.

"Don't you dare to kiss me!" she tittered.

"Gee," he cried, "I don't intend to! What put that in your head?"

She half closed her eyes and coyly surveyed him through the drooping lashes.

"Don't you want to sit here by me on the sofa?" she cooed.

"No, I don't. Why, you told me only yesterday that the springs were getting weak. Aren't you feeling well?"

She laughed softly and shot him a side glance and drew in her cheeks and flashed her white teeth and perceptibly winked.

He drew back suddenly.

"What's the matter with you?" he demanded. "Who are you imitating? Can't you make your face behave?"

She picked up the paper she had been reading and flung it into the decorated wastebasket.

"There's nothing the matter with me," she coldly replied.

"Just mugging for fun, eh? Glad of that. Stimson was telling me today about a lot of trouble his wife is having with her facial nerves, and I was afraid you'd caught it. Ain't that confounded dinner ready?"—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Popular Jokes.

The most popular joke which has been published in any language in the history of the world is stated to be that which appeared in an obscure corner of the Punch almanac for 1845. It read, "Advice to persons about to marry—Don't!" It would be interesting to know who was its author. Another, founded on a similar subject, was the "Advice to persons who have 'fallen in love'—Fall out!" One of the most brilliant things that ever appeared in our contemporary was the brief dialogue between an inquiring child and his impatient parent: "What is mind?" "No matter." "What is matter?" "Never mind."—Westminster Gazette.

Newcastle, N.B., July 15.—The problem of affording shelter and food for the thousands of homeless people at Campbellton still confronts the authorities, although the situation is partly being relieved. Growth of Indian Races.

The Indian has at least paused in his passing from the face of the earth if the statistics concerning births and deaths among about one-third of the Indian population in the United States which have just been compiled by the bureau of Indian affairs can be accepted as a criterion of the general condition of the red race. During the fiscal year 1909 there were 3,395 births and 3,178 deaths among 101,717 Indians. It was estimated there were 300,345 Indians in the United States, exclusive of Alaska, during the last fiscal year.—Washington Post.

A RAILWAY PROPOSITION

—Montreal Gazette.

What has recently been advanced in behalf of United States railways' claims to an increase in their freight charges, has been illustrated in the case of the Canadian roads in connection with the late award of the board acting under the conciliation law. From the nature of things wages enter more largely into the cost of operating the railways than in connection with any other industry. When to wages is added the cost of fuel and material in the production of which the cost of labor is a main factor, it may be said that there is no business which pays out so large a proportion of its gross receipts to the actual worker as the railway. Some statements just issued illustrate the point. In the year ending with June 30, 1909, the gross earnings of Canadian railways amounted to $145,056,000. Of this sum 43 1-2 per cent. was paid to the men who work and manage the lines. In the United States the percentage of gross earnings paid in wages during the same time was only 41 per cent. The difference of 2 1-2 per cent is not the result of divergencies in the rate of pay, but is to be ascribed to the fact that in large sections of the United States the population is much denser than it is in Canada; the trains there as a rule carry more passengers, more freight offers according to the length of line, and the same operating force takes care of a heavier volume of business. When it is remembered that the State of New York has a population as large as all Canada the situation in this regard may be realized. When it is urged that the pay on Canadian roads should be as high as on those in the neighboring parts of the United States some things are forgotten. That, however, is aside. Canadian roads must pay approximately the same as those over the border or they will not retain good men. When, however, they have to increase the rates of pay for their men and for their supplies, faster than they can increase their traffic and traffic earnings, they find their financial position growing weaker. The estimate is that in twelve years up to 1910 the cost of labor on the Canadian railways increased by 44 per cent., that of supplies, material and equipment, exclusive of lumber, by 65 per cent. The companies have been able to maintain their standing by the large and effective expenditure of money on track and rolling stock equipment. Tracks have been straightened and doubled, the grades on them reduced, and the lines laid with heavier rails. Bridges have been strengthened. The power of locomotives and the capacity of cars increased till a train's freight tonnage is almost or quite double what it was a score of years ago. The benefit has not all been to the railway share and bond holders. Rates have been reduced by some fractions of a cent a ton a mile. That seems nothing stated by itself, but that multiplied by the tens of millions of tons carried a mile means a large saving to those who pay transportation charges. The roads however, cannot continously go on spending money on improvements and increasing wages and operating outlays and maintain their financial standing unless they can also increase their earnings in proportion near to that of the growing demands upon them. The calculation is made that the increase to the trainmen just recommended by the board of conciliation when conceded, and made the basis of concessions to other branches of labor, will raise the percentage of the cost of wages on Canadian roads as a whole from 43 1-2 to about 54 1-2 per cent. of the gross earnings. Business men will appreciate what that will mean in its effect on the net earnings. A large increase in the cost of working the roads cannot be considered alone. If the companies are to meet their responsibilities, maintain their credit and keep themselves in a position to meet greater demands on their facilities, they must get more for services that cost them more.

QUESTIONS IN COURT

A Series That Moved an Observer to Turn Critic.

SOME GEMS HE PRESERVED.

The Lawyers Didn't Seem to See the Ridiculous Phase of the Inquiry, but It Loomed Large to the Man With an Idea That the Law Is Solemn.

A man who spent several days in a courtroom listening to the examination of veniremen was struck with the reflection that some shining legal minds would not be unduly dimmed by the infusion of a few of the principles of logic. The time taken up by attorneys in drawing the conclusion that a juror who lives at a given address makes his home there and then referring the conclusion to the juror for confirmation has not been computed, but any one mathematically inclined may figure it out by multiplying the following examples by any handy large round number:

"What is your occupation?"

"I am a switchman."

"On a railroad?"

The obvious answer which the juror's awe of his surroundings prevents him from making would be, of course, "No, in an ice cream parlor."

"Judge," said a juror, "I would like to be excused from service. When summoned I was making arrangements for my brother-in-law's funeral."

"Is your brother-in-law dead?" inquired the court.

It developed that he was.

"Now, Mr. Juror," came another question, "what is your age?"

"Forty-four."

"Forty-four years old?"

That is exactly what the juror meant. The lawyer guessed right the very first time.

Here is another flash that came to one of the attorneys. "Where do you live?" he asked.

"At 4416 Blank street."

"You reside there, do you?"

Once in awhile there is a funny answer which isn't to be wondered at considering the power of suggestion.

"Are you married?"

"Yes."

"Any family?"

"Two."

But the balance is well on the lawyers' side. Witness this: The questioner had asked if a juror was related in any way to any of the principals or witnesses in the case.

"I am a brother-in-law of Mr. Blank, one of the witnesses," was the reply.

"You married his sister, then?"

He had.

"Let me ask you now, Mr. Juror, have you formed any opinion about the guilt or innocence of this defendant?"

"I have."

"Is it a fixed opinion or is it one that could be changed by evidence?"

"It could be changed if the evidence were strong enough."

"Then you would not call it a definite opinion?"

"No."

"It is a vague opinion, then?"

"Yes."

"Now, Mr. Juror, follow me closely, if you please. You say your opinion is a vague one and not definitely fixed. Now, then, if that is the case and you went into that jury box and listened to the evidence adduced from that witness stand and heard the law expounded by the judge from that bench, would it not be possible for you to lay aside that opinion and concur in a verdict warranted by the evidence and the instructions of the court?"

"Yes."

The attorney, having received the same answer to his long question as to his short one, is perfectly satisfied and throws a triumphant look at his colleague, which says, "I knew I could get it out of him if I kept at him long enough."

Here is another astonishing deduction: A juror took the stand dressed in a blue uniform with brass buttons. Around his belt was strapped a money changer. The examining attorney looked at him long and searchingly and then said in a tone which admitted of no trifling:

"You are a street car conductor?"

It was the same attorney who forced this confession from another juror:

"What is your occupation?"

"I'm a bookkeeper for Blank & Co."

"You keep books in the office?"

Unmasked, the bookkeeper broke down and made a clean breast of it.

"Now, Mr. Juror, be good enough to state how old you are."

"Fifty-six years."

"How long have you resided in this state?"

"Fifteen years."

"Then you were not born here?"

The trapped man admitted the truth. Here is another:

"Were you born in Missouri?"

"No, sir."

"Oh, I see. Then you moved here from some other state." And then in a "come-come-don't-delay-the-court" tone of voice, "Where did you come from?"

"Chicago."

"Chicago, Ill.?"—Kansas City Times.

Unhappy Man!

"Yes, my old friend, I have been the victim of misfortune in all my love affairs. My first sweetheart died, the second jilted me, and the third became my wife!"

The Doctor Writes of Counterfeiters.

Hyannis, Mass., Aug. 17, 1905.

CHAS. H. FLETCHER, New York City.

Dear Mr. Fletcher:—I wish to congratulate you on your numerous victories over counterfeiters and imitators of Castoria, and trust the time is not far distant when these inferior and dangerous mixtures will be entirely suppressed.

You are right when you say in your advertisements that it is "Experience against Experiment."

I feel it to be an outrage, and an imposition upon the parents of little children that my name should be associated with imitations of Castoria, dangerous to the health and life of these little ones who too often fight their battles for life in vain.

Let me again commend you for the high standard you have maintained in the preparation of my prescription, and I confidently believe it is due to this scrupulous integrity you are indebted for the wonderful sale of Castoria to-day, and the steady growth it has had since I gave you the details of its manufacture in my laboratory thirty-three years ago.

Samuel Pitcher, M.D.

SEWAGE SYSTEM WILL BE FINISHED BY DECEMBER 1

Consulting Engineer Chipman Waited on Board of Works Regarding Pumping Station and Sewer Construction in South End -- City Engineer Too Busy to Take up Work Which Will be in Charge of Consulting Engineer.

Mr. Willis Chipman, C.E., the consulting engineer of the Board of Works, met with the board at a special meeting yesterday afternoon, when details concerning the construction of the new sewage system in the south end were decided upon.

Ald. Hicks was in the chair, and there were present also Mayor Morrow Aldermen Gillespie, Metheral and Duffus and City Engineer Hay.

The object in calling the meeting, Ald. Hicks explained, was to give the committee an opportunity of meeting Mr. Chipman and getting from him explanations on any points regarding the sewage system in the south-western portion of the city for the building of which a $30,000 by-law had been passed.

Mr. Chipman, upon being called upon by the chairman, produced a map and explained several technical details in connection with the system.

On account of the time it will take to prepare the plans and specifications it will be fully a month before tenders can be advertised for, and it will be about two weeks after that before the work can be commenced.

CITY ENGINEER TOO BUSY.

City Engineer Hay, in reply to Ald. Hicks, said he would be willing to take charge of the work if he had the time, but under existing conditions, felt that it would be impossible to do so. There were the usual amount of sidewalks to look after, thirteen sewer sections would have to be built, and the Smith street bridge called for his presence there twice daily.

This kept him busily employed all the time and the supervision of the new sewerage system would be exacting work and would require the closest attention.

WORK WILL BE FINISHED THIS YEAR.

Mr. Chipman said that his firm would undertake such work on the basis of two and a half per cent. of the contract price and $200 a month for a resident engineer. This figure applies to the work after the contract has been commenced and the preliminary advice and offices of Mr. Chipman will have to be paid for as well, of course. The pumping system and drainage work will both be completed this year, although it was the original intention of the board to let the drainage construction stand over till next year.

At yesterday's meeting it was the unanimous opinion, however, that the work it would be more satisfactory and economical to proceed with both this year, and contracts will be let for the two branches of the work. By this means there will be no necessity to engage an engineer for three months in the spring at a salary of $200 a month, for if the work of Mr. Chipman's assistant on the contract becomes too heavy for him to look after without assistance, an inspector could be appointed at $3 a day, at a saving of considerable expense. And besides, when the snow flies the work will all be completed, for the board will require both contracts to be finished by December 1st.

A motion to the effect that the work be proceeded with as outlined above, was introduced by Ald. Gillespie and Ald. Metheral and carried.

BOARD OF WORKS WILL ADVERTISE PAVING

Ald. Hicks, at yesterday afternoon's meeting, gave a report of the Board of Works visit to London, Toronto, Windsor, Detroit and Buffalo, the places the Board visited with a view of finding out what would be the best pavements to use in paving the sections of George and Charlotte street, the paving of which will be proceeded with in a short time.

The council, which will meet on Monday evening, will be notified of the Board's intention to advertise that the paving will be proceeded with.

HEAVILY FINED FOR COMMITTING AN ASSAULT

It doesn't pay to take the law in your own hands, and revenge, though it may be sweet, is an expensive luxury.

This morning at the police court, his Worship, Magistrate Dumble, imposed a fine of $20 on the young man, whom Mchael Douris, proprietor of the Boston Cafe, complained, assaulted him on the evening of last Monday. The Magistrate further decided that the defendant should pay all the costs of the case, and compensate the complainant for the injuries received. The total amount was $40.50, and it must be paid in two days. The alternative is sixty days in jail.

The accused had after being arrested, acknowledged to Chief Thompson, that he committed the offence, and he did so again when in the witness box this morning.

The particulars of the affair, briefly, are that last Monday afternoon the young man called at the cafe to collect two bills. The proprietor, Douris paid one, but did not settle for the other, as the time for payment was not due. An altercation took place and the result was that the young man was ejected from the premises. The actual cause, the complainant stated, was on account of the defendant having used strong language.

That same evening Douris boarded a street car for the purpose of taking in the fresh air. On the same car sat the young man. Arriving at Barnardo avenue, Douris left and walked up towards the Queen Alexander school. He was followed by the defendant and a friend. Arriving at a point near where the old G.T.R. Chemong line crosses Barnardo avenue, north, Douris was assaulted by both men. He was hit several times about the face and head. One of the turbinated bones in his nose was displaced and this necessitated treatment from a doctor.

He made his escape, and met a police officer, who had answered a call sent in by another young man, who had while out cycling, come upon the three men.

His Worship intends the result of the affair to go as a warning to any others who may feel inclined to take matters in their own hands and endeavor to bring about a reckoning with the use of their fists.

County Crown Attorney Wood, conducted the prosecution, Mr. F. D. Kerr acted for the defendant and Mr. G. N. Gordon for the complainant.

55 YEARS A PRIEST

opportunity to thank the people of this city for their kindness and goodwill to him. He referred feelingly to his relations with His Lordship in Toronto and elsewhere.

Father Conway said he was ordained by Bishop Count, Charbonnel, who was himself consecrated by the late Pope Pius IX, and therefore, he jocularly remarked, there was only one between himself and the Papacy.

Before closing he again expressed his thanks to the priests of the diocese, with whom he had lived so long in harmony and friendship—for the past twenty-two years. Now that he was going to rest he felt that the time given him should be used in thanking God for all that had been granted him during his life, and to prepare for the times when he should be called away.

AN OUTSTANDING OCCASION.

His Lordship said it was not given to many to witness a priest celebrating mass on the 55th anniversary of his ordination. He thanked God for the blessings Father Conway had received during his long years of priesthood.

He had known Father Conway longger than anyone present. He knew him from the day of his ordination, was associated with him in the Diocese of Toronto, and found him here when he came as Bishop of Peterborough. They had been united by a bond of friendship, which grew closer every year.

He congratulated Father Conway on the work he had done, and hoped the days of rest given him might add to his future glory in Heaven.

A NOTEWORTHY INCIDENT.

It is worthy of note that at a mass sung by the oldest priest in active service in Canada, and the only one in America ordained by Pope Pius IX., the master of cermonies was the youngest priest in the diocese, Father Casey.

A dinner to Father Conway, at which His Lordship and the visiting and local priests attended, was given at noon at St. Peter's Presbytery.

SIR WILFRID PROMISES TO KEEP ON SPENDING

Discusses Hudson Bay Route.

In Torrid Meeting at Morden, Man.—It Will Shorten Distance to Europe by 400 Miles.

Morden, Man., July 16.—Under a zinc roof, with the prairie sun scorching everything to a crisp, the thermometer hovering around 95, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, addressed a crowd of over 1,200 yesterday.

Despite the intense heat, which visibly affected Sir Wilfrid, he spoke with animation.

Morden is situated in Lisgar County, 67 miles southwest of Winnipeg, near the international border, and comprises part of the belt which has been affected by the dry weather. For the most part the district traversed by the railway presented a parched appearance. Half grown wheat met the eye in every direction, and the soil crumbled in the hand to a fine powder. Dark in appearance, it looks at first to be full of moisture, but close examination indicates that the virtue is almost dried out. Without rain, the yield over the district will be only half, but experienced farmers declare that showers would, even now, repair a great deal of the damage. What is said here only applies to the part of Southern Manitoba, over which observations have been made. The northern crops are in better condition.

"You do nothing by halves in this country," began the Prime Minister, "and when you give a warm greeting it is warm both inside and out. While the conditions are different in the east, there must not be any antagonism between the east and the west, and what is for the benefit of one is for the benefit of all. That is why I am with you on this occasion."

"We have spent money profusely, but shall continue to do so. It is not for the benefit of the east or the west, it is for the whole country."

They had just commenced the construction of the Hudson Bay Railway, remarked Sir Wilfrid, which was the goal of the west. This would shorten the route to the markets of the world by 400 miles.

Answering the criticism why they should build in opposition to the St. Lawrence route, he said it was not enough for Canada to have only one outlet. She should have ones to the north, east and west.

Sir Wilfrid said that he had been asked to discuss the controversy over the Manitoba boundaries, and declared that if Mr. Roblin had been so anxious to reach a disposition of that question as he was to rush on the elections a few weeks ago, it would have been settled long ago. In the proposed settlement Sir James Whitney did not get all he wanted, asserted the Prime Minister, but relied upon the patriotism, commonsense and good spirit of the Dominion Government.

Hon. G. P. Graham spoke at considerable length. He stated that $366,000,000 was invested in railways west of Lake Superior, excluding the G.T.P. "Water transportation," he said, "enabled the people to get the best possible rates, and the Government proposes to spend millions more to see that you have the cheapest of all routes, so long as navigation is open, in order that you may get the best possible results for the products of the soil and factory." For equal distances under similar conditions, rates in the United States were for from one-quarter to one-third higher than in Manitoba. The Hudson Bay route would solve the live stock transit problem and land Canadian farm products in Liverpool in prime condition.

WITH THE BIRD-MEN

Toronto, July 16.—While Count Lesseps, in his favorite "Scarabee," soared around like a huge eagle at a height of 3,200 feet, Ralph Johnston, in a Wright biplane, took wing and before he returned to earth had attained a height of 3,500 feet at the aviation meet yesterday. He seemed rather pleased to get back safe to terra firma, for he had encountered a wind, which, blowing at 75 miles an hour, according to his own estimate, gave him an uncomfortable experience.

At his extreme altitude, his machine took a dip, which, to the spectators below, appeared to be only four or five feet, but which in reality was nearly 200 feet. It was that sudden dip that made Johnston decide to come down, for it lifted him right up in his seat for some seconds, and nearly threw him out.

Johnston said he encountered two distinct currents of air, blowing in opposite directions and divided by a space in which it was quite calm.

ELECTRIC CURRENT GRIPPED HIM TIGHT

Washington, July 16.—Joshua F. Myer, an assistant engineer in a street railway power house, fell against a big electric feeder yesterday, and while the magnet gripped him tight 600 volts coursed through his body. His fellow workmen saw Myers' form enveloped in sparks and flames tight against the big machine as if he had been fastened there for electrocution. When they pulled down the powerful load his charred body fell away lifeless.

FOULING THE WATER

Toronto News.

In refusing to permit the construction of any more sewage systems discharging into lakes and rivers the Provincial Board of Health has acted wisely and in the public interest. It should go further, and compel all municipalities at present fouling any Provincial waters to abate the nuisance. The completion of the trunk sewer, now building, will go far to remove the bad example which Toronto has long shown its sister municipalities. The capital of the Province should not lag, but always lead, in civic reform. We must be sure that the effluent of the trunk sewer is thoroughly purified before it enters the lake to provide extra work for the Island filtration plant.

AFRAID OF TYPHOID

Officials Fear an Outbreak at Campbellton.

Campbellton, N.B., July 16.—What was feared to be a case of smallpox in the fire-stricken Restigouche town is said by Dr. Murray to be but chickenpox. The patient is a Russian, who came here on Wednesday from Prince Edward Island. He is in the hospital, though his case is mild. A little girl has developed a mild attack of typhoid, however, and there is a danger of diphtheria or typhoid breaking out, as the sanitary conditions leave a wide scope for improvement.

The militia have taken hold of this problem in the tented town and latrines have been placed in position and incinerators and garbage barrels will follow. Tents and blankets sent from the Dominion militia stores in St. John arrived yesterday, and the people are now encamped for the most part in a village of tents on high ground. They are fairly comfortable, and there is food enough for present need. Many people have left town and gone to friends in other places.

The relief stations fed many yesterday. The building of shacks for temporary business houses or dwellings continues, and there is a general air of improvemenet. The cheeriness of the people under their trials is remarkable. Insurance men now place the losses at $1,250,000 to $1,500,000. A good deal of petty thieving has been going on down town.

It turns out that no life was lost in Campbellton. The Doyle child supposed to be dead was taken to Kent Junction by a woman who went there for shelter. Daniel O'Keefe, proprietor of the Queen's Hotel, and who was ill, was taken to Dalhousie, has since died there.

St. John, N.B., July 16.—It is suggested that the Provincial Government should guarantee the interest on the debt of the town of Campbellton, which amounts to $300,000, or take other means of lessening the burden. Governor Tweedie and Premier Hazen go up on Monday.

FOUND 100 LBS. OF GOLD NUGGETS

Haileybury, July 16.—In a letter received here yesterday from a mine manager in Porcupine it is stated that in Sudbury the Timmins people found one hundred pounds of gold nuggets on their property.

The find was made in a part of the property not being worked over. Where their shaft is, the Timmins people have gone down 100 feet and have struck rich ore at every foot.

The story of this marvelous find is authentic, for it is vouched for by the manager of a Porcupine mine owned by Burr E. Cartwright, the well-known and highly-respected president of the Temiskaming Cobalt Mine.

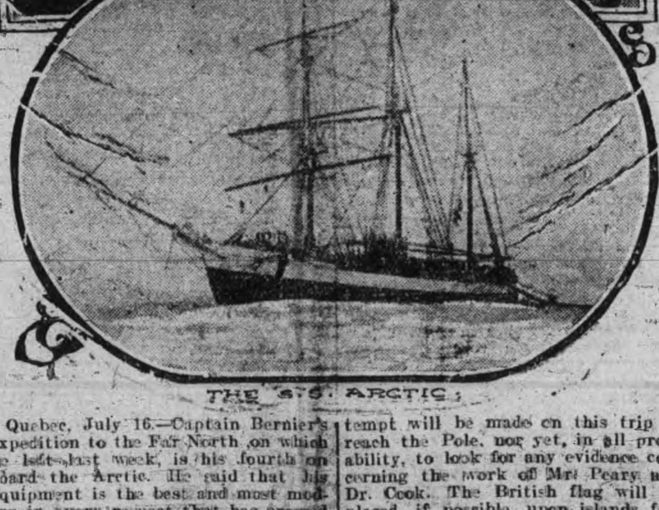
Word was received here yesterday also that on B. E. Cartwright's mine, which adjoins the Timmins property, 15 gold showings had been uncovered. This gold is in a vein which runs northeast and southwest. It is trenched for 25 feet and is 15 feet wide. The trenching has been slow, as there is 10 feet of earth over the vein.

THE MUSKOKA FREE HOSPITAL

Toronto, July 16.—Information has been received that the Dominion Government are about to open a post-office at the Muskoka Cottage Sanitorium. In this institution and the Muskoka Free Hospital, which is only a mile distant, about 200 patients are in residence. To secure admission to the Muskoka Free Hospital the only conditions necessary are to be poor and to have consumption in its early stages. The trustees are anxious to have it made known that an applicant seeking admission from any part of the province will be promptly admitted.

FAMOUS ARTIC EXPLORER

CAPTAIN BERNIER   FABIAN VANASSE.



THE S.S. ARCTIC.

Quebec, July 16.—Captain Bernier's expedition to the Far North on which he left last week, is his fourth on board the Arctic. He said that his equipment is the best and most modern in every respect that has crossed the Arctic circle. His ship perhaps is the staunchest ever built for navigating ice laden polar seas. It was built in Germany in 1901 and carried the Antartic expedition of 1902-03. It was then known as the Gaus, and was purchased for the Canadian Government by Captain Bernier in 1904 from the government of Germany.

The walls of the hull are of massive layers of oak, so that she stands enormous ice pressure. In all her experiences in the north she never has met with a mishap of any kind. The expedition carries no dogs nor other beasts of burden, except one Newfoundland and one St. Bernard dog belonging to officers of the ship. The sledges are all to be drawn by hand and the boats for service in the ice are said to contain several improvements, which the Captain declines to discuss until he has tried them.

It is pretty well decided that no attempt will be made on this trip to reach the Pole, nor yet, in all probability, to look for any evidence concerning the work of Mr. Peary and Dr. Cook. The British flag will be placed, if possible, upon islands farther north than those visited last year by Captain Bernier, when he went as far north as Etah, and as far west as Bank's Land, where Parry penetrated in 1819-20.

He expects to visit the lands north of Parry Islands, and also to make the Northwest Passage and to return by the same route, unless instructed otherwise, for he will make two or three stops on the coast while going north along Labrador, where he will be in telegraphic communication with Ottawa.

Out of the Arctic's ship company of thirty-six in all, no less than twenty formed part of the last expedition on board of her. The scientific staff consists of the captain, with Mr. J. T. Lavoie, civil engineer, of the Dominion Meteorological Department, who is both meteorological and magnetic observer and geologist, and Mr. Fabien Vanasse, historian of the expedition.

MAY BE STRIKE !!

Grand Trunk Trainmen Will Support General Committee.

Negotiations Will be Re-opened With the Management of the Road With a View of Avoiding a Tie Up.

Special to the Review.

Montreal, July 16.—Although the full returns are not obtainable, it was stated to-day that the result of the vote among the Grand Trunk trainmen showed a substantial majority in support of whatever measures the general committee might consider necessary to enforce the demands made on the Grand Trunk management. However, if the final counting up reveals the same substantial majority as the union leaders now claim, it will not mean that a strike will be declared at once. The delegates now in Montreal will first reopen negotiations with the Grand Trunk management and only in case the company absolutely refuses to pay the rates the union has adopted as its standard, will there be a likelihood of a strike.

ATTEMPT TO WRECK BRIDGE

Pittsburg, July 16.—A detonation rocked buildings and broke windows throughout the west end yesterday. Some heavy object came flying through the fog and punctured a big hole in the deck of the steamer Valiant lying in the Ohio River nearby. The mysterious missile then rolled off and sank. For some time the concussion, which was felt all over the city, was a mystery. Finally it was learned that an attempt had been made to blow up the west belt line's new bridge on West Carson street, because of the open-shop policy insisted upon by the contractors. The bridge wreckers escaped.

The contractors, the McClyntic-Marshall Construction Co., declared that since 1906, when the open-shop policy was inaugurated, no less than a dozen bridges under construction by them in New York, Buffalo, Chicago and other cities had been damaged by dynamite.

TOO LENIENT WITH DUFOUR

Ottawa, July 16.—The Free Press, the Liberal organ, has this to say of the Dufour case: The officials of the immigration branch of the Interior Department possibly know their own business best, but we are convinced that the general opinion of the Canadian people will be that they have been too merciful in their treatment of the immigration inspector, Dufour, of Windsor, who has been convicted of discourtesy to passengers on a train coming east from Windsor a few weeks ago.

Mercy is all very well in its place, but surely that quality has been strained to the limit.

Dufour should, in the opinion of The Free Press, have been summarily dismissed from the service, not only as a punishment for his own offence, but also as a lesson to other officials of the public employ that politeness pays, and that Canada has no place for boors among her servants.

AUTO PARTY'S THRILLING ESCAPE FROM DEATH IN B.C.

ENTRANCE EXAMS

Toronto News.

Forty-eight per cent. of the Entrance candidates have failed.

This is an unusually large per centage.

It indicates that something was wrong—that the questions on the examination papers were not comprehended by a large number of pupils.

The loss of one academic year means a great deal to the children and the parents in many families.

The News believes that the Department of Education should weigh carefully the causes of so many failures.

Were the papers not at fault?

Would a fair and just reconsideration not justify the passing of twenty per cent. more of the candidates?

The examination system is not ideal.

Its limitations must be considered in passing judgment on the candidates.

Ran Over Seven Sticks of Dynamite.

On Narrow Part of the Yale Road Where a Workman Was Thawing it Out.

New Westminster, B.C., July 16.—While motoring over the Yale road an auto containing H. A. Eastman of New Westminster, H. Witt of North Vancouver, and Chauffeur J. Hunter, ran over seven sticks of dynamite, crushing three, which failed to explode, thus saving the lives of those in the machine.

The party had rounded a sharp bend in the road when a man who had apparently been standing on the side of the road, and, not seeing them coming, rushed toward them, waving an axe and shouting to them to keep back.

At the same time the chauffeur's attention was attracted by the actions of the man, he saw lying on the road only a few yards in front of the machine, seven sticks of dynamite. He was right on top of them; the road was narrow and the machine was traveling fast. He thought that the best and only chance he had was to pass over the sticks fast and give the dynamite the least weight possible. He put on full power. For the fraction of a second there was a period of horrible suspense as Hunter waited for what he thought was certain destruction, but the mighty explosion never came and the machine passed in safety.

When all looked back at the man who had come too late with his warning, they saw him sitting on the side of the road, his face buried in his hands, utterly collapsed under the great strain he had undergone. He had been conducting some road mending operations there and some of his dynamite had become congealed over night. There was not a great deal of travel over the road and he thought that if he put the sticks out in the warm road they would soon thaw.

COUNTING THE VOTE

Grand Trunk Trainmen Silent Regarding Strike.

Montreal, July 16.—The votes of the Grand Trunk trainmen on the question as to whether or not there shall be a strike are still coming in to the headquarters here. Until they are all counted and analyzed the leaders of the men refuse to make any statement. It is believed that decisive action will be taken on Sunday night.

Stratford Deeply Interested.

Stratford, July 16.—The City Council, at a special meeting called last evening, authorized the sending of a telegram to the Minister of Labor asking that an effort be made to bring about a settlement between the G.T.R. Co. and the trainmen so as to avoid the threatened strike, which would seriously affect the city and its interests. A strike would probably mean the shutting down of the local shops, which employ in the neighborhood of a thousand men.

London Urges Intervention.

London, Ont., July 16.—As a result of a petition signed by over 400 London men employed by the Grand Trunk, the City Council, at a special meeting yesterday afternoon, decided to ask the Government to inquire into the strike situation. The Minister of Labor will be asked to have a conciliation board appointed. Supt. Treleaven, on behalf of the men, pointed out that the situation was critical, and that 500 men in the car shops here would be affected by a strike.

G. T. Michigan Men Will Strike.

Windsor, July 16.—A special from Corunna, Mich., last night says:—Because they were refused an increase of eighteen per cent. in pay all the employes of the Grand Trunk Railway in this state will go out on strike on Monday, causing a general tie-up of the road. The engineers and firemen will not participate in the strike, however, as their contract with the railway company is still in force. Agents and operators, it is understood, will go out with the trainmen.

HAVE ISSUED A MANIFESTO

Winnipeg, July 16.—The C.N.R. striking carmen are determined to hold out until they secure a better wage schedule, and a union officer has stated that nearly all the strikers had secured more remunerative employment, and he thought the company will have great difficulty in replacing their experienced men.

The men have issued a manifesto affirming that they had no other option than to apply for a conciliation board, and that the latter, disregarding the enhanced cost of living, adopted the schedule presented by Supt. S. J. Hungerford, with but the slightest alterations.

SITUATION CRITICAL

Winnipeg, July 16.—Continued reports of crop damage in the Canadian West are responsible for further activity in the wheat market, with sharp advances in prices. The bulls were in control and quotations were pegged up steadily. July was most active and showed largest gains. It closed 117 5-8, as compared with 114 Thursday, a gain of nearly four cents. As compared with the close Wednesday, July is 8 1-2c. higher, October 7 1-2c. and December 7 5-8c. higher.

The situation is critical, according to leaders of the bull party, and every day of hot weather adds to the extent of the damage. Manitoba seems to hove been the principal sufferer from heat, but lack of moisture in all the provinces makes the condition of the growing grain the subject of concern.

G.T.R. TO BUILD NEW BRANCH

Springfield, Mass., July 16.—Preliminary plans have been made by officers of the Grand Trunk Railway for a branch from Barrett's Junction, near Belchertown, to Springfield, in order to compete with existing lines for a large business in western freight from Springfield, Chicopee and Holyoke.

In view of the fact that the proposed line parallels the road which the New Hampden Railroad Co. intends to build and would also make the Grand Trunk a competitor of the Boston & Albany for western freight, there is a prospect for lively railroad war.

NO DEFINITE RULES THEN

London, July 16.—At The Hague conference J. S. Ewart, continuing for Great Britain, argued that the United States was wrong in asserting that in 1866 Great Britain had recognized that the United States had the right to fish in the Great Bays. Secondly, the word "bays" in the treaty of 1818 should be taken in its geographical sense, because the word did not then possess a judicial signification, as definite rules of international law respecting bays were not in existence at that time, and Britain then claimed sovereignty and absolute jurisdiction over the fisheries of its possessions far beyond the territorial limit.

INFRACTION OF REGULATIONS CAUSES TROUBLE

Kingston, July 16.—Infraction of shipping regulations has got United States Consul Johnson into a controversy with a number of local shippers, who have been invoicing goods to be shipped across the border at the price they bought the goods at, instead of at the market value. As a result a large amount of merchandise has been held up.

The Board of Education will ask the City Council to provide funds for the erection of two new schools.

SOME PRETTY FAST FLYING

Bournemouth, Eng., July 16.—J. Armstrong Drexel, a son of Anthony Drexel of London and Philadelphia, and the French aviator, Leon Morane, yesterday engaged in brilliant performances of over-sea speed flights. The start of the course was at the aerodrome, across the Solent in the direction of the Isle of Wight, thence around the Needles light house and back, a distance of 21 miles. The Frenchman covered the distance in 25 minutes, and Drexel in 34 minutes.

Boat Struck Cartridge.

Chicago, July 16.—The freight steamer Parks Foster is undergoing costly repairs as the result of an unusual accident. The other day, while coming down the river for Collingwood, Ont., the boat struck something on the river bottom, evidently a discarded dynamite cartridge or bomb, which exploded, making a hole 5 x 7 feet in the boat's bottom.

The Daily Review

SATURDCY, JULY 16, 1910.

LIBERALS ARE PROTECIONISTS

What the country should thoroughly understand is the close alliance which has been effected between the Laurier Government and many of the active leaders in the protectionist movement. The Liberal party is to make quiet bargains with manufacturers while its newspapers appeal to western farmers and other advocates of low tariff. Thus the people who are really interested in securing protection have a doubly secure position, and the low-tariff Liberal is doubly deceived. The old alliance between the Conservative leaders and the Canadian Manufacturers' Association ceased to exist long ago. Whatever alliance now exists between organized protectionists and politicians is between manufacturers and the Laurier Government, not between manufacturers and the Borden Opposition. There is no reason to think that a Conservative success at the polls would mean increase of protectionists taxes.

THAT WINDSOR INCIDENT

The citizens of Windsor are angry. They made great preparations for a banquet to which they invited a number of American citizens, attending a convention in Detroit. A scant dozen attended. Windsor had previously decorated and was told to be ready to receive a host of them as boarders during the great gathering. This also was a fizzle. We do not sympathize with our Windsor friends. Our Yankee cousins are too fond of hearing the big drum sounded in their praise. They are fine people and so are we. They are clever. So are we. They are a nation of hustlers. So are we. Why should we be toadying to them all the time. They don't hand us any bouquets. We can deliver the goods in Canada as well as they can. If the Canadians were to snub the Americans like they snubbed those folks at Windsor it would be weeks before their ruffled feelings could be smoothed. But we know Uncle Sam is a great bluffer, and those Windsor people shouldn't have bitten so easily.

THE GIRL WHO WALKS THE STREETS

The Kingston Standard takes the part of the girl on the street and The Review agrees with it. The children whose homes are spacious, can sit in the subdued light in the drawing room. The girl who works and boards, and who, perhaps has but a room, is forced on the street for her recreation. Books are fine friends, but who wants to read and sit in the house when the ceiling is low and room narrow; when the stars are twinkling and the breezes stir. So she walks in the open. And her friend walks with her. And what if they sit in the park and he has his arm around her and kisses her? You are not supposed to be looking. The rich have their many rooms for courting. The householder has his verandah. He adds a curtain. It keeps out the air. But what is the breeze to seclusion. So she sits darning her socks or the junior member of the house entertains her friend. But the girl who boards, the girl who works, whose home has no verandah, walks the street. Can you blame her? What would you do?"

THE OTHER FELLOW

The Duke of Norfolk was once making a long journey by rail. At each station he would get out to stretch his legs, and on several of these occasions other passengers stopped him and asked questions, which the duke courteously answered.

When the destination was reached a tired old lady who had noticed this, but who didn't know the duke from Keir Hardie, or Jack Burns, caught him by his ducal sleeve and said:

"Now, my good man, I've noticed you at all the stations loafing about. Just make yourself useful for once in your life. Pick up these bags and rugs, please, and hurry out and get me a cab."

The duke mildly shouldered the bags and rugs, and after the old lady had got safely in her cab with them, she gave him sixpence. He bowed and said:

"Thank you, madam. I shall never part with this coin. It is the first money I ever earned in my life."—Lippincotts.

This is funny, but it is sad. In it is the reason why there are so many working under unfavorable conditions. The rich man's son, who has a title, an estate or an established business left to him, and to whom it would be a disgrace to shine his own shoes, can have little feeling for his fellow man who has to work hard to make a living. A day in the mines with this pick and shovel would make the owner more in sympathy with his underground army of employees. Ten hours as engineer on the express, or fireman, brakeman, conductor or telegraph operator would give those in control of the road under present day conditions, would give those in power a little more vivid idea of what must be endured each day in this age of continual hustle. In short, if we were in the other fellow's place once in a while we would have more feeling for the other fellow.

THE THUNDER STORM

We heard the thunder storm this morning, and the timid wished it was over, while the bravest felt easier as it died away in the distance. None are particularly fond of thunder and lightning, although there is the occasional man or woman who claims to enjoy it. You never can tell where lightning will strike, and for that reason we dread. It usually makes a sudden death job when it comes into contact with flesh and blood.

Investigation shows that the danger of death from lightning is little. Canadian statistics are not available, but the American statistics for the year 1908 are probably approximately correct for Canada, weather and other conditions averaging much the same for the two countries.

The American census shows that in the year 30 people were killed in American cities and 139 in American rural parts through being struck by lightning. Five times as many people died the same year from heat prostrations, almost twice as many people were frozen to death, twenty-eight times as many people were drowned while swimming. Indeed, causes never thought of are far more dangerous to men; for instance, man runs double the chance of being killed by building material falling into the street as he walks along it, than he does through death by lightning.

Some of the housewife's usual precaution during a thunderstorm is rather unnecessary. Donald Shafer, in the current "Country Life in America," in an article on this subject, says: "There is absolutely no record that I know of where a discharge of lightning from the sky struck the side of the house and came into an open window or an open door. Houses are always struck on the roof and generally at the highest point of the roof."

Thus, those who enjoy the disturbance of the elements may sit at an open window free from fear, and the great majority who with the beasts, and birds, and most living things, fear the electric storms may stay there also, and work up their courage, by the memory of the assurance of science, that the open window in a thunder storm is a safer place so far as lightning is concerned than an ordinary walk along a city street during the finest of weather.

There are cases on record where people have been struck several times. Fred Ivey, of Southampton, is one of these. He told the writer that three times lightning has hit him. Once when he came to he felt all over his body sensations as though he had been frozen and was thawing out. The prickling and burning was itense.

THAT TRIP TO HUDSON BAY

", Jean, all the world's a bit queer but me and thee, and thou art a bit funny!" This may or may not be the true quotation, but the sense is there. The Globe says:—

A man whose seven dollars a week would not provide a living for his wife and family from toronto's multitude of combines has been sent to prison for theft. The lessons are as varied as the points of view.

The Governor-General and party are going on a trip to Hudson Bay. His suite will take twenty-six green silk tents, which will be fly and mosquito proof. In the Ward in Toronto are sickly children, dying children, overworked, overcrowded women, and old and decrepit people by hundreds. They are not living. It is only an existence for them. Peterborough has also its little host of very poor with little to eat in the house, and no holidays in view, save the holiday of sleep.

Our Governor-General will travel in royal style at $50,000 per year.

We like our Governor-General and are loyal to the Crown, but what of the poor man at seven dollars a week with a family to support?

What of the army of workmen with the great army of women and children depending on them? An outing would do them good, and they would not need silk mosquito tents, either!

AN ODORIFEROUS GREETING

(The Ottawa Free Press.)

The Peterborough Review has prostrated itself at the feet of Hygea, the Grecian goddess of health. It is wrestling with smells.

Monday's leading editorial in the Review of just twelve words is herewith reproduced precisely as it appeared:

HOW DOES IT SMELL?

GOOD DAY, MADAME, HOW DOES YOUR GARBAGE SMELL!

The leading editorial yesterday concluded with these doleful words:

"Stinks still stink, the flies still breed and the question of garbage as a daily nuisance is still unsettled."

The Review lays down a law of universal application when it affirms that smells still smell.

This, taken in the abstract, means that a smell, as long as it is a smell, will continue to smell.

Of course some smells smell differently from other smells, but let it be known to the world that, in the last analysis, however varied may be the smell of smells, "smells still smell."

And isn't that an ingenious greeting that the Review has invented for the people of Peterborough. In Ottawa we have not yet been able, apparently, to get away from the chestnut. "Is this hot enough for you?" and its variation, "How would you like to be the iceman?"

Now, how much pleasanter, how much more original, how much sweeter to accost your lady friend on a hot day, with the remark: "Good day, madame, how does your garbage smell?" It imparts an air of comfortable and sociability not to say familiar domesticity into a vagrant conversation.

True, it sort of brings one back with a flop from the sweet perfumes of the boudoir to the noisy odors of the back yard, but an anti-climax is always invigorating in the "torrid spell."

But why does the Review address this remark to the ladies only? Why should it be restricted to use between the women or between men and women? Why should not Jones, of the Marine department when he meets James, of the Militia department, politely put to him the all-important question: "How does your garbage smell?" Why, oh why, should the ladies monopolise this conversational invention?

We protest against the levity with which the Free Press treats our remarks regarding the stink question. It will be repeated until fly time ceases, or until the authorities wake up from their trance.

THE POINT OF VIEW

OPPORTUNITY.

Exchange.

They do me wrong who say I come no more
When once I knocked and fail to find you in;
For very day I stand outside your door,
And bid you wake and rise to fight and win.

Wail not for precious chances passed away,
Weep not for the golden ages on on the wane;
Each night I burn the records of day,
At sunrise every soul is born again.

Laugh like a boy at splendours that have sped,
To vanished joys to blind and deaf and dumb;
My judgments seal the past with its dead,
But never a moment yet to come.

Though in deep mire, wring not your hands and weep,
I lend my arm to all who say, "I can."
No shamefaced outcast ever sank so deep
But he must rise and be again a man.

GRATIFYING.

St. Thomas Times.

Very gratifying is the demonstration which is being made on the Pennsylvania Railroad of the many advantages of steel passenger-car construction. To-day that company has in service or on order nearly 2,000 cars of this type, and it is putting in service as fast as they can be built steel sleeping and parlor cars, the deliveries being made at the rate of from 50 to 60 a month. The steel car is non-collapsible, the brunt of a collision being borne by a massive central box girder, 24 inches wide by 19 inches deep, which extends throughout the entire length of the coach from coupling to coupling.

All passenger vessels which touch at British ports must have wireless equipment, according to a bill of Sir Edward Sassoon, M.P.

The Invincible Billy

An Irrepressible Boy's Part In a Love Affair

By AGNES G. BROGAN

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

They sat upon the pier together, the girl whose eyes were as blue as the sea, the little boy whose flaxen curls framed the face of a cherub and the man who looked askance at the boy and frowned. The girl caressed the child. "Dear," she asked tenderly, "are you tired?"

Billy rested the curly head against his aunt's shoulder and confidingly placed his damp boots upon the skirt of her white linen dress. "Nope," he answered concisely.

Jack Winston sighed and shook his head. "When I see the amount of affection you are wasting upon that imp," he said, "my soul is filled with wrath."

The boy scrambled to his feet suddenly and, collecting a handful of small sharp stones, began pelting them at the two occupants of a small boat which glided noiselessly along beside the pier.

"Billy," his aunt cried, horrified—"Billy, did you hit the little boy?"

"You bet I did," her nephew replied gleefully. "That was Dicky Smith. I hate Dicky Smith!"

Miss Brereton's eyes looked unutterably sad. "That was very wrong," she said reprovingly, "and you must not hate him, dear; you must love everybody."

Her nephew laughed. "Everybody!" he exclaimed derisively.

"Yes, indeed," his aunt reiterated. Billy considered.

"Do you love everybody, Aunt Beatrice?" he asked. "Do you love Mr. Winston?" A rosy flush covered his aunt's pretty face.

"Of course I do," she answered evenly.

Billy turned to seek an ally in the man. "Do you love everybody, Mr. Winston?" he persisted.

"Not by a good deal, Bill," the man responded warmly. "I have much the same feeling for Mr. Fenway, for instance, that you have for Dicky Smith."

The girl laughed and caught her small nephew by the hand. "What nonsense!" she said. "And now don't you think it is time to go back?"

The three went strolling up the sandy beach, the boy skipping along between them. The hotel guests had assembled upon the wide verandas, awaiting the sound of the gong which would summon them to the evening meal. They hailed the delinquents merrily. "Last call for dinner in the dining car," said Fenway. "Billy, come here and give an account of yourself." He caught up the boy and perched him upon his knee. Beatrice stood leaning against a white pillar, smiling down at them. Winston sat upon a lower step.

"What have you been doing, Billy boy?" Fenway questioned. The child was always very amusing, so the guests leaned forward, eagerly listening for his replies.

"Been down on the pier," Billy piped in his shrill treble, "with Aunt Beatrice and Mr. Winston." A pause. "Aunt Beatrice says she loves Mr. Winston," he repeated deliberately. For a moment there was silence, tense, deadly silence; then Jack Winston committed the unpardonable crime—he laughed. No one joined him. That made it worse, for all were fascinated in watching the girl's face, which changed so suddenly from white to crimson. She looked contemptuously at Winston for a moment because he could thus enjoy her discomfiture.

"Billy," she said desperately, "you remember, I spoke of loving everybody—not Mr. Winston in particular; he was merely included with the others."

It seemed to the man on the lower step that her eyes sought Fenway's appealingly. "Merely included with the others." He arose suddenly. "You have sufficiently cleared yourself of the imputation," he began in a low tone, but Billy was speaking again.

"Mr. Winston says," the cherub announced distinctly, "that sometimes he would like to pelt stones at Mr. Fenway." There was a general laugh at this, and Winston was conscious of an overwhelming desire to fall upon the boy and thrash him within an inch of his life.

"Thanks, awfully, Bill," Fenway observed calmly. "Forewarned is forearmed. Henceforth, whenever I see Jack Winston coming my way, I shall run."

The company dispersed in little chattering groups toward the dining room. Billy was borne thence upon Fenway's shoulder, and Beatrice followed. As Winston passed she averted her eyes, and so during the endlessly long week which followed she perversely ignored his existence and admirably succeeded in dispelling any erroneous idea which might have prevailed regarding her partiality toward him. And the injured one hid himself in faraway corners and worked resolutely upon the serial story which he was preparing for one of the current magazines. He had neglected his writing lately, and there was much to do. Occasionally Billy would seek him out, but was always curtly dismissed. In fact, the thorns were beginning to show among Billy's roses, for his champion, Fenway, had suddenly departed for town, and Aunt Beatrice had developed into a very unreasonable person. One could not tell how to please her.

When they started for a walk upon their last afternoon at the seaside Aunt Beatrice first found the wooded path too shady, then decided that the sun shone too brightly upon the pier, and later when the man in the little post-office informed them that there were "no letters today" Billy really thought she was going to cry. "P'r'aps," he comforted, "Mr. Fenway will write a nice letter to you bimeby, but," he added, with the strange perversity of childhood, "I like Mr. Winston best."

Aunt Beatrice very unexpectedly bent down and kissed his upturned face. "Billy boy," she said sadly, "Mr. Winston does not like us any more, and it is all because of you." Billy pondered deeply upon this. If it was his fault that these two funny grown-up people refused to speak to each other then some way or other he must be the one to straighten things out. He did not quite know how he was going to accomplish this purpose, but would see Mr. Winston at any rate. So it happened that Billy's chubby figure invaded the hiding place among the trees, and Winston ceased scribbling for a moment to look impatiently at the innocent face peeping out from its tangled curls. "Hello!" said Billy cheerfully.

"Don't you see that I am busy?" the man answered. "Now run along."

"All right," Billy agreed, and sat down upon a fallen tree trunk. Winston resumed his writing. As he finished one sheet he would tear it hastily from the pad and toss it from him. The ground near by seemed covered with the closely written pages.

"You write a great many letters," Billy suggested politely. There was no response. "Mr. Fenway went away yesterday," he ventured again. Still no answer. "Aunt Beatrice and I are going home tomorrow," he continued. At last Billy had gained the man's attention. "Tomorrow!" he exclaimed in consternation. "She is going away tomorrow?" Billy was pleased with the sensation he had made. "Yep," he answered coolly. "No more fun here now."

Jack Winston looked far away between the trees to where he could see a glimpse of blue sea beyond. "I suppose not, now that Fenway has gone," he said bitterly. The man continued to gaze gloomily out upon the sea. He had forgotten the story; he had forgotten even Billy until the unusual silence reminded him that his unwelcome visitor had departed. Then he slowly collected the scattered sheets, dropped the pad into a loose coat pocket and with great heaviness of heart turned to go. So she was leaving tomorrow. In all probability he would never see her again, and the happy hours of this summer which had meant everything to him would linger in her memory only as an idle seaside flirtation. The man sighed a mighty sigh, and then the twisted branches before him were parted and Beatrice herself stood there in the opening. She raised a flushed face to his; her blue eyes shone mistily. "I wanted to see you so very much," she said hesitatingly, "that I just could not wait for you to come."

He stared unbelievingly. Miss Brereton pouted. "Of course if you are not glad to see me"— she was beginning, when the glorious truth dawned full upon him.

"Glad!" he cried, and the fervor expressed in that one word seemed to quite satisfy the girl. After a long silence she laughed softly. "It was a dear little note," she said. "Do you know you have always appeared to be such a dignified, self contained person that really I have been a bit afraid of you all along—at least I never imagined that one so calm could write like that."

The last words were uttered in a tone which conveyed her entire approval of the note, which had evidently been the means of bringing her to his side. Winston realized slowly that something remained to be explained. He must be cautious.

"Have you the letter with you, dear?" he asked. She drew a crumpled paper from her belt and, smoothing it out, held it up before his eyes. The man took her hands and the note within his own.

"Dearest," he read in his own handwriting, "I can bear this silence—this separation—no longer. In pity let me see you once more." The scrawl ended abruptly, and the sheet was torn off as though in frantic haste. With a perplexed frown Winston recognized the words with which the hero of his latest serial story begins an ardent epistle to his ladylove.

Beatrice smiled. "You must admit," she said softly, "that Billy made a good messenger. I was sitting in the garden looking sorrowfully out over the hills and wondering if a certain person who considered himself mortally offended could really be so cruel as to allow me to go far away without one word of goodby when Billy, the dear, came running down the road. 'Aunt Beatrice,' he called, 'here is a letter for you from Mr. Winston!' If it had not been such a nice, anxious letter I might have properly waited for you to come to me, but as it was—well, Billy led me straight to your hiding place."

"Dearest," said Winston in the phrasing of the letter, "I humbly apologize for the many unkind remarks which I have made from time to time concerning your nephew. He is an angel, a remarkably clever child. There has never been his equal." Beatrice sighed contentedly, and Winston, happening to glance over the crown of her head at this moment, saw the aforesaid angel seated upon the tree trunk close by, apparently a very much interested spectator.

"Say," said Billy wearily, "cut it out won't you? Supper's ready."

MISERY AIDING MISERY.

The Helping Hand Among the Beach Combers of Marseilles.

Harry A. Franck in "A Vagabond Journey Around the World" writes of the trying times when he was a beach comber in Marseilles: "Long, hungry days passed, days in which I could scarcely withstand the temptation to carry my kodak to the mont de piete (pawnshop) just off the sailors' square. Among the beach combers there were daily some who gained a few francs by an odd job, by the sale of an extra garment or by 'grafting,' pure and simple. When his hand closed on a bit of money the stranded fellow may have been weak with fasting, yet this first thought was not to gorge himself, but to share his fortune with his companions under hatches. In those bleak November days many a man ranked a 'worthless outcast' by his more fortunate fellow beings toiled all day at the coal wharfs of Marseilles and tramped back, cold and hungry, to the Place Victor Gelu to divide his earnings with other famished miserables whom he had not known a week before.

"More than one man sold the only shirt he owned to feed a new arrival who was an absolute stranger to all. These men won no praise for their benefactions. They expected none and would have opened their eys in wonder if they had been told that their actions were worthy of praise. The stranded band grew to be a corporate body. By a job here and there I contributed my share to the common fund, and between us we fought off gaunt starvation.

"In a dirty alley just off the place was an inn kept by a Greek in which one could sleep on the floor at 3 sous or in a cot at 6, and every evening a band of ragged mortals might have been seen dividing the earnings of some of them into three sou lots as they made their way toward 'L'Auberge chez le Grec.'"

Halley's Achievements

Edmund Halley was a very great man. He was not only the first to predict correctly the return of a comet, that which is now known by his name, but also—before Newton had announced his results to any one—arrived at the conclusion that the attraction of gravitation probably varied inversely as the square of the distance. While these and other important achievements of his are well known it seems to have been forgotten that Halley devised a method of determining the age of the ocean from chemical denudation.—Dr. G. F. Becker in Science.

WORDS OF CAUTION TO YOUNG MOTHERS

Mothers must keep guard over the health of their little ones during the summer months. Summer is an anxious time for all mothers, but more especially for young mothers. It is the most fatal time of the year for babies and young children. It is then that stomach and bowel troubles come almost without warning, and often before the mother realizes there is any danger, the little one may be beyond aid. The mother must take strict caution to keep her little ones' stomach sweet and pure and his bowels moving regularly. No other medicine can do this so quickly and thoroughly as Baby's Own Tablets. The Tablets should always be kept in the house. An occasional dose will keep baby well, or if illness comes on suddenly the Tablets will quickly remove the cause and make baby well and happy. Sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box, from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Dr. D. N. Carmichael has been appointed on the Board of Examiners of the Ontario Medical Council.

SAVED FROM THE KNIFE

Appendicitis Cured By "Fruit-a-tives"

NEWBURGH ONT., Feb. 12th. 1910.

"Just about a year ago, our daughter Ella (fourteen years), was taken with terrible pains in the right side. The pain was so severe that we had to carry her to bed. We at once put her under the care of a first-class doctor, who pronounced it a case of Appendicitis and advised an operation.

We took her to a hospital in Kingston where she was again examined by an eminent specialist. He said she had Appendicitis and must be operated on at once if we wanted to save her life. As we had taken her to Kingston to have this done we were ready but our daughter was afraid and cried and begged so pitifully, that we postponed it for that day. Luckily for us and for her an uncle came in with some 'Fruit-a-tives' and insisted on Ella taking them. Good results were apparent almost from the first dose, and the continuous treatment cured her.

'Fruit-a-tives' saved our daughter from the surgeon's knife and to-day she is enjoying the best of health."

J. W. FOX, (Father).
LILLIAN FOX, (Mother).

Words cannot express the gratitude of Mr. and Mrs. Fox. And Miss Ella will always remember "Fruit-a-tives"—the discovery of an eminent physician, and the only medicine in the world made of fruit. 50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, or trial box, 25c. At dealers, or sent, postpaid, on receipt of price by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

DIDN'T COME FROM THIS CITY

In the police court this morning Daniel Findley was charged with the theft of a watch and fob and some underwear from George Ferry of Dufferin street.

A policeman testified that the thefts took place seven weeks ago, and added that Findley had been out of town.

"I have been in Mimico," he interposed.

"No. It was Peterborough," declared the constable.

"But I know what I am talking about," exclaimed Findley. "I left the asylum at Mimico yesterday."

"Is that so? How did you leave?" queried the court.

"I escaped."

"Remanded for a week until the asylum authorities send for you,' ordered the magistrate.

At noon to-day the asylum authorities were communicated with and stated that Findley had escaped. An attendant was sent for him.—Toronto News.

How to Choose a Piano

There are three things to study in purchasing a piano: the case, the mechanism and the tone. Your own eyes will tell you if the case is well made, and it deserves careful inspection, too, for a carelessly made case indicates the probability of careless workmanship all through. The mechanism is the least understood by the ordinary purchaser, and, being concealed within the instrument, must largely be taken in trust. For this reason it is important to deal only with an old-establisehd, reliable house of the highest reputation. The tone is the most important, being the one feature that pianos are made for, and every purchaser can judge by his own ears as to its quality and power. In the the tone is its greatest perfection, being the sweetest and purest of any Canadian instrument. The tone effect achieved in the Nordheimer Piano is of marvellous richness, brilliance and carrying power, and has made it worthy of its title:

The "Quality Tone" Piano

In purchasing a Nordheimer Piano you are buying from a house that has been established 69 years, and has always stood for the highest and best in the art and practice of music, and has always handled only the world's best instruments. In offering the Nordheimer Piano, this reliable house can say that for twenty-five years, since the first Nordheimer Piano was made, the best that money could buy in material, in skilled labor and in improvements has been embodied in each instrument, until to-day it stands as the highest type of piano in the Dominion of Canada.

If you are thinking of a piano for Christmas let us show you what we have to offer.

Y.M.C.A. CAMP

Special to the Review.

Sandy Point, July 15.—All the boys are well at the camp, excepting those who are suffering from sunburn, and some of them find it hard work to lie down at night, but such is camp life.

The "quoit tournament" came to a climax when Physical Director Thompsson and Gerald Conroy played off for the championship of the camp. Aftr a very exciting game Mr. Thompson finally won out by a narrow margin.

Baseball is all the rage now in camp, a three-team league has been formed with Walter Flowers as captain of the Flowerites, C. Nichols, captain of the Dimes, and R. W. Sharpe, captain of the Blunts. Wednesday the Dimes defeated the fast aggregation of the Blunts, for some unknown reason the latter team took a balloon ascension and the Dimes pulled in so many runs that it was impossible to overcome the lead. Score 12—4. Thursday morning the ball field was the scene of an exciting and nerve-racking game of ball between the world-famed Dimes and the would be champions, the Flowerites, C. Nichols held down the slab for the Dimes, while no other than J. J. Thompson, of the P.A.C. team, was the twirler for the Flowerites. After many nerve-racking and hair-raising stunts the "Dimes" came off victorious. Score 7—6.

The two latest arrivals in camp are L. Carter (Nick) and Bruce Hamilton.

Wilfred Stratton was a visitor in camp over Thursday.

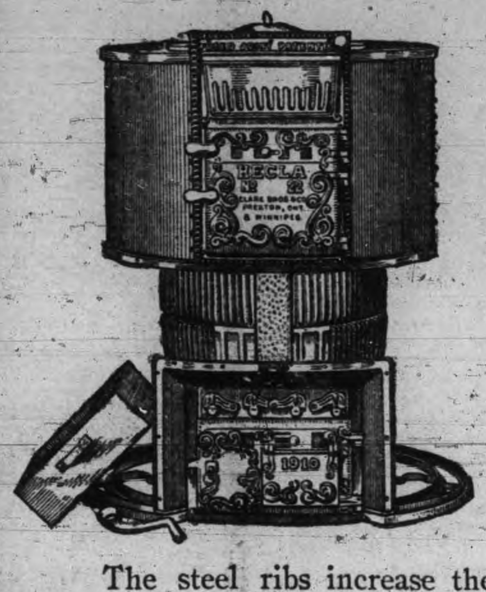
HECLA FURNACE

And The Most Vital Improvements Made In Warm Air Heating In 30 Years

The first vital improvement is the FUSED JOINTS.

The objection to the ordinary warm air furnace is, that where the steel and cast iron parts are bolted and cemented, the joints do not remain air-tight. The iron and steel of the furnace expand and contract under the influence of heat and cold. Bolts work loose, cement drops out and gas, dust and smoke escape into the house through these openings.



To overcome this, we perfected FUSED JOINTS. Instead of bolting and cementing iron and steel together, we fuse them at white heat until they become one solid piece of metal.

FUSED JOINTS make the combustion chamber absolutely air-tight. They are permanent joints and insure the warm, heated air being always fresh, healthful, invigorating and untainted.

HECLA FIREPOTS are reinforced by 97 steel ribs fused into the outer surface. This makes them the stiffest, strongest and most durable firepots that can be made.

The steel ribs increase the radiating surface of the firepot by 300%. This increase in the radiating surface of the firepot, increases the radiating power of your furnace and enables you to get more heat out of the fuel that you burn.

In fact, actual tests has shown a saving of at least one ton of coal in seven, through the heating efficiency of the "Hecla" Steel Ribbed Firepot.

These are vital improvements—"Hecla" improvements—that are found only in "Hecla" Furnaces. There are others, described and illustrated in our book. Write for free copy. Send us a rough plan of your house and we shall be pleased to make up free estimate of the cost of installing the proper "Hecla" Furnace. 99

THE MARKET TO-DAY

The offerings at the market this morning included a little of everything.

You could buy anything from the three-month-old piglet at $7.00 to the carrot in miniature at 5c. per.

There was a fair sprinkling of fruit. Raspberries went at three for a quarter; huckleberries and black currants at fifteen cents a quart. This season's youthful potatoes sold at forty cents a peck, and judging from their general appearance there wouldn't need to be any more than six or seven around the festive board to get away with this quantity.

The ancient brand went at sixty cents per bag.

Carrots, beets, onions, rhubarb and other garden delicacies were prominent.

Butter and eggs reached around the twenty-two cents mark, and fairly respectable looking chicken-hens could be taken away for fifty cents each.

The attendance was small.

The damage will be about $250, it is estimated.

SPORTING NEWS

SPORT | ANOTHER AFTERMATH | SPORT

Below will be found some interesting reading. It is one of the numerous aftermaths of the Jeffries-Johnson fight, and while the average reader of the doings in sportdom has lost interest in the big affair, the following will be interesting. The article is from the Boston American, one of the big journals which spared neither space nor expense to give all the preliminary and final details of the meeting between a black and a white man. The curious part of the whole affair is that the Boston American now denounces the fight in no uncertain language and takes altogether a ridiculous stand against the ring.

Two heavy, dull, worthless, characterless individuals fought at Reno a few days ago, with fists. Other human beings, more or less dull and characterless, paid a certain amount of money to gratify, in safety, their love of brutality.

And many intelligent men who might be better employed, are assuring the world that all this was very noble and very desirable.

We are tol that to teach men to fight with their fists—to honor the bruiser—is most important, and that if we neglect the important are of hittin a man in the solar plexus or the knack of "upper-cutting" him and knocking him senseless, all that civilization has gained may be lost.

We are told that men will be turned into sheep if you stop prize fighting, and that the man who would interfere with fighting is nothing but a placid poodle who lacks respect for the masterful mastiff.

We are assured that these are still war-like days, that nations are bristling with armament, ready for battle. And so, to keep readiness for battle alive within us, we were told we must cheer while Mr. Jeffries trotted eight miles to get rid of the effects of alcohol and dissipation, and we must throw up our hats when Mr. Johnson danced a jig and assured admiring friends that he never felt "more fit" in his life.

There is nothing of value in the work of these fighters. Possibly with very small boys under fourteen years of age, it may be worth while to talk about boxing and muscle—in order to keep those little boys engaged in healthy, muscular work and to keep them out of mischief and bad habits.

But in the grown man interested in prize fighters, following them about, delighting in their brutality, while he carefully protects his own carcass, there is simply latent cruelty, personal cowardice and all around brutality.

What has prize fighting, the blow with the fist, or the power to stand brutal punishment, to do with wars or progress to-day?

Nations for a while may continue to fight. And it is well that those that make up the nations should be ready to protect a just cause.

A dry goods clerk might defeat the champion Johnson.

But when real war comes, it isn't your beefy Jeffries or your long, sinewy Johnson that does the work. Put both of these men side by side in the ranks of the regular army, and on the other side put a little 110-pound clerk from a dry goods store. The clerk, with his repeating rifle, will stretch out Jeffries and Johnson in a good deal less than ten seconds if he happens to be a good shot, and it is quite likely that by the time he has shot one of them the other will turn his back and start running.

For it isn't the man delighting in brutality that possesses real courage.

But why admire brutal fighters who are living the hog's life, the life of drunkenness, dissipation, brutal fighting and general worthlessness?

Very respectable indeed is the cow's life "of peace and in straw" compared with the life of the gambling, drinking, brutal prize fighter.

Young men, remember that if you ever do anything in this world, you are not going to do it with those lumps of muscle on your upper arm and you won't do it by practising the brutal art of hurting men.

If your work amounts to anything it will be done by the thinking, planning force inside of your head.

Exercise just enough to keep your and your brain healthy, and no more. Try to make yourself conspicuous in one of the world's great fights—the fight against ignorance, the fight to make the human race master of this planet and master of itself.—From the Boston American.

"Jack" Kleinow, the former Highlander catcher, is now with the Boston Americans and putting up a splendid game. "Happy Jack" is a hard, willing worker, and has added much strength to "Patsy" Donovan's tribe of Red Sox.

"Jack the Diver" Drowned.

Brockville, July 16.—A conspicuous figure along the waterfront for the past few years has been a character commonly known as "Jack the Diver," a middle-aged man of dissolute habits, but an excellent swimmer and diver, whose feats of remaining under water were nothing short of marvelous. Though proficient in the art of swimming, he lost his life yesterday in the river opposite the waterworks dock while diving for pig-iron, which he brought to the surface by means of making it fast to a rope. After one dive in 30 feet of water he remained down too long and drowned, though the body rose once almost to the surface and then disappeared. The deceased's proper name was Charles Cuinell, a French-Canadian, whose home was in Montreal.

MORRIS STANDS SIXTH

Bowmanville Man Highest Canadian in Final Stage.

Lieut. Mortimer of Quebec Is Eighth In King's Prize Final List, and He and Morris Are Eligible to Shoot for Silver Medal—Steele Is Second In Grand Aggregate—Canadians Win Many Money Prizes.

Bisley Camp, July 16.—The official list of the final stage of the King's Prize places Sergt. Morris of Bowmanville in sixth place, and Lieut. G. Mortimer, Quebec, in eighth place, each thereby winning $75.

Three had scores of 200, three of 199, five of 198, eight of 197, twelve of 196, sixteen of 195, twenty-one of 194, and thirty-one of 192.

Those with scores of 200 will shoot off for the silver medal, and Morris and Mortimer are among the number.

Four Canadians were among the prize winners in the competition for the St. George's Challenge Vase, first stage, winning $10 apiece; Mitchell, 140th; Clifford, 157th; Morris, 191st, and Freeborn, 212th.

Three Canadians won $5 apiece from the Birmingham Metal Munitions Co.: Bayles, 15th; Steele, 16th; King, 20th.

In the shooting for the silver cup and prizes donated by John McQueen & Co., three Canadians won $5 apiece; Bayles, 12th; Freeborn, 14th; Steele, 31st.

In the Armorers' Company competition Bayles repeated, coming 10th and again winning $5. Along with him were Richardson in 9th place, and Steck in 21st place, who won similar amounts.

In the Alexander Martin match, Freeborn, 5th, won $10; Bayles, 21st, won $5; Eastwood, 28th, won $5.

In the shoot off for first place in the grand aggregate, Steele came second.

In the St. George's, at 600 yards, the Canadians won the following places and prizes: Mitchell 4th, Richardson 11th, Steele 16th, McKie 17th, Steele 18th, Stuart 22nd, Eastwood 27th, each won $5. At the 500 yards' range: Richardson 7th, McKie and Steck 11th, Eastwood 22nd, each won $5.

Fooled Again.

Niagara Falls, Ont., July 16.—Investigation of the highly exaggerated story published in the Toronto papers about 37 men narrowly escaping from drowning in Ontario Power Co.'s waterway yesterday morning. That there is no truth in the story, which, no doubt, was the dream of some imaginary overheated newspaper reporter, who, 24 hours after a trivial happening, pen-painted a huge occurrence.

The night before last, when the engineers were testing a few feet of the new cement tub by filling it with water, the temporary bulkhead gave way and the watere passed on down through the new tube and tunnel way into the river, doing no damage. Not a single person was even in the way of danger.

For the Murderers of His Son.

New York, July 16.—By a codicil in the will of Henry Dexter, founder of the American News Co., who died on July 11, filed yesterday, the reward of $10,000 offered by Mr. Dexter for the arrest and conviction of the murderers of his son, Orlando Dexter, who was killed in the Adirondacks in 1903, is continued during the lives of his two executors and trustees.

Bequests to religious, charitable, literary and scientific institutions aggregate nearly $1,200,000.

Will Not Use Mailed Fist.

Tokio, July 16.—Lieut.-Gen. Viscount Terauchi left yesterday for Seoul to assume the duties of Japanese resident-general of Korea. At the moment of departure he stated that Japan would not use the mailed fist in Korea or antagonize the interests of Korea or of those of foreign residents. Radical changes in the system of Government would, however, he thought, be necessary.

SICKROOM COMFORTS

Simple Device That Brings Relief to the Invalid.

THE USEFUL MEDICINE DISK.

An Invention For Moving Patient From One Side of Bed to the Other—Home-made Pillow Prop Constructed From Boards.

There are many little accessories that add comfort and convenience to an invalid's room and are particularly easy of construction, which fact is always a recommendation to practical women.

For the home nurse the difficulty of remembering when the next dose must be given has a happy solution in a register for medicine doses that can be made of stiff cardboard.

Cut a disk of heavy cardboard that will be a little larger than a glass in which any water or medicine might be kept. Mark upon it the numbers of the hours and the half and quarter spaces. The little convenient arrow can be cut of stiff colored cardboard and fastened in the center with a brass paper clamp or a bent steel nail. Mark on the disk the words, "Next dose," and all that is necessary is the indication by the arrow of the time when the next dose of medicine is to be given. Two or more of these can be made if the medicine be of different kinds.

For moving a person from one side of the bed to the other an arrangement known as the "draw sheet" should be used. The ordinary sheet folded in three should be placed across the bed over the other sheet. The ends should hang over the sides of the bed, and when moving the invalid they are lifted up, forming a muslin slide that moves the person quickly and easily to the other side of the bed. To any one who has realized how difficult a feat the moving of a body is to the unprofessional this suggestion will come as a boon.

A pillow prop made of three boards nailed together at the edges is here shown. Its simplicity is obvious. The slant of the board that will support the body will determine the length of the other two. Nail the three in place. The boards need not be heavy, for the shape of the structure insures a firm support. It is a more convenient form than the upturned chair used by so many.

When the weight of the bedclothes is too uncomfortable a wire support can be constructed of thick wire, bent into an arched shape and fastened together by twine or thinner wire. At each end the pieces of wires should be bent back to form clasps that can slip under the frame of the mattress.

These are but a few suggestions for making the long hours less wearisome for the invalid and more convenient for the caretakers. The time required for the making of these articles can never be weighed against the inestimable comfort that results.

Wall Paper.

In these days of simplicity of furniture, when the painfully twisted shapes and dust catching whatnots are relegated to the oblivion of the attic, there is greater opportunity for the decoration of the walls of a room.

When it is brought to mind how much of the wall space of a room is evident it is necessary that due consideration be given to the selection of paper. The pattern should not be such that the harmonious furnishings of a room are lost in the dominating of color or design of the background.

Plain paper of neutral tones or indistinct striped paper is the most desirable. Nothing is more execrable in taste than the glaring huge flower forms that pain the eye and hang in questionable glory (that never seems to fade) on the four walls of a room.

A plain lower portion of burlap or Japanese grass cloth or even linen is excellent as a relief from the patterned paper above. The tapestry tones give wide choice for the lower plain band and are procurable in really artistic combinations.

One decorator suggests a study of a Persian rug for inspiration in the selection of colors for wall decoration. Of course the wall must be considered in connection with the general scheme of the room. Never should it be dissociated from the other furnishings if the most artistic results be your aim.

GOODIES FOR THE CHILD.

Plain, Wholesome Cakes and Dishes Kiddies May Eat.

Mother Goose Cookies.—In the house furnishing departments of some of the big stores tin cake cutters may be had reproducing the outlines of some of the Mother Goose characters. But if these are lacking there are always elephants, dogs, cats, stars and moons to be found, and these are equally entertaining to little folks. Delicious cocoanut cookies are made in this way:

Take three-fourths of a cupful of butter, two cupfuls of sugar, two eggs, one cupful of grated cocoanut, one teaspoonful of baking powder sifted with a little flour. Stir butter and sugar to a cream; add the eggs, the cocoanut and powder. Use flour enough to roll out thin, cut into the shapes and bake in buttered tins to a delicate brown. Don't get them too brown or half the taste of the cookies will be lost.

Ringlets.—These simple little cakes are excellent for eating with ice cream or a fruit dessert. Children also find them amusing, liking to stick their fingers through the holes in the center and so eat them. Mix into a stiff dough two cupfuls of sifted flour with five tablespoonfuls of sugar, three-fourths of a cupful of butter, the yolk of six eggs and the grated rind of one lemon. Leave it on ice or in a very cool place for one hour, then roll the dough on a floured board till it is one-eighth of an inch thick. Cut into rounds with cooky cutters, then take a smaller cutter and cut a round piece from the center of each. Brush the "ringlets" over with beaten egg mixed with sugar and bake a delicate brown in a medium hot oven.

Fruit Drink.—Pineapples or oranges make a delicious drink which is sure to please the children. Peel the pineapples and cut them into tiny bits; cover the fruit with powdered sugar and let it stand overnight. The next day drain off the juice, add distilled water and serve in wineglasses. The orange juice looks pretty served in the same way. Strain it first, sweeten it and add a little lemon juice if the tart touch is liked.

Banana Fritters. — These make an excellent dessert for a child's luncheon when little friends are invited. Put a cup of sifted prepared flour in a bowl, add one-half tablespoonful of butter and rub this and flour together. Add one-half cupful of creamy milk, one tablespoonful of sugar and the yolks of two eggs. Beat the whites of the eggs to a stiff froth and add the batter gradually to them. Peel six bananas and cut each in three lengthwise slices, dip each slice into the batter and fry to a golden brown in boiling lard. Lay them all on a hot dish, sprinkle with powdered sugar and serve piping hot.

Cheap Ice Cream. — Sweeten one quart of sweet cream with one cupful of sugar and flavor with two teaspoonfuls of vanilla extract and then freeze in the ordinary way.

Nut Cake.—One cupful of sugar, half a cupful of butter, half a cupful of milk, two cupfuls of pastry flour, two eggs, one cupful of raisins, one of walnuts or hickory nuts, a teaspoonful and a half of baking powder. Cream butter and sugar, then add eggs well beaten, then milk and flour in which baking powder has been thoroughly mixed. Add raisins and nuts. Bake a little over half an hour in a moderate oven.

For the Nursery.

No one knows better or will more appreciate the suggestion illustrated than the unfortunate person to whose lot it generally falls to "tidy up" the nursery after it has been in possession of the little ones for a lengthy period. It is always an excellent thing to instill tidy habits into the children, and to apportion a place in the nursery in which they can deposit all their litter after they have amused themselves is a plan which is well worth carrying out.

One of the best ways of doing this is to procure a good sized packing case and place it in the extreme corner of the room. The two outer sides may be easily draped with some pretty remnant of cretonne, which can be tacked on to the upper edge of the box. The material should be folded over at the top to form a flounce, and from underneath this flounce plaits of the material are arranged to reach the ground and entirely hide the exterior of the box. The box can, of course, be periodically emptied, and a corner of the nursery cannot be better utilized than in this manner. The little ones should always be made to clear up all their rubbish after they have done playing, and if there is something at hand in which it may be placed they will not mind doing this, and it will save other people the trouble. The interior of the box may be lined with brown paper, either tacked or pasted to the sides.

Owen Callaway, ten years old, of Davidson, Sask., was crushed to death under a stoneboat.

Niagara Falls, N.Y., July 16.—P. S. Whistle, convicted last fall with Wm. Dobson, of robbing the Canadian Express Co. of $14,000, at Niagara Falls, Ont., became a free man yesterday through the activity of his father and Assemblyman Philip J. Kellar of this city. He was sentenced to three years' imprisonment in Kingston Penitentiary at Kingston, Ont.

Assemblyman Keller made a personal trip to Ottawa to hold a conference with the Minister of Justice, and finally secured that official's promise to release Whistle. He was released and deported yesterday.

HAPPENINGS IN HAVELOCK

WEDDING—BUSY SCENES—PERSONALS

Special to the Review.

Havelock, July 16.—The lawn social at Preneveau on Wednesday of last week was a great success, there being a large attendance and an enjoyable evening was spent. The receipts amounted to $50.

Next Sunday will be Father Kell's first Sunday as pastor of Havelock and Norwood. The hour of service here has been changed from 10 a.m. to 9.30 a.m.

HALF HOLIDAY.

On Wednesday there was another large exodus of people from town taking advantage of the half holiday. Two loads went to Healey Falls, another to Trent Bridge, and an enjoyable time was spent fishing and boating.

WEDDED.

The marriage of Miss Minnie Roe, daughter of Mr. Wm. Roe, of Preneveau, to Mr. Hugh Jones, of Marmora, took place at the Methodist Parsonage here on July 6th. Rev. J. R. Real performed the ceremony, while a number of friends of the young couple were present. Mr. and Mrs. Jones left on the afternoon train for a short honeymoon. They will reside in Marmora.

A BUSY SCENE.

Trent Bridge, the village three miles south of Havelock, is indeed a place of activity at the present time. Besides the usual large number of tourists and sportsmen that visit this hamlet, the work being done on the canal and bridge at this point makes that spot busier than ever.

The channel of the river at this point is not very deep, so in order to make the passage of large boats possible, the government have purchased the land to the south side of the river and will put the canal water course to the south side. This made necessary the rebuilding of a portion of the old bridge, and the addition of another swing over the new waterway.

Work has been going on very quickly under the direction of Mr. Sheldon, who is managing the work for the Randolph McDonald Co., who have the contract. A temporary bridge has been built over the river about twenty feet west of the main bridge. The portion of the old bridge that is to be rebuilt has been taken down and shipped by scow to Healey Falls, where it will be used as an addition to the bridge at that point. The men are now engaged in building the pier for the new portion of the bridge. When the bridge is completed, an enormous amount of work will have to be done in cutting away the land to the south, and dredging the river both up and down streams.

OFFICE ON ISLAND.

The Randolph McDonald Co. have an office on the island in the middle of the stream.

There is a larger number of campers at this point than ever before.

Mr. Charles Davidson and Mr. Thos. McKiel, of Campbellford, have both erected new cottages at the east end of the island. Mr. S. Wilson has also erected a nice house near Mr. Wright's residence. Across the river Mr. Schofield has built a cottage, while up the river at Green Point, Mr. F. C. McMasters, of Havelock, is building a fine cottage.

Mr. Alex. Rose, Mr. Thomas Bennet Mr. Thomas Lloyd, Mr. P. J. Wright, Mr. F. C. McMaster, A. C. Denike, Mr. R. Brennan and Wm. Corneil have taken up residence at their cottages at the bridge.

Mrs. Christie and family, of Toronto, are at their cottage in "The Grove."

Mrs. Kennedy and daughter, of Toronto, are the guests of Mrs. Alex. Rose at their cottage.

Mrs. A. Lesage and children, of Packenham, are the guests of Mrs. T. Bennet, at their cottage, "Killarney."

Mr. Hormebrooke, of Toronto, is the guest of Mr. John Christie.

GOOD FISHING.

The fishing at Trent Bridge has been very good all season, some good sized 'lunge having been caught, while heavy black bass have kept the fishing interesting at all times.

Miss Ada Holcombe and Mr. Stanley Holcombe are visiting in Toronto.

Mrs. McWilliams and children, of Cobalt, are visiting with Havelock friends.

DISASTER TO MONORAIL; FIRST DAY UNHAPPY ONE

Hastily Constructed Line Gives Way Near New York Under Pressure of Overcrowded Car and Fifteen Suffer Painful Injuries

New York, July 18.—The Pelham Bay Park and City Island Monorail Co., which has been hastily constructing its track and superstructure between Barstow and City Island for the last two months, sent its yellow, cigar-shaped car from its City Island barns to the Harlem Railroad station, at Barstow, Saturday afternoon to meet the 2.10 p.m. train from New York. It was the first time in the road's brief history that the cigar-shaped car had been put on the practical test of carrying a full load of passengers.

After taking on more than 100 passengers, who packed the car so full that they could hardly move, and who had all come from Manhattan and the Bronx to have a swim at City Island, the long, cigar-shaped yellow car left the Barstow station, and, with gathering speed, began, under the direction of its inventor, Howard Hansel Tunis, to run back toward City Island on its single rail. The single rail on which the car runs curves slightly in several places, and puts an additional strain on the superstructure which the company admits it put up as hastily and as economically as possible, in order to comply with the terms of the board of estimate's franchise, gave away. The wooden ties supporting the monorail along the ground sank an inch or two into the uncemented bed of dust on which they were laid.

The spikes holding the iron uprights supporting the superstructure by means of which the car is held steady on the monorail, tore out of the wooden ties, and amid the screams of the imprisoned passengers, the car fell over on its side, resting against one of the thin, lathe-shaped uprights supporting the superstructure. The upright, though bent, did not snap.

If it had snapped the car would have rolled over and over down a four-foot embankment and many of its hundred passengers would have been either killed or badly injured. As it was the passengers were thrown one on top of the other on the floor of the car, so that they lay literally in layers when the car was opened to let them out. In the jam fifteen suffered painful injuries.

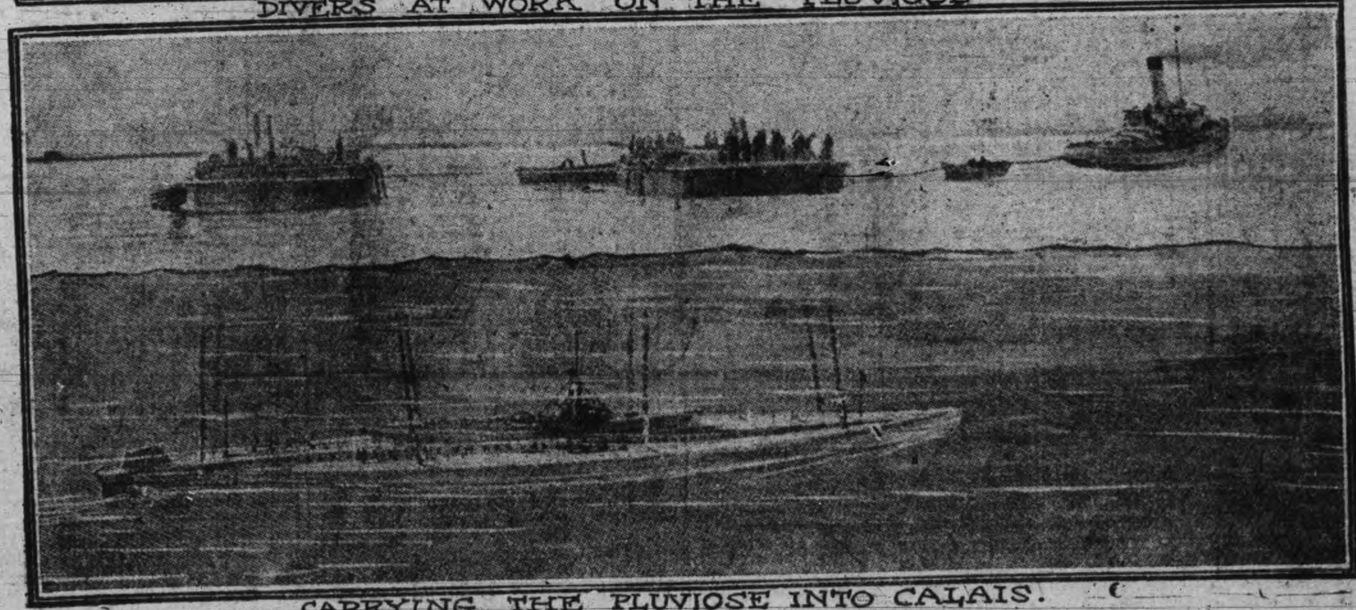
The car runs on a cross-tied roadbed similar to that of a railroad train. But only a single rail runs along the centre of the ties; while every 20 feet on each side of the track iron supports are erected. These supports hold up two light steel rails, along which a double set of deep-grooved wheels pass. These not only hold the car upright, but receive the electric current that propels the car.

When the car rounds a curve it tends naturally to tilt. If the curves of the track are improperly calculated, or if the parallel set of overhead wheels slip off the trolley rails, the car must topple over.

The normal capacity of the monorail car is 40, according to President Burrows. After over 100 holiday folk has crowded into it, Inventor Tunis, at the front motor, began to fear that the car was taking on too big a load.

EXPLORING THE DEPTH OF THE SEA FOR THE DEAD

DIVERS AT WORK ON THE PLUVIOSE



CARRYING THE PLUVIOSE INTO CALAIS.

More than ordinary difficulty attended the salving of the French submersible Pluviose, which was run down and sunk in the British Channel by a steamer, causing a loss of twenty-seven lives. To enable the authorities to reach the entombed dead, it was necessary to carry the wrecked craft into Calais harbor. Eight chains were attached to the steel hull of the submersible, and as the tide rose and lifted the lighters the submersible rose with them. The chains held and the submersible was successfully conveyed into dry dock.

WELCOMES THE PREMIER

W. D. Staples, M.P., Shows Sir Wilfrid Courtesies of War.

Somerset, July 18.—Political heresy might be charged against William Staples. "Bill," as he is known to his constituents, member of Parliament for Macdonald, for the reception which he and his ilk gave to Sir Wilfrid Laurier on Saturday afternoon.

Meetings in these French-Canadian districts assume more the character of a village, or family picnic, rather than a political demonstration, and when a few hundred people are drawn together the represent a wide range of country.

The Government association did not know that Sir Wilfrid was actually coming until twenty-four hours before he arrived. There was a dilemma; the Prime Minister was coming to see people of his own race and no preparation made to receive him. Consternation reigned; a number of heads got together; Tory led and Grit followed. Ways and means were devised. A messenger was dispatched sixteen miles away to bring the nearest band at a cost of $100. Willing hands undertook to building a temporary platform on the village green; streamers and bunting were made ready, and even the indispensable motor-car was on hand for the grand march. When Sir Wilfrid arrived the crowd of several hundred were serene and expectant. No Scottish chieftain ever received more cordial welcome than the Canadian Prime Minister gets from his compatriots. "Vive Laurier" is the cry everywhere.

Sir Wilfrid does not say much upon these occasions. While he was glad to speak to them of the traditions of the French race, they must not consider him as a French-Canadian, but as a Canadian.

THE HEN THAT LAYS THE GOLDEN EGG

Mr. Lloyd Smith, of Coldwater, Ont., is the proud owner of a large buff Orpington hen, which has achieved the remarkable feat of laying two eggs in one day, the second egg being laid within two hours after the first. This is no freak, for the hen has been laying two eggs in one day for upwards of a month. She is a two-year-old hen, weighing nine pounds, and has been in Mr. Smith's breeding pen during the past season.

DIDN'T KNOW IT WAS LOADED

Welland, July 18.—William H. Willson, aged 30, manager of the Hennessy drug store here, was accidentally shot and instantly killed here Saturday night. A friend of his, Night Policeman George Laing, had borrowed from him some days ago a revolver to carry, while cleaning his own. In the police office Laing was returning Willson's revolver, and, showing how well his worked after cleaning, thinking he had removed all the cartridges, he snapped it and the ball entered his heart.

A horse owned by Cecil Hagar, near here, was killed by lightning while pasturing in a field on his farm Saturday morning.

A STRIKE IMMINENT

G.T.R. Trainmen's Vote is in Favor of Standing Firm.

Montreal, July 18.—Apparently the critical stage in the dispute between the G.T.R. and its trainmen, yardmen and conductors is now close at hand, and is will depend upon the attitude to be taken by the company whether there is an extensive strike on both the Grand Trunk and the Central Vermont Railways. The returns of the second strike vote on the Grand Trunk were counted yesterday, and it was stated that of the 3,350 votes cast less than fifty were against a strike.

President Hays was notified on Saturday that the forty-two delegates from the various centres along that system between Portland and Chicago had returned to the city, and he promptly sent them word that he would be prepared to meet them for another discussion at 11.30 on Monday morning. It may be that this meeting will decide the fate of the issue, but it is more probable that there will be further conferences before anything definite is decided. It is, however, stated by the leaders for the men that, in view of this second decisive vote, they will lay the matter firmly before Mr. Hays, that the company must grant them the standard eastern wage or they will call a strike. If it became evident that the company did not intend to meet this demand, the strike would be called without delay.

SLUGGISHNESS OF SCOTLAND YARD

England Censuring Sleuths For Losing Dr. Crippen.

London, July 18.—The press is devoting columns to the Crippen murder case. The most remarkable feature has been the sluggishness of Scotland Yard in its preliminary stages. The case was laid before the authorities on June 30 with ample evidence that Dr. Crippen had made contradictory statements respecting his wife's disappearance and death, and her friends both in England and America suspected foul play. There was an interval of ten days before Crippen's flight with his typewriter. During that interval the detectives received a fresh series of misstatements from him, which ought to have warned them to keep him under constant surveillance, and yet they did not take any precautions to prevent the escape of the suspected criminal.

The excuse offered for this astonishing negligence is that they wanted to frighten him into flight and thereby force him to incriminate himself. If they had been clever, they would have induced him to run away and kept watch on him, so as to arrest him at an opportune moment. As it is, they are now dependent on the co-operation of the amateur detectives of the press, and are overwhelmed with hundreds of false clews, based on mistaken identity, in every section of the kingdom.

As Crippen disappeared only four days before the horrible discovery of the mutilated body of the woman under the coal cellar, the scent is fresh, and the arrest of the suspected murderer is highly probable, especially as every newspaper is seeking to frighten the typewriter into betraying him in order to escape her own responsibility as an accessory before or after the fact.

Chas. M. Hays says the G.T.R. is not planning a route into Boston.

BY CABLE AND WIRE THIS AFTERNOON

THE RAILWAY MEN ARE NOW WAITING

Special to the Review.

Montreal, Que., July 18.—The Grand Trunk officials and the trainmen's committee were in conference for over two hours this morning, and the deliberations were adjourned until three o'clock this afternoon.

Mr. Hayes, at the close of the forenoon meeting, stated that the proceedings were going along smoothly.

The C.P.R. men are waiting for Sir Thomas Shaughnessy to take up the matter of their claims, and nothing is expected for some days. Sir Thomas returned from a holiday to-day.

POLITICAL REVOLUTION THROUGHOUT SPAIN

Special to the Review.

San Sebastian, Spain, July 18.—Wealthy Spaniards are rushing into this frontier city, owing to the dangerous outlook for a political revolution throughout Spain. The result of yesterday's meeting between King Alfonso and the members of the Spanish Cabinet is still being kept a profound secret, but there is good ground for the belief that a military programme was outlined to be followed in the event the outbreak proves as serious as forecasted. It is thought the constitution will be suspended and military law substituted the moment the authorities believe the situation warrants such drastic action.

NEW ARCHBISHOP FOR SEE AT OTTAWA

Special to the Review.

Montreal, Que., July 18.—A cablegram received at the Archbishop's palace from Ottawa to-day, announces the appointment of Archbishop Charles Gauthier, of Kingston, to the Archbiscopal See of Ottawa in succession to the late Archbishop Thomas Duhamel. The Ottawa See has been vacant for over a year.

50.000 TROOPS RUSHED BY SPECIAL TRAINS

Special to the Review.

Paris, July 18.—Fifty thousand troops were to-day rushed by special trains to every strategic railway point in France, following the authorization of a general railway strike by the National Readers' Unions' Central Committee.

Desertions from the railroad ranks at many places were reported to-day.

The general strike will involve 100,000 men.

NAMELESS MAN IDENTIFIED

Niagara Falls, N.Y., July 18.—After having been known only as the "Nameless Man" since June, when he disappeared from his home in Syracuse, the mystery was identified Saturday as Albert Edward Gill. He was picked up by the police when unable to tell his name. Everything that happened previous to last Friday is blank to him. He remembers every detail of his life since that time, but who and what he was is still blank, beyond the fact that he learned his name on Saturday.

The description of the missing Syracuse man places it beyond a shadow of doubt that the stranger and Gill are the same. When told that his name was Albert Edward Gill, he said that "Albert Edward" sounded more familiar that Gill, but that he had a faint recollection of that also. The message from Syracuse said that he had a wife and child in that city, but Gill says he cannot recall Syracuse or even the fact that he was married. Dr. Gillick will take the man to Syracuse to see his wife, in the hope that that will bring back his memory.

HOT WEATHER IN THE WEST CAUSES WIDESPREAD ANXIETY

Extremely Warm Weather on a Single Day it it Believed Will Cost the Wheat Farmers One or Two Bushels per Acre—General Outlook Low.

Winnipeg, July 18.—The intense heat of the last few days has brought a recurrence of anxiety for the crop of the West. Leading authorities have been interviewed on the subject, and the following review of the situation is given:

On the 13th of July telegrams from all over the west indicated that while, the damage was very serious, there was still a good probability that a crop of about 90,000,000 bushels of wheat would be reaped. This was entirely contingent upon a good general rainfall. On the 14th the west experienced one of the worst days of the season. The thermometer out on the open country ran as high as 104 in the shade. The intense heat was accompanied by a hot dry wind, which lasted from early morning until late at night, and was calculated to reduce the crop from one or two bushels per acre in every district suffering from want of rain. The 15th brought cooler weather, and a number of fairly heavy showers, distributed pretty well over the country between Winnipeg and Calgary. It fell both north and south of the main line of the C.P.R. While this improved condition, to the extent of checking a rapid deterioration of the crop, it was not sufficient to promote growing or filling.

There are large areas in the west, particularly in Northern Manitoba, Central and Northern Saskatchewan and Northern Alberta, that have had abundant rain all season, and where the crops are as fine as these districts have ever produced, and from these sections, even without much additional rain, a good crop will be realized. But taking the west generally, where there is an acreage of 8,500,000 sown to wheat this year, without immediate rain generally over the whole country lasting at least thirty-six hours, there is little hope of reaping more than seventy or seventy-five million bushels, and every day of hot dry weather reduces this probably one or two bushels per acre.

GARBAGE

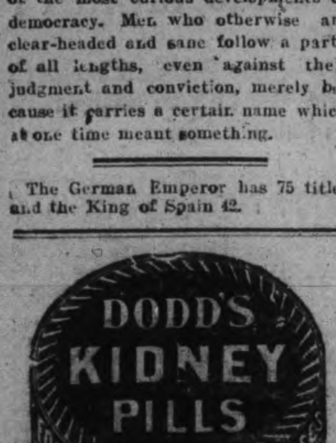
This cool weather makes the garbage a little less oderous. But the question of its disposal is still hot. Isn't it time that something is done.

LIBERALISM IN PRACTICE

Liberalism as a practice, in Canada at least, stands for arrogant officialdom, says the Toronto, News, after noticing the exalted creed of Liberalism, for inefficiency and extravagance, for a party tyranny inexorable and unreasoning, for corporate influence against municipal influence, for special privileges to a ring of contributors to party funds, for a patronage list, for corrupt government. Liberalism as a practice refuses nationalization of telepraph and telephone services, hands over a railway built with public money to a private corporation, maintains a sane and useless Senate, and fattens an army of mercenary heelers at public expense. Sir Wilfrid and his party have the form of Liberalism, but not the spirit thereof. Yet there are hundreds of people who are satisfied to be devotees at the shrine, although the saintly bones at one time guarded there, have been burned in party warfare and scattered to the winds.

This unreasoning partisanship is one of the most curious developments of democracy. Men who otherwise are clear-headed and sane follow a party of all lengths, even against their judgment and conviction, merely because it carries a certain name which at one time meant something.

The German Emperor has 75 titles and the King of Spain 42.



SUNDAY MUSINGS

The Manitoba elections are over, R. L. Borden has returned from his tour and Sir Wilfrid is speaking in the west. It is July.

Do not take it too seriously. There were elections thousands of years ago.

There were floods of eloquence, there were claims and counter claims, libels and counter libels, hissing and hurrahing, victory and defeat and the names of the successful ones and the names of the losers have long since crumbled into common dust and both are forgotten.

So do not get excited, for as the leaders of old have gone so will go the leaders of to-day.

Yes, and in the by-gone days there were questions discussed quite as momentuous as those of to-day; international questions, questions of diplomacy, questions of policy and questions of trade, of war and of peace.

And the brains were as keen and the tongue as incisive and the style as graceful as any who live to-day.

But vanity of vanities, they are all forgotten and the notions with them.

So, be calm.

It will be the same with us in a very brief space.

Think of the brevity of it all.

And what if elected, or your vote wins? How brief the power of the elected ones; and if defeated, why bother about trifles!

Remember, sir, amid all the oratory, all the discussions and arguing, that we are but atoms in the universe at best. Ages and ages ago men argued upon the street corners, in the shops and in the valleys and on the hills.

And as they argued they became excited over matters of government and friends became foes, and houses were divided against themselves.

But they are all forgotten, and enemies and friends sleep the long sleep.

So be calm, for be elected who will, Nature will move on and time will pass without the loss of a single second.

And you who have been disappointed in business, in marriage or in love, be calm.

You are not peculiar.

The history of the world is crowded with just such experiences as yours.

You are not to be called specially dull or specially unfortunate, for you, sir, or you, madame, are but repeating history, and if you think your case exceptionally hard, be calm; reflect, 'twill soon be past. Ages ago men failed to achieve that which is called success.

And you who are unhappily joined in what is now called marriage. You who disagree continually. You are but repeating history.

Ages ago men and women united by law and divided at heart quarrelled even as you. But they rest where there are no quarrels now.

So, what if there are differences in your home. Be calm, 'twill not be long; others have endured it and so can you.

And you who have loved and have not won, or the barrier impossible keeps you from the object of your affection, be calm. Love lived thousands of years ago, and lovers were enthralled, enslaved, enamoured and disappointed, even as you may be this moment.

And they rest to-day from their disappointments. So be calm, 'twill soon be over.

And you who see in yourself something extraordinary, who count yourself upon your form, physique or beauty of face or fineness of apparel. Be calm. Ages ago there were men and women just like you, who thought of themselves even as you do of yourself. They are gone now and sleep in the same dust that you will soon sleep in. So, be calm, extraordinary one, be calm

And you business men, who by integrity, intelligence and industry scored a monied triumph—why, history has repeated itself ten thousand times in men like you, so do not be exalted, you are not the only one, and you will cease writing cheques some of these days, even as the business men of the by-gone ages have ceased counting gold.

And you of the facile pen, and keen tongue—do not be deceived, you are not uncommon to history—and you, too, must soon pass. So be calm.

Richman! You who are planning for more, and you who are struggling for a bare existence, be calm.

"Does it pay, I wonder, to give our strength,
The treasures of heart and brain
The gift of the gods, and the skill of hand
For that which brings no gain:
To labor for that which is bread alone
And the things that pass away
Till the heart is full of an aching void,
I wonder does it pay?

Does it pay, I wonder, to never stop
In the ceaseless rush and care,
And list to the songs of bird and brook
Or wander through woodlands fair;
To never think of what lies beyond
The narrow sphere of to-day
Till the new heavens dawn on our unfired souls,
I wonder does it pay?

Step by step, that is how it is done, just step by step that carries life to its furtherest end. Just a rising in the morning, a lifting of the blind and a look to the sun in its dawning; just a little going out and coming in, a lowering of the curtain and the sun gone down.

Step by step our ideals are pursued, moving perchance so slowly that discouragements aften come, yet moving ever step by step.

Step by step, that is how the greatest lives go on—just step by step. They do not burst into sudden brilliancy. They might perhaps drop off to sleep unknown and wake to fame on some fair morn. Yet they have been plodding on in the silence, and could you discover the secret of that life you would discover it the secret of step by step.

Men do not advance by bounds, even though the world might think the evolution sudden. Ask them, and they will tell you of this daily doing of this step by step.

Step by step. There is folly of thinking in making permanent advance quicker. The great mountain is but atom by atom, the ocean is but drop by drop, while the great round world in its seasons teaches us this lesson of step by step.

Behold, how the Winters slip into the Spring step by step. The snow scatters upon us flake by flake, and thus it disappears into the earth, into the rills and rivers, and lo, the sun becomes gradually warmer to us and the earth takes on the habiliments of springtime. First are the buds upon the trees and then the leaves take shape, and now comes the little blade of grass, and the whole lawn is bright with vendure. And so come the snowdrop and the lily of the valley, not in a night, not in a noon, but gradually, step by step.

And the birds come not all at once; first the robin, and then in their mysterious order they of the feathered world arrive, till at last the oriole makes the trees glorious in song; and Summer is here, she came upon us warm and beautiful—came insensibly step by step.

And the fruits ripen and the cherries are red, and the pears take to themselves kisses from the sun, the plums hang heavy and the trees shelter nests, while the orchard is bright with song. We do not see the budding fruit to-day and pick the ripened pear or plum to-morrow. We watch the buds as they move mysteriously changing their forms and taking final shape; we watch the nests grow stick upon stick, twig upon twig. We see the egg, we wait and hear the tiny note before the feathers plume, and then comes the song.

And on moves the summer to autumn, gradually gather the birds and gradually they leave, and the autumn leaves become radiant, and the mountains eloquent, and the artist who never studied has painted each leaf with a separate individual glory. There is no blotching in this work, and the perspective is the perspective of God

It is perfect.

God did it step by step.

And perhaps it is well for us to wait and not to hurry too much upon our trivial affairs; it is good perhaps not to look too far ahead and to live to-day—to-day, and not to-morrow.

SOCIALIST SIMPSON.

Hamilton Herald.

Jimmy Simpson, of Toronto, the Socialist agitator and politician, being now a member of the Dominion technical educational commission, traveled from Toronto to Ottawa yesterday in a private car. We venture to predict that when James returns from his travels his Socialism will be of a less radical and uncompromising type than it has been.

THE NEGRO.

Cotton's Weekly.

It has been said that give an American crowd a nigger, a rope, a tree, a bundle of faggots, a gallon of kerosene, and a match and the American crowd will have a real good time. Lynching of negros is due to the capitalist system. Jobs are scarce. White men must fight each other for the privilege of working for their masters. The competition of the negroes for the jobs which the whites hold down is the real reason for the hatred of the whites for the blacks. Abolish wage slavery, let there be introduced social production for social needs, and the hatred of the whites for the negroes would vanish. The strong arms of the negro would be welcomed to help do the world's work in co-operation, for many hands would help lighten the social burdens fo each.

THE PRESSMAN.

Times, Port Hope.

"May I print on your lips?" I said,
And she nodded her sweet permission;
So we went to press, and I rather guess
We printed a full edition.

"But one edition is hardly enough"
She said with a charming pout
So again in the press the form was placed,
And we got some "extras" out.

Tempting Providence.

Cleveland, July 18.—An attack has been made upon aviation by The Catholic Universe, published here, the official organ of Catholicism in Ohio. Editorially, under the caption "Those Who Exalt Themselves," the paper says:

"The craze for dirigible balloons and airships should be legally restricted. We do not think that the Creator intended that man should inhabit the air or to fly like the birds, else He would have furnished him with wings. The numerous deaths that have occurred from the attempts to fly should warn man that his habitation and home is on the earth. To get wings, seek first the kingdom of God and His justice and take the commandments for your daily chart and guide."

Pallagra and malaria, which are much alike, are being successfully combatted by the government of Italy.

My Double

A Girl Graduate Sees Herself In Another Body on Three Occasions.

By DONALD WALLACE.

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

I remember well the night I received my first shock. I received another later that affected me more than this one, but in a different way. The first was in the nature of a surprise; the second was a terror.

I was but eighteen at the time and was going home to my aunt, with whom I lived, having just finished my education. The journey was a long one, and I had somewhat broken down my nerves from hard study. I did not like to stay overnight at a hotel alone, but did not feel like taking a sleeping car. I was rather a timid girl anyway and had not been used to going about without a protector.

I reached the hotel about 9 o'clock and went immediately to bed and to sleep. I was awakened in the night by a noise in the hall. Several persons passed hurriedly and were talking rapidly. I have always been afraid of fire, especially in a hotel. I got out of bed, went to the door and opened it. At that moment I received my first shock.

Standing in the open door of the room directly opposite mine stood a girl in her nightdress peering out anxiously, just as I was doing. The corridor was lighted and I could see her plainly. The marvelous feature was that she was myself. There was not the slightest difference between us. We were both in nightdresses, the hair of both was worn in a braid hanging down the back, and her face and figure were replicas of mine.

Both gave a little scream of surprise, and both drew back into our respective rooms. I shut my door and groped my way to my bed. All thought of danger was put out of my head in this remarkable apparition of my other self.

The physician in charge of the seminary I had attended had warned me that if I did not give up study I would break down. But, desirous of being graduated with the class as well as at the head of it, I had disregarded his warning. Now, it seemed to me, I was paying the penalty of my obstinacy. My mind must be giving way. It was long past midnight when I bethought myself that on opening my door I must have looked into a large mirror. I would have got out of bed and satisfied myself of this, but feared to find the contrary, and if I did I would not get any more sleep. So I comforted myself with the assurance that I would in the morning find a mirror opposite my door and dropped into slumber.

I was called early for the train, and when I left my room looked for the mirror. Alas, there was no mirror there, but a door just as I had seen it in the night. I had no time to make investigations, needing to go down to breakfast and to the station.

By the advice of my physician I spent July and August that summer at the seashore. By September I was much improved and spent the month in the mountains. This restored my health, but did not relieve me of an uncanny feeling at having seen myself or my other self at the hotel during my homeward journey. Two years passed during which I had gradually driven the matter out of my mind when I saw the vision again.

Singularly enough, I saw it under circumstances somewhat similar to those connected with its first appearance. It was the second summer after the one during which it had first appeared to me, when I was at —— Springs. I had a room in an extension of a hotel, facing another extension. One morning on arising I went to a window, and there at another window in the other extension stood my double. We were both, as before, in nightdresses and wore our hair plaited on our backs.

Nothing could have induced me to remain at that hotel for another day. I was with friends and surprised them by announcing that I would leave by the next train. They wondered, expostulated, pleaded, but to no purpose. One of them, a girl of my own age, with whom I was very intimate, begged me to tell her why I was leaving and what was the matter with me, for it was plain that I had received a shock of some kind. I would not have told her for the world. I declined to tell any one but my physician, and I wished to consult him as soon as possible. I was sure that I suffered from some kind of mental breakdown, and I only hoped that he would find means to arrest its progress.

On reaching the city I sent for him to come to me at once and told him of this second vision of myself. He tried to reassure me by telling me that I had seen some one who looked very like me. I refused to be comforted. I had seen myself or my exact counterpart. I told him that only one of my own flesh and blood could so closely resemble me and that I had no sister or even cousins so far as I knew. Besides, if this vision were a real person I would see her in a different dress from my own. The doctor explained this by saying that as I had seen her at night and in the early morning I would naturally see her in the dress I wore myself, both of us wearing nightgowns. I tried to consider this within the limit of coincidence, but it was impossible for me to believe that two persons could be so identical in appearance that they should meet twice and both times see each other in a nightdress. No; I had seen this vision first at a time when my physician had warned me that I was breaking down. I had been overstrained. What had I been straining? My mind; therefore it was my mind that had been giving way. This reappearance of the vision would naturally denote that my mind was again giving way. I shuddered. I saw myself confined in a lunatic asylum, a mental wreck.

My friends to whom my malady became known used every argument to disabuse my mind, some of them assuring me that my vision was a real person closely resembling me. Others averred that people in a disordered state of the system were liable to see all sorts of things. A theosophist declared that I had seen my spiritual self at moments when it had been lifted out of my bodily self. To this person I replied that when I had seen the vision I was very well fixed in my own body. I consulted two specialists in brain diseases, one of whom told me a great deal about the cerebrum, the cerebellum, the dura mater and other substances of which the brain is composed and their reciprocal relations, nothing of which I understood. The other told me that I was myself producing an image of myself. He admitted that the first vision might have been caused by a disordered system. His advice was for me to drive the matter out of my mind. Occupation and amusement would assist me to do this.

Young Dr. Penrose did more to reassure me than any one else. While he did not claim to explain my trouble, he told me that it was of no importance. He pronounced me in excellent health and assured me that a time would come when I would look back on my fears as entirely uncalled for. It was not so much his words that reassured me as his personality. He had such a cheerful and at the same time sympathetic manner. He evidently believed what he told me. Since he was the only person who could reassure me I made frequent visits to his office and found every excuse to call for him to come to my home. The result was a love affair. Whether his reassurances affected me because the little god had from the first wounded me or whether I loved him because he gave me comfort no one else could give I don't know.

I engaged myself to Dr. Penrose in the spring, and that autumn I came of age. I knew I was to be paid some money when I was twenty-one which had been in the hands of a trust company. Whether it had been left me by my father or my mother I did not know. I had no remembrance of either of my parents. I had lived with my aunt ever since I could remember anything and had understood from her that both my father and my mother had died when I was very young. I had arranged to be married as soon after I came of age as I could get possession of my property. My fiance was a struggling physician, with nothing but his income from his practice, and we needed my inheritance.

A few days before I was twenty-one I was notified by the trust company that any time I would call on or after that date, prepared to sign receipts, my property would be turned over to me, but they would like me to name a day and hour I would be there that they could have present such persons as might be necessary. I replied that I would call at the bank at 2 o'clock on the afternoon of the day I came of age.

I had come to rely on Dr. Penrose for matters of importance, and as we were to be married within a few weeks after getting possession of my fortune I asked him to accompany me to the bank and see that nothing was done that should not be done. On the day appointed we went together to the trust company, were received by one of the officers connected with it and shown into a room where we were asked to wait a few minutes. Presently we were ushered into an apartment in the center of which was a long table. There, standing on the opposite side of the table, was the apparition I had seen twice before. I staggered. Dr. Penrose caught me and steadied me.

"My double!" I moaned, shutting out the apparition.

The doctor saw what I saw—a girl the exact image of myself, but dressed differently.

"Good!" he cried. "If that is your double you have been frightened at a real person."

A gentleman present said:

"I am told that you two young ladies need to be introduced. You are twin sisters and inherit share and share alike in the estate of Wilbur Langford, both being his daughters and heirs."

My sister on seeing me had shown the same evidence of shock as myself. We looked at each other for some moments; then both started with one accord around the table and met in an embrace.

Of that domestic trouble which separated our parents, one taking my sister, the other myself, of their subsequent early death—our mother of a broken heart—it is not necessary that I should give an account here. My sister and myself having been brought up separately, the trustees were instructed to bring us together when we came of age and received our inheritance.

It was some time before my twin and myself could be torn apart in order that we might sign papers spread out on the table to receive our signatures. The business having been finished, we left the bank with our arms about each other's waist, telling of out experiences after our two former meetings. She, too, had suffered, but nothing like myself, since she felt sure I was a real person.

At my wedding my only attendant was my sister.

HIS ACCOMPLICE.

The Obliging Old Lady Who Helped the Struggling Boy.

When a kind old lady in walking along a north side residence street beheld a small boy struggling vainly to reach something between the gratings of a tall iron fence surrounding a palatial residence she paused to watch his operations. The object of his quest she discovered to be a handsome mechanical toy, an automobile that would run when wound up. The boy had a stick with which he was trying to pull the machine toward him, but as he could scarcely reach it the struggle was well nigh hopeless.

"Let me try it," said the old lady. "My arm is longer than yours."

"All right," replied the youngster, relinquishing the stick.

Getting down on her knees, the old lady, by dint of much stretching and careful manipulation, gradually worked the machine toward the fence and at last had the satisfaction of seeing the little boy grasp it with eager fingers.

"Now," she said, "you must be more careful and not let it get away from you again."

"Gee," said the boy, "it never got away from me, an' it ain't goin' to neither."

"Wh-wh-why," faltered the old lady, with the dawning of a horrible suspicion, "isn't it yours?"

"You bet it's mine now," said the kid, and away he scampered, leaving the good old lady alone with her conscience.—Atlanta Constitution.

DODGED THE DUELS.

Voltaire's Disastrous Attempts to Make De Rohan Fight.

Literary men in dueling times and countries have always been rather prone to get into trouble from which only a passage at arms could extricate them. Voltaire had at various turns a number of duels on his hands, but counted among them two which did not reach the expected climax.

One of these was his affair with the Chevalier de Rohan Chabot, who goaded him to the point of fighting and then, instead of giving him the satisfaction demanded, had him lured into a coach and soundly whipped with switches by some hirelings concealed there.

Voltaire, after trying in vain to induce one of his noble friends to back him in his further pursuit of his enemy, appealed to the municipal authorities in these phrases: "I humbly represent that I have been brutally assaulted by the courageous Chevalier de Rohan, aided by six cutthroats, behind whom he was bravely posted. Ever since that time I have sought to restore not my honor, but his, a task too difficult."

As this public affront failed to produce any effect, Voltaire hunted out the chevalier one evening at the theater and flung insults in his face there. Rohan at last consented to meet him, but contrived to let the news reach other members of the Rohan family, who had Voltaire arrested and thrown into the Bastille.—New York Post.

This Year's Baby Crop.

In spite of high food prices, our national baby crop promises to be a record breaker. Based on figures compiled by a Boston economist, its value for 1910 will be $4,887,000,000. These figures represent, approximately, of course, the economic value to the United States based on potential productive capacity of the 2,500,000 babies which it is calculated will constitute this year's crop. This makes each six pound youngster worth about $2,173, or $362 a pound.—New York Herald.

ANNUAL RUSH OF AMERICAN VISITORS TO THE LAKES IS EXPECTED THIS WEEK

Registrations at Kawartha Park, Viamede and McCracken's—Bonfire Float at Kawartha Park—Viamede Shore Party—Stoney Lake News.

(By a Review Reporter.)

The past week at the lakes has been a quiet one.

There is a temporary lull preceding the busy tourist season. But although the boats have yet to be plied high with the baggage of the visiting multitudes of our American cousins, there has not been a scarcity of visitors by any means. The cottagers have taken full advantage of the beautiful weather, and there have also been many guests at the summer resorts.

The annual rush of tourists is expected this week, and many rooms have been engaged in advance at the Stony Lake hotels. On account of this it has been impossible to supply accommodation to many who have applied.

The early morning boat, which makes connection with the train in Lakefield that arrives in Peterborough at seven o'clock, gives an appreciated service to the Peterborough citizens who want to reach their places of business in time to open up at the usual hour.

The late registrations of guests at Kawartha Park, Viamede and McCracken's are:

KAWARTHA PARK.

Mr. and Mrs. Osborne, Manchester, who are in Canada on their honeymoon.

Mr. Heinz and Dr. Walls, Pittsburg.

Mrs. E. B. Edwards, of Edmonton, wife of Col. Edwards, formerly of Peterborough.

Mr. H. G. Anderson, Toronto.

A BIG BLAZE.

There was a big fire at Kawartha Park on Saturday night. The guests and cottagers in the vicinity have absolute proof of the incendiaries responsible for the blaze. The flames blazed high for over an hour, and in spite of the interference of the moon, could be seen for a great distance.

In other words the bonfire float was a big success and a pleasant variation in the round of amusements at the park.

SHORE DINNER.

A large number of the guests at Viamede attended the towing party and shore dinner held this morning. The day was a delightful one for the outing.

PERSONALS.

J. H. McClellan went up to the lakes Saturday on the "Bessie Butler," returning this morning.

A party on board the "Rob Roy," consisting of Messrs. R. M. Roy, Donald Denham, Jack Irwin, John Harstone and Vaughan Mitchell, made a trip round the Kawartha chain last week.

Messrs. H. J. Davis and A. W. Davis Painesville, New York, are at Mount Julian.

Miss A. E. Marie Parks, Toronto, is a guest at Tawsentha.

Mrs. E. S. Clarry, Peterborough; Misses A. Revell, Agnes Hall, New York; Miss Florence Buck, of Toronto, and Mr. L. F. Hall, Peterborough, are at Mr. A. Hall's cottage, Boschink.

POLICE FOUND FIVE PURSES

One Contained Ticket From Peterboro to Norwood--Two Toronto Girls Arrested

Toronto World: Jennie Morley, 36 Ontario street, was arrested Saturday by Detectives Tipton and Newton, charged with stealing a chatelaine from the Eaton store. Her sister, Ida Fotheringham, who served a term for thefts from houses where she represented herself as a servant, was taken with her and charged with vagrancy.

At Ida Fotheringham's boarding-house in Church street, the detectives found a chatelaine containing five small purses. The police are anxious to see if anyone knows of these. All are small and one contains a clipping from a newspaper telling of the birth of thirty-first child in Quebec, another contained an unused excursion ticket from Peterborough to Norwood. There was also a box of white woolen shawls stamped 707 and marked B 73143. There was also a pair of child's shoes, with a bill from Backrack's store. Anyone knowing anything of these goods will please notify the detectives at headquarters in the City Hall.

PLEASANT DANCE AT CHEMONG

The pavilion at Chemong Park was the scene of a very enjoyable dance on Saturday night.

A large number of Peterborough young people, and also summer residents at the park were the participants, and the music for the evening was supplied by Mr. Thomas Lake and Mr. Cummings.

The following are some of the Peterborough ladies and gentlemen who were present: Misses Ada Minns, Grace Burritt, Muriel Burritt, Connie Gordon, Margaret Eastwood, Florence Pearce, Robena Cummings and Isobel Morphet and Messrs. Jack Eastwood, Fred Denison, Gordon Cummings, Roy Dixon, Charlie Ackerman, Leslie Stevens, George Mahon and Thomas Lake.

WERE UPSET IN THE RIVER

Two young men from the city were upset in the Otonabee yesterday afternoon when doing some trick canoeing.

They were attempting a balancing feat, but the stunt didn't come up to anticipations, hence the turnover.

BUTTARS—McKINNON.

The home of Mr. and Mrs. Donald McKinnon, Cobourg, was the scene of a pretty marriage on Thursday afternoon, July 14, when their daughter, Helen, was married to Mr. Chas. Buttars, Peterborough, son of Mr. and Mrs. Buttars, Cobourg. The bride was for some time organist and choir-leader of the Cobourg Presbyterian Church, and among the many beautiful gifts which she received, was a cabinet of pearl-handled knives and forks from the choir, and a Limoges china set from the managers and session. The house was decorated with lilies, palms and sweet peas. The bride wore white silk mull with baby Irish lace trimmings and carried white roses. Miss Florence McKinnon attended her sister and Mr. Wm. Buttars of the Cobourg post office staff was best man.—Toronto Globe.

NOTHING BUT A MILLION

Nothing but an attendance of a million will satisfy the management of the Canadian National Exhibition this year. And, with the Grenadier Guards band, Aeroplanes, Model Military Camp, the greatest fireworks programme ever prepared and a hundred other special attractions they should get what they've long been after.

LAKEFIELD ELEVATOR DESTROYED

(Charlton Bros. Grain Plant Wiped Out)

IN A $12,000 CONFLAGRATION

Blaze Broke Out Last Night and Made Great Headway in Frame Structure--Eight Thousand Bushels of Grain Eaten up by the Flames and Machinery Ruined--Building Was Owned by Dickson Company---Other Property Was in Great Danger.

Special to the Review.

Lakefield, July 18.—Charlton Bros'. grain elevator and its contents were completely destroyed in a $12,000 fire which broke out last night about nine o'clock, from some unknown source, although electric wiring is suspected as being responsible for the blaze.

OTHER LOSSES PREVENTED.

The fire was first noticed by Mr. William Leggott. The Lakefield volunteer brigade was immediately called into service and did commendable work considering its facilities. Six streams were directed on the blazing building which was, however, beyond salvation, but inflamable properties were fortunately saved.

The office with the firm's books and papers escaped the flames. Coal sheds attached to the building, a blacksmith shop nearby and the lumber in close proximity, were all saved.

8,000 BUSHELS OF GRAIN.

There were eight thousand bushels of grain in the elevator, principally oats and peas and quite an extensive mechanical plant.

DAMAGE AND INSURANCE.

The loss to Charlton Bros. is fully $10,000, and it is met by insurance to the extent of $8,500. The elevator, which was owned by the Dickson Company, Peterborough, was insured for $1,500, but this does not cover the damage to within $300 or $400.

The Nijni Novgorod fair of Russia is the greatest market in the world. It lasts six weeks an the business amounts to $150,000,000.

A NEW HOTEL FOR THE CITY

Considerable interest attaches to the change of ownership that has taken place with regard to the George street property known as the City Hotel building. This belonged to the James Dolan estate, and it has been on the market for several years, in the hands of Mr. H. Rush, for the estate. For many years it has been in use as one of the local hotels, with several changes of tenants.

It is understood that the Messrs. Braund made an offer for the building, which is in a good business position and directly in the line of travel from the southern part of the city. They proposed to form a company, in fact formed it tentatively, and would open up a large department store, using the whole of the premises, and in addition, building additional space to the rear. Two other offers were made for the build- for other parties, through local real estate men. Finally it was disposed of, it is understood, to the Central Canada Loan and Savings Co.

On Saturday Mr. Robert B. Cronn was in the city, coming here from Calgary, where he has a large hotel property, doing a very successful business. Mr. Cronn is one of the very oldest of the Peterborough men who have gone away and made good in other parts of the continent. He has been in business in the Western States, and in Chicago, having left here nearly forty years ago. He was proprietor of a hotel at Couer a'Alene, Idaho, in the palmy days of the mining boom, and afterwards at Edmonton for seven years. He was the pioneer in the hotel business in Winnipeg in 1872, and further on handled the Palace Hotel, on Notre Dame street, in the same city.

He came here to look over the property with a view of opening up a thoroughly modern hotel, and one that would be almost ahead of the needs of the city just now, but looking to the future and to future expansion. If his ideas are carried out, and he says he has others interested with him, the proposal includes overhauling the property, cutting in the street front, so as to recess the front back from the street about thirty feet, and to build behind, where there is ample room to do so. Another story would be added, and the whole thing built up thoroughly modern and with a good deal of style. Mr. Cronn has faith in the city and its progress, and that a house along the lines outlined will pay. So far as experience is concerned, he has had ample, and knows the hotel business most thoroughly.

It is understood that the property changed hands at the figure of $53,000, a very neat price to pay for property with the frontage of the one under consideration.

WILL GIVE $10,000.00; SENATOR COX'S OFFER

For some months past the official board of Charlotte street Methodist church have been discussing the advisability of the erection of a larger place of worship, and during the past week a deputation from the church waited upon the Hon. George A. Cox and laid the matter before him.

Hon. Mr. Cox might be termed one of the fathers of Charlotte street church, having been connected with it since the very beginning, and when the matter of building a larger church was suggested the board naturally turned to Mr. Cox for advice.

Mr. Cox was favorable to the plan and laid three propositions before the members of the deputation for their consideration.

If a new church is erected upon the present site on Charlotte street he will give $10,000 toward it. If they build upon what is known as the Aaron Cox property at the head of Simcoe street, he will give them the eastern wing of the large double house that stands there and all the property to the east of the house, and if neither of these are chosen he has offered them enough land on the A. L. Davis estate at the head of Hunter street, west, upon which to erect a church and parsonage, and in addition $25,000 in cash.

These generous offers are characteristic of Mr. Cox, and at yesterday's services at Charlotte street church the pastor, Rev. G. W. Henderson, told the congregation the results of the interview.

The matter will be laid before the church, and after all those members who are at present absent on vacations, have returned, and a vote by ballot will be held to decide which of these three splendid offers shall be accepted.

BRANDON SUN ON THREE BOOKS BY LOCAL WRITER

CHEER UP—JUST BE GLAD—THE HAPPY LIFE

(Jim Pursel in Brandon, Man., Sun.)

Every book that comes from the press interests somebody, but now and then someone gets away with a little volume so close to being real human that there's something about it that touches all of us.

The page that gets me may not interest you, and what you fancy may not appeal to me. But there seems to be a thought for each of us and for everybody else. There's talk that listens like the talk of someone who knows you and who knows me, and recalls for both of us thoughts that in these strenuous times neither of us may ever meditate upon—homely thoughts that tend to soften our natures and to ease and comfort others.

Most of us work our thinkers overtime on schemes for money-getting or in outguessing our friends, or in petty matters that it's a scandal to lose time upon.

Occasionally some writer breaks in upon us with a sentence sermon that makes us feel we might do better than we're doing—that we might gladden our hearts by being more human, and doing something in an odd moment for the common good of all.

"Cheer Up," "Just Be Glad," and "The Happy Life" are three volumes just issued by the Dodge Publishing Company, New York. The author is Charles F. Raymond, a Canadian. If you're from Ontario you've read the glad words of Charles F. Raymond. "C.F.R.," or "Charley Churner," in the Toronto Star or News, or the Hamilton Herald. If you've read them they've never done you any harm. You've found a sermon in every story—a sermon that perhaps made a softer feeling towards somebody.

Charles F. Raymond may have been a "rounder," he may be a faddist, or a dreamer, but he says some mighty nice things, he utters some fine thoughts, he gladdens a heart here and there, he helps one forget the worries and the heartaches. There's hope and gladness and happiness in what Raymond says. There is something for the betterment of you and me in "Cheer Up," "Just Be Glad" and "The Happy Life." You can get these books from your bookseller and you'll prize the volumes if you get them. This is no ad.—just a tip on "How to Be Glad" and "Cheer Up"—a tip we often find ourselves badly in need of.

You enjoyed Bob Serviss in "The Songs of a Sourdough." You'll get some gladness out of Raymond's little volumes.

C. F. Raymond is now editor of the Review, Peterborough, Ont.

MUSIC EXAMS GRATIFYING

Mrs. Greenslade is to be congratulated on the success of her pupils who acquitted themselves most creditably in the recent midsummer examinations of the Toronto College of Music.

Miss Mabel Rehill passed the first year piano examinations with first-class honors, and in primary piano Miss Ezetta Chambers also obtained first-class honors.

In senior rudiments Miss Alberta Rehill and Ruby Carr passed with honors in senior rudiments. The latter is only twelve years of age, and her showing is, therefore, a particularly good one.

Saturday's performances across the way, were rather refreshing and apart from a burning desire of some of us, to muzzle several of those who took part in the proceedings, everybody was satisfied. Jonathan Oluham and his basket of grab bags took the ribbons, and Salubrious "Fish" Haney, took the guff. Incidently, many of the gathering had to take considerable from him, his Umps, included. The cheerful one from the haunts of dew worms and little fishes, had a very busy session and when he wasn't grabbing flies, he was in close proximity to the hook, and it was felt that on many occasions he should have got it, and right where Jennie places her souvenir pins. Only once did he shut down and at that moment, the lid of Sam Ray's box of cigars almost opened from sheer fright. Mr. Dickie caused the stir. It was in the eighth, after that new member from the city of smoke, had waved in vain, that the crash came. It was a healthy one and "Fish" is now suffering from an attack of aeroplane neck. He watched the flight and saw the return to terra firma on his own side of the fence. By this time, Mr. Dickie was singing sweetly at the second odd corner.

Before proceeding further let us waft a few buttercups at the youngster who paroled his beat at the first stopping place, for the collection in gray. Rarely have we seen made such artistic connections. Nineteen of them without a letup. Mr. Heff you're a dandy. Kindly remain in the city in the event of another meeting and let us see you perform again. And then there were Gussie and Minnie. It was a shame, the way both of them acted. Either could put it all over old Midas of the yellow stuff, when it comes to being miserable. They wanted everything and got it. Little Pittsburg at the left pillow too, had a grudge and that contribution from him on his first assignment, made us wish for more, but we didn't get any of exactly the same brand. It might be interesting to get at the bottom of the trouble between Messrs. Flaherty and Quinlan. There must be something very wrong. At least it looked that way, for in the second, the first named handed out a presentation of a home ticket to Messrs. Logan and Konold and in the eighth, what did the second named individual do but hand out two more in pretty much the same manner. While the other two were also given free of charge, there was nothing unusual about the circumstances

Has any one here got a score book? was a new one to be sprung for the first time. This one is distinctly original, and Mr. Haney has the copyright. It was greeted with open arms. "How to swim without fins." and "Why I didn't score from third." were others to be well received. The complete details are herewith appended;

First Innings.

T.A.S. had first poke at the ball, and V. Corkery started the proceedings by placing a hot one at Konold. The visitor from Smokytown fielded cleanly and sneaked the ball over to Heffernan for the prettiest throw of the game. Callaghan managed to grab the first pillow, but was caught off second, Rose to Logan. O'Hearn went out pitcher to first.

West Ends—Campbell grounded out to Flaherty, but Logan waited for four. Konold was safe when Flaherty dropped Callaghan's throw. Dickie's fly got its feet tangled in the fish net. Brudie laid one down to Giroux, and when the throw went to the grandstand Logan and Konold connected with the plate. Heffernan ended by slamming out to O'Brien. Two runs

Second Innings.

Logan threw Quinlan out at first, but McFadden was safe on Smith's error. There was nothing sleepy, however, about the way in which Rose threw to Minorgan and tagged the runner at second. Haney sent up a high one to Dickie.

Flaherty stopped Smith's attempt at the bag, but Minorgan's grounder was too easy for Giroux, and it went speeding on its way. Rose fell down for the first strike out. Minorgan took second. Campbell biffed between centre and right, and Minorgan scored when the throw in went all to the bad. Campbell took third and scored when Quinlan missed an easy fly from Logan. Konold went out at first. Two runs.

Salubrious F. Haney

Third Innings.

Giroux flew out to Dickie. O'Brien grounded out, Konold to Heffernan. Flaherty collapsed, Logan to first.

Giroux was sent to second and O'Hearn to short. Dickie was out at first. Brydie took a pass and stole second. Heffernan skied to Haney, and although McFadden missed Smith's third strike the runner never saw first.

Fourth Innings.

V. Corkery was an easy out, but Callaghan hit safely, and took second. O'Hearn grounded, Minorgan to Heffernan. Callaghan scored on Quinlan's hit to centre. Campbell's bad throw allowed Quinlan to make third, but the runner was hurt on Konold's attempt to tag him. Callaghan took his place and crossed the plate before McFadden's grounder had been fielded by Minorgan. McFadden was thrown out at first, but the umpire allowed Callaghan the score. Two runs.

Flaherty took the box, Quinlan taking first. Minorgan struck out. Giroux got under Rose's fly and Campbell grounded out, Flaherty to Quinlan.

Fifth Innings.

Haney was safe on Konold's miss and Giroux sacrificed him to second. O'Brien was out, Rose to Heffernan. Flaherty hit over second and Haney came in. The ball was thrown to the plate by Campbell and as it touched the bat which Flaherty had thrown down, the umpire ordered Haney back to third, declaring it to be a block ball. Corkery sent a bounder at Minorgan and was out at first.

Logan missed three. Konold walked and Dickie was hit by batted ball at the plate. Brydie grounded out to Quinlan.

Sixth Innings.

Callaghan was out on a close one at first, and O'Hearn died at the same bag. Quinlan was hit and McFadden made the third out at first.

Heffernan sent a high one to Haney and Callaghan grabbed Smith's effort Minorgan took the count, Flaherty to Quinlan.

Seventh Innings.

Haney received an ovation on striking out, and Cahill, who had replaced Giroux, was another victim. O'Brien was a cinch for Rose and Heffernan.

Rose put one up to Flaherty. Campbell hit and took second, but was out at third, McFadden to Callaghan. Logan fanned.

Eighth Inning.

Flaherty was out at first. Corkery failed to connect, and Callaghan flew out to Minorgan.

Konold swiped for three. Dickie biffed one over Haney's head for the third cushion, and scored when Quinlan dropped Cahill's throw of Brydie's grounder. Quinlan muffed again when O'Hearn threw to get Heffernan, who grounded, and both runners were safe. Smith laid one down to Cahill and again Quinlan missed, Brydie scoring. Minorgan was out to Flaherty and Rose was easy at first. Two runs.

Ninth Innings.

O'Hearn went out, Konold to Heffernan and Quinlan and McFadden ended the game on grounders to Minorgan.

FOOTBALL

In Midland Intermediate Ontario Football League semi-finals Claremont beat British United by 1—0 on the Pines Athletic Field Saturday afternoon. This was a return game, Claremonts having also won by 1—0 last Wednesday.

At the time of winning the championship the C.G.E. team decided to challenge for the Ontario championship, but this step will not be taken. Had the challenge been entered, Claremont would have been the opposing team.

LACROSSE

In the first of the series for the Minto Cup Montreal were defeated by New Westminster Saturday by a score of 10—4. The game was fairly even at the start, but the cup holders had it on the easterners after the game advanced. Montreal men were penalized for a total of sixty minutes.

Sergeant Morris Nearly Wins King's Prize at Bisley.

Bowmanville Rifleman Comes Close to Winning Great Event at National Rifle Association Meeting and Carries Off Standard of Empire Prize—Other Valuable Trophies Captured by the Dominion Competitors.

Bisley Camp, July 18.—Corporal Radice, of the Oxford University Rifles, is the winner of the King's prize, with a total score of 340; second, Sergt. Morris, 46th, Canada, scored 337; third, Sergt. Beveridge, 6th Scottish Rifles, 336; fourth, Sergt. Ommundsen, Queen's, Edinburgh, 336. Radice was leading at the finish of the shooting at the 800 yards range, the first in the last stage of the match, with Morris of Canada second. At the finish of the second range shooting, 900 yards, Morris was fifth, ten points behind the leading score.

Morris was third in the contest for the Bisley event in 1909, with a score of 316.

Lord Roberts inspected the overseas teams and congratulated the Canadians on their success.

Morris' position entitles him to the N.R.A. badge and $300, which goes into the team winnings.

Canada has twice won the King's prize. In 1895, Pte. Hayhurst, 13th, Hamilton, won it, and Pte. Perry of Vancouver captured it in 1904.

In the National Challenge Trophy, Steele, Clifford, Freeborn and Latimer shot in the Irish team. Scotland won, with England second.

In the Armorers, Richardson was 9th, winning $10; Bayles 10th, $5; Steck 21st, $5.

Staff-Sergt. Bayles is the winner of the Association Cup.

The following men won prizes in the St. George's first stage: Stuart, 103rd place, $10; Crowe, 106th place, $10.

In the King's first stage, Sharpe was 107th, winning $20; Freeborn, 111th, $20; McHarg, 112th, $20; McInnes, 122nd, $20.

One hundred competitors entered the last stage of the St. George's match Saturday, firing 15 shots at 900 yards. Following were the scores of the Canadians: Eastwood 65, McHarg 63, McKie 63, Steele 61, Steck 68, Richardson 63.

Lieut. Humphrey won the St. George's Challenge Vase, with Williams of Australia second.

A Canadian Suggestion.

Washington, July 18.—The International Railway Commission, when inaugurated, will be a new tie with Canada and is hailed as a long step toward closer relations with the Dominion. The commission as proposed will regulate through freight and passenger rates across the border.

It was learned Saturday that the proposal came from Canada. Needless to say, it has been enthusiastically welcomed in Washington.

Martin A. Knapp, chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission, who has been designated by Mr. Knox, Secretary of State, to confer with J. P. Mabee, chairman of the Railway Commission of Canada, over the preliminary details of the plan, said that he had been in correspondence with Mr. Mabee for several weeks on the subject.

PICK-UPS AT THE BENCH

The City League umpire has a grievance. The conduct of some of the players of the league is not just up to the mark in fact it closely resembles the style which a number of small boys would take, during the progress of a game of "roll the bat." The sight which was afforded in Saturday's contest, when the umpire's decisions were disputed, was not a new one. It has been seen many times before.

The play that Callaghan pulled over in the fourth, when he ran from third to the plate for Quinlan, the umpire says, was what is called a stolen run. With two out and two strikes on McFadden, Callaghan ran in on the next pitched ball, and made the plate about the same time the ball was batted to short. While Minorgan fielded and threw McFadden out at first, making the third out, the umpire allowed the score.

Perhaps some day local ball managers will wise up a bit and play the home brews. It takes practice to be able to play baseball, and no matter how, when and where a player who drops into town has played, he is not to be compared with the regular, who is always out to practice and does his best to boost the team. He may have made errors, and not have been hitting, but it is a mistake to sidetrack him and fill his position with another who, while he really may be a star performer, is not in shape, but gives that impression, through the use of a full supply of warm air.

It is not likely that the schedule will be finished. The league has not been a paying proposition. The expenses to the four clubs for the grounds, balls and the umpire, have been on the wrong side of the receipts. There will, however, be exhibitions between picked nines and an endeavor will be made to bring some outside teams here.

HE WON THE CROWN.

The Ancient Story of the "Bloody Hand of Ulster."

The emblem of the Ulster steamship line is a huge red hand, from the wrist of which a flowing drops of blood. An official of one of the vessels of the line gave this explanation of the queer device:

"It was in the early days of Ireland, when James I. was king and when Ireland was divided into four provinces, that the king of Ulster died. He had two sons, who were devoted to each other and who at the time of their father's death were on the isle of Aaron, Scotland. In those days the eldest son did not always succeed the father on the throne.

"They were brave lads, these two sons of the old king, and upon learning of the death of their father each planned to race across the channel and be the first to place his hand upon the soil of Antrim and thus become king of all the north.

"With eight men each they started off from Mulicantry. On nearing the shores of the isles the youngest prince, whose name was Neill, seeing that his brother was in a fair way to become king, drew his sword, placed his left hand on the side of the boat and cut it off at the wrist.

"Quickly seizing the dripping hand, he threw it on shore and thus won the crown. Since that time, it is told, the bloody hand of Ulster has led to victory on many a hard fought field as emblem on the shields of the young king and his followers. Ulster's name, whether in trade or war or sport or on a steamship line, is known by this sign."—Philadelphia North American.

NEW AMERICAN INDUSTRY.

Widespread and Rapidly Growing Interest in Pheasant Rearing.

In an interesting bulletin on "Pheasant Raising in the United States," issued by the department of agriculture, it is stated that within recent years a new industry, the rearing of pheasants, has begun to engage attention in the United States, and propagating ventures, ranging from the single pen with one or two pairs of birds to the pheasantry of many acres and thousands of birds, are scattered throughout the country.

The English ringneck pheasant (Phasianus colchicus × torquatus), a hybrid between the English and ringneck pheasants, has been brought from Europe in large numbers. It is generally correctly named, but is sometimes designated as English pheasant, ringneck pheasant and even Mongolian pheasant. It often has more or less of the blood of the versicolor pheasant of Japan (Phasianus versicolor. In England both the English pheasant and the English ringneck are referred to as the common pheasant.

RINGNECK PHEASANT.
[Part of tail does not show in picture.]

It is the Mongolian pheasant (Phasianus mongolicus), which has a more or less complete white ring about the neck, but in other respects resembles the English pheasant more than it does the ringneck and is rarest of the four kinds in American preserves and aviaries. It is a native of the region about Lake Balkash, central Asia.

A pheasantry may be started with mature birds or with eggs. The latter to be hatched by barnyard fowls. Many are tempted to begin with eggs because of smaller cost, but the uncertainties attendant on hatching the eggs and raising the young are such that it is probably cheaper to secure full grown birds at the outset. If eggs are to be tried they should be ordered in January or February, to be delivered in April or May. They should be placed under the hen as soon as possible.

Pheasants may be obtained from reputable dealers or they may be imported from Europe or Asia. If stock be imported trouble may be saved by securing it through experienced and reliable bird importers who are familiar with the business. A pen should be provided and supplied with food and water. On the arrival of the birds the crate should be placed in the pen,

MONGOLIAN PHEASANT.

an opening should be made in the crate (preferably in the evening) sufficient to allow the birds to escape one at a time, and the attendant should withdraw, leaving the birds to find their way out alone. For the first few days they should be disturbed as little as possible.

The prices of pheasants vary with the season. They are lowest at the close of the breeding season and increase gradually until the next. They vary also according to the dealer. But so many things are to be considered, such as purity of stock, freedom from disease, care in shipment and other details, that the lowest prices do not always mean the cheapest birds. English ringneck pheasants are least expensive—about $5 a pair.

Any well drained ground is suitable for pheasant pens, but a gentle slope of sandy loam, comparatively cool in in midsummer, furnishes ideal conditions. Clay is the poorest soil for the purpose, as it is likely to foster diseases. The pens should be provided with plenty of both sunshine and shade. They should be constructed of chicken wire, like ordinary poultry runs. Each pen should cover at least 100 square feet, more if possible. Contracted quarters induce disease and afford their timid occupants too little protection from alarms. The pen should be from six to eight feet high and should be inclosed above with wire. If the pheasants are likely to be disturbed much, cord netting should be stretched six inches or more below the top wire to prevent the birds from injuring themselves by flying violently against the top, as they are apt to do when frightened.

It is of course feasible to keep pheasants in a pen open at the top by pinioning them or clipping their wings, but pinioning, besides disfiguring pheasants, disables them permanently. Birds that are to be liberated should never be pinioned, as it makes them useless for sport and a ready prey to natural enemies. Clipping is objectionable owing to the necessity for frequent repetitions. Pheasants are timid, and the less they are disturbed the better, especially when breeding.

The pens and sheds should be kept scrupulously clean. There is no more fruitful source of disease among pheasants than uncleanliness. Nevertheless chips and twigs may be scattered about to attract insects, and boughs for shelter should not be omitted. Each pen should be thoroughly spaded and limed every two or three years. Cover should be provided for the birds. The pens may be sown with clover, timothy and other grass early enough to furnish ample cover by the time the birds are turned in. Small evergreens may be grown inside with decided advantage.

Careful protection must be provided against various enemies. The bulletin gives many details of interest and importance to persons intending to rear the birds.

POULTRY AND FRUIT.

One Man Found the Combination a Good Paying Proposition.

By the natural association of ideas one thinks of some opposite or related thing when another is mentioned. Thus white suggests black, the sun the moon, summer suggests winter, clouds suggest rain, and growing fruit suggests poultry as a natural and inevitable combination necessary for success.

Years ago one man started in to grow fruits. The trees thrived, fruit set plentifully, but there were worms in the peaches, plums fell off, apples dropped, grapes were denuded of leaves, and bugs of various sorts worked in the strawberries and blackberries.

Professional horticulturists advised spraying with some of the many fungicides and poisons. But his small amount of fruit would not justify the cost of a practical spraying outfit, and the hand power sprayer was a back breaker, besides proving costly and inefficient.

As the damage to his fruits came principally from insects, he determined to get after them. In one corner of the grounds was a sweet pea trench with plants perfect in leaf and bloom that grew and blossomed profusely. Every other trench of sweet peas in the neighborhood was riddled and ruined by grasshoppers. An old hen with a flock of chicks fist size tethered near the thrifty trench of peas suggested the poultry and fruit combination. If they kept the bugs from the peas enough of them would keep down the insects in the fruit yard.

A strong argument for the fruit and poultry combination is immediate returns. Under the most favorable conditions you must wait for from two to five years for a good crop. Strawberries alone pay well the first year. Grapes, blackberries and raspberries yield well the second year and heavily the third and fourth. Peaches and plums should begin to yield well in three or four years and apples in from five to seven. But the hen pays the next day after her purchase—pays in eggs, pays a few weeks later in chickens and pays all the time in the destruction of insects.

If the poultry investment is made as it should be, when the trees are planted, the results are much better. But an old orchard may be cleaned up and greatly benefited by cultivation, giving the poultry a chance to get the grubs that develop later into injurious insects or feed on tree roots. The hen in her capacity to do good by destruction of insects and to grow into money in eggs and meat has the greatest possibilities in the way of a money maker of anything on the farm. Without counting the benefits, only figuring net cash returns, the United States census of 1900 shows that poultry brought in 400 per cent per annum. Their worth to the farm because of insects and weed seeds destroyed is equal to another 400 per cent. The health and pleasure made possible by fruit on the farm table the year round are fully another 400 per cent. No other combination on the farm can come within hailing distance of this combination.

Handy Little Farm Boiler.

Here is a handy portable boiler for light uses on the farm, says the American Agriculturist. It consists of a beer keg screwed to a wooden base, a loop of three-quarter inch iron pipe about three feet long to extend into the kitchen or other fire, a screen of asbestus to protect the keg from the heat, a safety valve and a three-quarter or one inch discharge pipe leading to a one-quarter horsepower engine. The boiler is capable of running a one quarter horsepower engine for turning a grindstone, a churn and other light machines. It thus can be made to save little drudgeries where larger engines and boilers would be too costly.

A Man Implicated.

Ottawa, July 18.—A young woman of 25, who was found drowned last week in the Rideau Canal, has been identified as Ethel Arney of Montreal. She had been a waitress at the Cecil Hotel here for about ten days. The police are not satisfied that it is simply a case of suicide, and are hunting for a man who was seen frequently in her company. There are, however, no marks on the body to suggest foul play, but it is believed that an unknown man is directly or indirectly responsible for the tragedy.

PENMAN MEET HERE ON LABOR DAY

The city of Peterborough is to be favored on Labor Day with the largest and best athletic meets in her history. The best amateur athletes from all over Canada, and that means some of the best in the world, are to be here and will compete for the several individual and club championships.

Work has now been commenced on the track over at Riverside Park, and when it is completed it will be first-class in every way.

This meet is run entirely under the auspices of the Young Men's Christian Associations of Canada, and is under the sanction of the Canadian Amateur Athletic Association.

There will be such men as Bobby Kerr, Jack Tait, Frank Lukeman, Chuck Skene, Lou Sebert, Goulding, Archibald, Knox and a host of others just as good.

Among the clubs there will be the keenest competition. The West End Y.M.C.A. at present holds the Penman Shield, and they have felt for some time that they have the sole right to hold it, but there are a couple of other associations that think there is some chance of Toronto West End getting fooled this year. Foremost amongst these is Toronto Central, and it will be interesting to see who wins.

This big attraction has been secured by the local Y.M.C.A.

TOO MUCH KELLY TO SUIT PASTOR

New York, July 18.—Because the "Lead, Kindly Light," of his church's organ is frequently drowned by the "Has Anybody Here Seen Kelly?" of neighboring phonographs and pianos, and because he cannot always make himself heard in the pulpit above the laughter and talk outside, Rev. H. D. Coe, pastor of the Richmond Hill Baptist Church, printed in the local newspapers an open letter, in which he requests the residents of the neighborhood to make less noise during church services.

"For several Sundays it has been almost impossible to hold our services," said Mr. Coe Saturday night. "On Sunday evenings every resident of the neighborhood seems to start a phonograph or commence playing the piano. Groups of young persons sit on porches and make much noise.

"I decided to request through the local papers that the neighbors make less noise after last Wednesday night's prayer meeting. The organ had just commenced playing "Lead, Kindly Light,' when a loud phonograph started 'Has Anybody Here Seen Kelly?' The effect was indescribable. I was almost half through my sermon, which was on the duty of parents to children, when a group started singing 'What's the Matter with Father?' Then I thought it time to call a halt."

The distance between the two cities is 900 miles as the crow flies and 1,948 miles as the mails go.

East Liverpool, Ohio, July 18.—Adelbert Keddie, aged 21 years, was shot by Detective Ira Ricket of the Anti-Saloon League force Saturday night. The shooting occurred in the business section of the town, Keddie was standing on the sidewalk when Detective Ricket, it is alleged, attempted to shoot Alvin Dawson, 21 years old. Dawson escaped the fire and Keddie was shot through the left ankle. Ricket escaped, pursued by a crowd, but ran into the arms of Policeman Fowler. He and Dawson were taken to the city jail, followed by a crowd of several thousand persons. Threats were made to lynch the detective, but he was finally landed behind the bars. Extra police were placed on duty at the jail to prevent a repetition of the Newark tragedy of eight days ago.

The railroad company asks that the pictures be suppressed, and the mayor is making an investigation.

Took the Dare.

The third time he attempted a longer flight, and his machine now lies broken to pieces on the field, while he himself was rendered unconscious and was hurried to the hospital, where his condition is reported as precarious.

GRAND TRUNK RAILWAY TRAINMEN QUIT WORK

Company's Offer to Arbitrate Rejected by Men---All Trains Went to Terminals Last Night and Quit---Where Will it End?

Montreal, July 19.—One of the most far-reaching strikes ever launched in Canada began last evening at 8.30. The Grand Trunk conductors and trainmen having been ordered out by Vice-President Murdock of the Brotherhood of Trainmen.

Although both parties evidently felt that a strike was in the air, the breaking off of negotiations was a surprise to the public generally, who thought that President Hays would give in at the last moment, and that, perhaps, the men also would not go so far as to strike.

Now, however, the die is cast, and 3,500 men on the Grand Trunk, from Portland and to Chicago, and 350 men on the Central Vermant, are now pledged to fight the company to the bitter end, in order to enforce their demands for the standard rate of wages in that particular territory.

The bolt from the blue heaven was the announcement from the company that their shops at Montreal, London, Toronto, Stratford, Port Huron, Battle Creek, Portland, Chicago and all other points would be closed indefinitely, throwing perhaps over 5,000 men out of employment. This will affect 2,520 men here, 700 in Toronto and 1,000 in Stratford, and its effect may be calculated from the fact that the pay-rolls at the Montreal shops amount to $150,000 per month.

President Hays, discussing this feature of the great industrial upheaval, stated that he regretted having to deprive so many good men of their work, but that the company was face to face with a great conflict which, he held, had been unjustly forced upon them, and which left an absolute necessity for the course he had taken.

President Hays offered yesterday afternoon to leave the dispute to an independent arbitration, the decision to be binding on both sides, but the men would not hear this, and negotiations came suddenly to an end.

It came out last evening that the company have for weeks past had private detectives and other officials scouring the country for days past getting together non-union train crews and it remains to be seen what success has attended their efforts. On Saturday over 40 delegates left here for their respective districts carrying orders to strike unless the company would come to time before 9.30 last evening.

At 10.30 a fairly-sized crowd gathered at Bonaventure to see if the 10.30 Toronto train would run out. There was very little delay, however, and the train left only a few minutes late, manned by a non-union crew aside from the engine. Vice-President Murdock, after telling of the men who had left Saturday, added: "We ...

Mr. Hays to-day when he elaborated somewhat on his original offer, that the standard wage would be adopted by January, 1913. The committee replied that they could not set aside the expressed wish of the men, even if they felt like doing so."

In the afternoon the committee and officers presented Mr. Hays with the last possible basis of settlement that could be considered, which proposed to put into effect a temporary modification of the standard till 1911. Mr. Murdock went on to say that Mr. Hays had refused completely the board's recommendation to standardize conditions on the Grand Trunk, proposing to perpetuate existing conditions.

"There is a protective fund of $1,000,000 back of us," he also said, "and we will have no trouble about getting $350,000 monthly. Fifty dollars a month will be paid to the members of the order of conductors and $35 a month to trainmen."

Four freight trains out of Montreal were cancelled last evening.

The Grand Trunk telegraphers will not strike as before intimated, they had a meeting yesterday afternoon with President C. M. Hays and agreed to let their differences go to arbitration.

THE BATTLE ARRAY

ON STRIKE .... 3850 Men
G.T.R. 3500
Central Vermont 350
DEMAND—Standardization of wages and working rules.
OFFERED—18 per cent. increase in wages and full demand not later than January 1, 1913.
THROWN OUT .... 5000 Men
The company has issued an order closing down the big car shops during the strike.
MEN OUT—Conductors, brakeman, baggagemen, yardmen. Engineers and firemen are not out, having their own agreement with the company that has not expired, and the operators and despatchers did not strike, reaching an agreement yesterday.
STRIKE BREAKING—Despatchers, freight agents, road foremen, yard masters, travelling engineers and rule instructors pressed into service as impromptu conductors and brakemen.

Only passenger trains are being run on the Grand Trunk system to-day, and there is a very irregular service on these.

The strike, which has been threatened on the G.T.R. for some time, took place at 9.30 last night, when all the strikers went out on a general order of the union.

Peterborough is of course, affected, by the general refusal of the conductors, brakemen, baggagemen and yardmen to work till the salary schedule has been raised to a point that will give the men the same pay as the C.P.R. employees.

FIREMEN AND ENGINEERS ON DUTY.

The firemen and engineers are still on duty, but the passenger trains are not being run with any regularity, owing to the fact that the other employees are out.

When the strike was decided each train was taken to its destination, but did not pull out again.

The Lindsay train reached Peterborough at 10.30 last evening and did not pull out again.

Trainmaster Dan McMillan was conductor on the Toronto train this morning. This train and the Belleville train were the only ones that went through on the G.T.R. to-day.

There was no Lindsay local this morning.

THE LOCAL MEN AFFECTED.

The following Peterborough men are affected by the strike:

Toronto train—Conductor F. Haskill, train baggageman J. McLean and Brakeman McKeely.

Lakefield train—Conductor George Jobbitt, Brakeman Dinsdale and Baggageman Lancester.

Yard crew—L. Sullivan and R. Kearns.

NO ORDER FOR C. P. R.

Mr. W. S. Dodd, the station agent for the C.P.R. was seen by the Review this afternoon as to whether the C. P. R. had been given any instruction to lift G.T.R. tickets.

"Under the circumstances," Mr. Dodd replied, "no such order would be given. The employees of the C.P.R. and the striking trainmen all belong to the same union and it would only antagonize the C.P.R. interests to give such an order.

The company wouldn't think of doing so and the men wouldn't consent to work under such conditions anyway.

In the case of a washout or wreck or some such occurrence, it would be different."

MUCH INCONVENIENCE.

The suspension of traffic on the Grand Trunk Railway caused by the strike has already created much inconvenience locally, but this will be small in comparison to what will be caused in the event of the strike being prolonged.

Merchants, and particularly those, dealing in perishable goods, will suffer considerably, as large orders for fruit have been booked, and a delayed shipment means a big loss.

BREAD HELD BACK.

This morning Wm. Stock & Sons, who have a large outside bread business, had their consignments of bread at the station, but it was not until 1.30 this afternoon that it was all sent on its way.

GENERAL UTILITY.

The Belleville train was put into extra service and made a trip in charge of Conductor Adams to Lakefield, and on its return here relieved the pressure somewhat by going as far as Lindsay. It arrived back in time for its regular trip to Belleville.

LAKE TRAFFIC.

Traffic to the lakes will likely get a big setback as a result of the strike.

SOME BENEFITS.

The business at the local livery stables will be increased to a very noticeable degree, and the boats plying between here and Stony Lake will be called upon to work overtime.

AT 3.30 TODAY IN THE QUEEN CITY

HUNDREDS OUT

Special to the Review.

Toronto, Ont., July 19.—It is estimated that forty-five hundred G.T.R. conductors, baggagemen, yardmen and brakemen are idle to-day as a result of the strike orders sent out from Montreal at 9.30 last night.

So far the company has been able to keep passenger trains running pretty well on time, freight trains, however, are not being moved to any extent.

Ex-employees, company officials and office men have been pressed into service to handle the trains.

BOTH SIDES CONFIDENT

The strikers everywhere profess confidence that the trouble will be over within a short time with a victory for them.

The railway authorities are equally confident that the company will win out, and that shortly.

No trouble of any kind is reported from any point so far.

IT IS RUMORED THAT MONS. SBARETTI HAS BEEN RECALLED

Monsignor Will Not be Present at the Eucharistic Congress and Opinion is Expressed That He Has Been Adjudged Unnecessary at Ottawa.

Montreal, July 19.—As the opening of the Eucharistic Congress is only a few weeks away, it is nothing more than natural that the interest in this great Roman Catholic function should be daily on the increase. His Excellency Mgr. Sbaretti, for a number of years papal delegate to Canada, will not be amongst the dignitaries present, and no one appears to know if he will ever return again to the Dominion. It has in fact been felt for some time past that the papal delegate is like a fifth wheel to the ecclesiastical coach in this country, for as yet no one has been able to see what he has done that could not have been accomplished by the archbishops and bishops of the Dominion.

Mgr. Sbaretti was looked upon as a political appointment, a former Minister having convinced the Vatican that the natural leaders of the church over here wanted assistance, as the coming of the first delegate was brought about by a petition sent to Rome, signed by every Catholic Liberal member of the Senate and House of Commons. The statement was made not long since by a Roman diplomat that the presence of a delegate in Canada, had not its raison d'etre in this country. If in fact his excellency was to be a fixture in the country, his absence at so great a church function would certainly be the cause at least of universal comment. His excellency has not been too happy in his treatment of certain questions of high Catholic import, such as the appointment of an archbishop to the vacant see of Ottawa, and the unfortunate college question of Ste. Marie de Manoir. It is generally understood that the delegate's relations with the archbishops and bishops since his arrival in this country have been of a very pleasant nature. To be sure many of the lower clergy and even the faithful at times, supposing they had grievances and who went to Ottawa for redress have in almost every instance been kindly told by the Pope's representative in Canada that the matter at hand was one within the exclusive jurisdiction of their bsihops and on no account could he interfere. Thus on almost every occasion the democratic spirit of the church government in this country has been maintained, and his excellency, if he never returns to the scenes of his labors in the Dominion, will leave very little heart burning behind him.

As far as the outside world knows, Mgr. Sbaretti's relations with the Ottawa Ministers have been cordial in the extreme, and it is a well known fact that Roman Catholic members of both Houses of Parliament have invariably found in the delegate a careful listener in any matter they have had to lay before him.

Eleven Killed In Australian Wreck.

Vancouver, July 19.—A special cable from Melbourne, Australia, states that a crowded suburban passenger train crashed into the rear of a stationary train during a fog at Richmond station, four miles north of Melbourne. Eleven people were killed and 68 injured. The accident happened in the morning during the rush hours. The injured were taken to the hospitals at Melbourne. Some will die.

Milk Caused Infant Mortality.

Ottawa, July 19.—Of 200 babies that died in Ottawa this year, 97 died during August alone. The cause of death, says the city health officer, was chiefly owing to the difficulty in preparing and keeping ordinary milk at the homes. To combat this the city has decided to have milk prepared in several different strengths and put up in bottles, one for each feeding.

Goderich Farmer Killed.

Goderich, July 19.—While Thomas Harrison, aged 70, of Goderich Township, was taking in his hay crop, his team ran away and he fell off the wagon. The shock to his system, accompanied by profuse bleeding, resulted in his death.

Struck While Iron Was Hot.

Cannonsburg, Pa., July 19.—Leaving the red-hot metals in the rolls, three hundred men struck at the Standard Tin Plate Mill here yesterday for a ten per cent. increase in wages. The company on Saturday refused the men's demands.

GIRL HANDED HIM LEMON; SUICIDES

Colorado Springs, Col., July 19.—Clutching in one hand a revolver, in the other a lemon, with a note attached reading: "From Lottie, July 17, 1910." James S. Hunter was found dead in his rooms early yesterday, a suicide. When Hunter fell in love with Lottie Collins, 16, and avowed his love, the girl said not a word, but left the room. In a few moments she returned and handed her admirer a real lemon, to which she had attached a bit of paper reading. "I love my steady, but, oh, you sometime."

Double Drowning In the West.

Hanley, Sask., July 19.—Alice and Emma Kilching, daughters of Mr. and Mrs. George Kilching, accompanied by the two daughters of Robert Wilson, went bathing in Beaver Creek. Alice and Emma went into the water first and moved towards deep water. None of the party could swim and Grace Wilson relates that first Emma and then Alice Kilching got in deep water and sank.

COST OF BEING BEAUTIFUL

Washington, July 18.—Because she was too pretty for Washington, Miss Mary Todd has left town to seek a position where she will not be troubled with attentions from male admirers. The young woman has lost four positions during the past year because of her prepossessing appearance. Starting in as a stenographer she worked a week and then found her employer paying more attention to her than to his dictation. As a shop girl the floor-walker monopolized her time and she was discharged. She then tried work in a millinery establishment and again as a stenographer.

"I have been overwhelmed with offers of marriage," she explained. "Most men forget that I was already married."

THE PREMIER AT BRANDON

Promises to Attend to the Request for Terminal Elevators, But Balks at Idea of Government Ownership.

Brandon, Man., July 19.—Sir Wilfrid put in one of the busiest days of his trip in the wheat city. In the morning he received a civic welcome. In the afternoon he had an extended conference with over two hundred delegates of the Manitoba Grain Growers' Association and later met a deputation from the Board of Trade, who asked that a branch line from the Grand Trunk Pacific, some fourteen miles away, be built. The most important meeting of the day was the Prime Minister's conference with the grain growers who presented four memorials:

1. Asking for the abolition of the duty on agricultural implements and a readjustment of the tariff for revenue only. 2. Government ownership of terminal elevators. 3. The establishment by the Government and operation under independent commission of abbatoirs. 4. A chilled meat train service, the immediate building of the Hudson Bay Railway by the Government and its operation under a commission.

To the terminal elevator proposition Sir Wilfrid promised immediate attention. He was not prepared then to go the whole way towards public ownership, but that was the only remedy. He saw no "serious difficulty" in the way. At the outset the Prime Minister discouraged the abbatoir scheme, and both he and Hon. George P. Graham, Minister of Railways and Canals, were silent upon the Government ownership and operation of the Hudson Bay Railway. From the Premier's reply, there appears to be no immediate indication that Brandon will be connected with the Grand Trunk Pacific, although his remarks were intended to convey the impression that at some time this would be done.

Investigation shows that the waves of the Atlantic are probably larger than those of any other body or water, reaching 42 feet. Waves of this size look much higher from the deck of a vessel.

WRIGHTS BROKE CONTRACT

So Say Aviation Meet Officials and Suit is Entered

Toronto, July 19.—The International Aviation Association have, through their solicitor, Alex. MacGregor, entered suit against the Wright Co. of Dayton, Ohio, for $40,000 damages for breach of contract, dated the 5th of July, 1910, in connection with the furnishing of aeroplanes and aviators for the recent aviation meet at Toronto.

The association officials claim that the agreement made by the Wright Co. provided two things: First—That the Wright Co. would furnish one aeroplane on July 7, two on July 8, three on July 9, three on the 11th, three on the 12th, two on the 15th, and two on the 16th. Second—The Wright Co. agreed to furnish four aviators, namely: Ralph Johnstone, A. R. Walsh, Duval LaChappelle, and A. Hoxsey, who were to appear and fly on the above dates.

It is claimed, in regard to the first part of the contract, that the Wright Co. had only one machine in operation during the time of the meet, and that on Tuesday, July 12, they failed to make any flight whatever, and on two other days, they were unable to get a machine off the ground until very late, when they only made a short flight, and were obliged to make further repairs. During these three days, Ralph Johnstone endeavored to make repairs, but apparently was unable to do so. The equipment of the Wright Co., the association officials say, contrasted very unfavorably with the methods of Count de Lesseps, who was under other auspices, who, had three experienced mechancis to keep his machines in order; and, as a result, did not fail to make flights on each day.

ARCHBISHOP NOT NAMED

Ottawa, July 19.—A report emanated from Montreal to the effect that Mgr. Gauthier, Archbishop of Kingston, has been made Archbishop of Ottawa, was denied yesterday at the archbishop's palace. Mgr. Sbaretti, papal delegate, is abroad and his secretary, Mgr. Sennott, is out of the city.

It is said here in ecclesiastical circles that absolutely no information has been received as to the successor of the late Mgr. Duhamel. The name persistently mentioned is that of Rev. Canon Gauthier of Montreal, not Archbishop Gauthier.

MORE WORK FOR FIELDING

Ottawa, July 19.—Hon. W. S. Fielding will, at the request of Hon. L. P. Brodeur, represent Canada at the International Congress of Navigation, which will meet in Brussels on the 30th inst. He will support the invitation of the American delegates that the congress shall hold its next meeting, in 1912, in Philadelphia, and will include a proposal on behalf of the Canadian Government that if the invitation to Philadelphia is accepted the delegates shall include in their program a tour of the principal inland and maritime navigation channels of Canada.

Another Italian Murder.

Jaffray, B.C., July 19.—L. Pellrinter, employed on a C.P.R. section gang here, was stabbed through the heart by another Italian, Frenztr Chilla, Saturday night, and died instantly. Chilla disappeared at once, and gave the police a lively chase for twenty-four hours. He was captured by Constable Boardman of Coal Creek and taken to the provincial jail at Fernie. It is reported that the murdered man's money had disappeared.

COW ATTACKS FIREMAN

Centerville, N.J., July 18.—It required the entire volunteer fire department of this village to rescue a cow and a calf from the abandoned Mulford iron mines near here to-day. The calf was less than a day old, and its owner, Thomas Harrington, is so proud of it that he has named it Miner, and refused a good cash offer for it. The cow and calf were taken from a ledge a few feet wide just below the mouth of the shaft. Had either fallen they must have been killed. Harrington saw the cow there Sunday morning, but could not get it out. He finally sent an appeal to the volunteer fire department. When it arrived the calf was there, too, and when an effort was made to remove the calf the cow attacked the firemen. Finally they roped the cow, hoisted it to the surface and then it was an easy task to get the calf on solid ground.

Auto Party Dumped In Lake.

Saranac Lake, N.Y., July 19.—A big touring car dashed over a 30-foot embankment and dumped its four passengers into Saranac Lake, but nobody was hurt. The party consisted of Mr. and Mrs. T. J. Janes, B. Fox and L. Beck, all of Montreal. The car skidded when they turned out for a team.

French Railway Strike Likely.

Paris, July 19.—The engineers and firemen affiliated with the National Railroads' Union will meet on July 28 and pass upon the action of the central committee of the union, which declared a general strike.

The central committee demands an increase in wages and minor concessions.

AN OFFICER OF THE LAW

If what is charged against Constable Campeau, of Hull, Que., is true, he is sufficiently equipped mentally to be an officer to debar undesirables and open and shut trunks at the frontier. The young son of Alexander Proulx, of Hull, fell in the water and was fished out, being unconscious. But he had been submerged only a few minutes and the frantic father sought to recusitate the lad. But the wise constable prevented him, pending the arrival of the coroner. The parent said that he felt respiratory movements, but was brushed aside. No one can portray the agony of that father in that hour. And this man, this obstructor who prevented him was an officer of the law.

THE HEAVY WAGON

The city authorities yearly tinker with George street, and no sooner is it placed in A.1 condition than teamsters with a load of heavy gravel drive down and cut it up. This is but natural for the teamsters to take the best road, but is it fair to the city? There is talk of putting permanent pavement on George street, and then the carter may take a much heavier load. If the pavement holds, well and good; if it doesn't, of course it can be mended again. In Toronto and in other cities heavy wagons are not allowed on certain streets.

AYLESWORTH CONDEMNED

This summer has been the open season for Mr. Aylesworth. Hardly a church court has met anywhere in Canada without taking a shot at him. Methodist Conferences in Ontario and the Maritime Provinces, Presbyterian General Assembly and Presbyteries Baptist gatherings, Anglican Synods, all have condemned the strange leniency shown by the Minister of Justice towards the Toronto vendors of obscene books. In this matter, observes an Eastern newspaper, the conduct of the Minister of Justice is incomprehensible. The men who sold the filthy books pleaded guilty. They were given the minimum sentence. Mr. Aylesworth, as Minister of Justice, at once caused them to be released, declaring that they should never have been convicted, as the books they sold were classical and scientific literature.

The books were not classical in the sense that they were ancient writings, or by well-known authors. They have no scientific value. Public librarians in Canada and the United States have rejected them as unfit for circulation. They have been forbidden the mails by the postal authorities of both countries. The Presbyterian committee which examined them found that they were simply lewd and indecent books of the crudest and most vulgar character, having no literary or educational merit, and serving no purpose except to corrupt the mind of the young and to make money for the vendor. The editor of the Toronto Globe, stalwart Liberal as he is, was shocked at the conduct and the explantion of the Minister of Justice, and declared that he would himself shoot at sight any dealer who placed such a book in the hands of his girl, except that he considered Hell too good a place for him. The president of the Globe company, a Liberal senator, supported the editor. It was found that the criminals who sold these books had a custom of distributing among young lads and girls circulars advertising these publications. Yet Mr. Aylesworth says that they have committed no offence, and has refused to allow them to be punished. In this matter the Minister stands alone. No member of Parliament and no newspaper defends him.

THIS MEANS YOU

You will yet triumph, young man, for, in spite of all the mistakes you have made your heart is in the right spot, and you will succeed. You will overcome that fault, you will win; and when, in the days that are to be, you look back and see what you have come through, you will be able to help those poor devils who fight for their lives as you do now! Young fellow, you will triumph over defeats, and the world will point and say, "There goes a man who won."

Young woman, you will triumph over envy, hate and temper. You will learn that you have much to be thankful for; that those you envy are often to be pitied; that those you hate do not deserve it, and you will discover that ill-temper and a grumbling tongue are prime factors to keep from success.

Yes, as the years go on you will overcome all these weaknesses.

You will triumph, you who are students to-day, the lessons seemed hard, the problems difficult; but you are going to succeed. You may not find your name in the list at first, but the little ant that we saw on Saturday trying to move a kernel of food six or seven times larger than itself failed nineteen times before it got it past the first obstacle.

You are more than an ant.

You will triumph in your profession, all you need, sir, all you need, madam, is the courage of the ant—nineteen times a failure. Ye gods and little fishes! some of us retire from the contest on the first defeat.

Think of the ant, and keep trying.

Mr. Business Man, you had hoped for a sudden revival and an easier market; you feel that you are up against it. Don't get cold feet; keep the window dressed; keep the ads attractive and the sign bright, and the face calm. Remember the ant, and its kernel of food.

Dad, you are discouraged. A hard winter and a backward spring has sent you into the slough. You are quite unknown, dad—one of life's insignificant ones. But, dad, educating a family is an important task. You are one of the unhonored builders of the nation.

Mother, I know you also get tired often, and weary and worn; the children are growing up, and soon will leave you. You have done your best for them, and sometimes you feel you're not appreciated. Mother, do not become discouraged. You are fulfilling a high destiny, and each child about your table is great with possibilities, for this Canada is ours, is a nation of homes, not of warriors, and you are one of those entitled to honor and respect.

Into all lives intrude the dark and dreary days, when everything seems to go dead wrong. If it is love, then we grieve; is it business, then we worry; is it a lapse into an old fault, then we know remorse; but whatever it may be, so long as there is life there is hope of a great and ultimate triumph.

Yes, and this triumph is not always known abroad, next door, or by our dearest friends. Sometimes it is a conquest in a quiet place apart.

You were defeated yesterday, well triumph to-day, for to-morrow never is.

Think of the ant in Victoria Park who tried nineteen times to land a kernel of food and at last succeeded.

MUSCA DOMESTICA

If there was no dirt there could be no flies. Flies are born in dirt and love filth with all the attachment of a young fellow loving a pretty girl If there was no garbage lying around those nice fat flies, the size of a small bumble bee and a whir like a minature flying machine, would be impossible. We have no garbage system; the authorities prefer that we have garbage and fine fat flies. They had rather that the fly die in the milk or strangle in the butter, than that a trifle be spent to abolish it. The Toronto Star comes to our rescue. It hands the editor of this paper a large-sized bouquet and then speaks of the fly. The Star says;

Charles F. Raymond, better known to Toronto people, perhaps, as "Charlie Churner is at his best in his third contribution to the Dodge Publishing Company's cheerful life series. "The Happy Life" is a little well of thought that is as pungent as it is pleasant. It is full of epigrams! "Some of us think that the bottom is coming out of everything, when it is nailed on and clinched onm the inside." "We worry about the winter, and, almost ere we are aware, winter is past and spring is here." "No man who is not gentle can be truly great."

In many of the epigrams the reader will recognize old acquaintances in a new dress; but these eternal truths, after all, are always welcome, especially in the graceful garb in which Mr. Raymond presents them. His book is one which everybody can read and enjoy; a breath of fresh air which is refreshing in the sometimes stifling atmosphere of modern literature.

Raymond didn't say—but he might have—that one of the things which does not contribute to the happy life, is the fly; "musca domestica," as learned folks call it. Its eggs are found in clusters of 60 or 70; as many as 150 mature at once, and it does not know the meaning of race suicide. If the hen would do its duty as religiously as the musca domestica, the problem of high cost of living would be half met. The Ontario Government has just issued the fortieth report of the Provincial Entomological Society, and what one writer says about flies is worthy of reproduction. The extract is perhaps the most profitable review of the book which could be offered;—

Flies are accustomed to frequent every kind of filth in the way of refuse and excremental substances and to spend a portion of their time regaling their palates with the food stuffs in the houses, especially such articles of food as sugar and milk. It has been proved that milk to which flies have had access, becomes seriously contaminated with and infected by the bacilli which the flies have obtained from filth of different kinds, and milk is an excellent medium for the growth of bacilli, especially during warm and hot weather. What are the methods, then, which we have of combating this most serious menace, for, to my mind, the fly problem in our cities is far more important than the mosquito problem, towards the solution of which thousands of dollars are spent annually—and compared with which the suppression of the fly danger is indeed as simple. They are these:—FIRST, THE ABOLITION OF THEIR BREEDING PLACES: the removal within seven days in the summer, of collectors of horse manure, decaying and fermenting vegetable substances on which the flies can breed. The substitution of the more sanitary system of sewage disposal by water instead of the older and generally insanitary and dangerous methods of conservancy. The protection of collections of manure or kitchen refuse; keep the lid on the refuse chamber. Do not allow flies to have access to food, especially such foods as milk, sugar, etc., but, where flies occur, keep all such foods covered with a muslin covering. Farmers and dairymen should not leave milk about exposed and accessible to flies. A man would not be willing that flies should have access to a glass of milk intended for his own consumption, and why should he leave milk exposed in pails in cow sheds and similar places where the flies have a maximum opportunity of covering their legs and bodies with bacilli of all kinds, especially putrefactive bacilli. "Prevention is better than cure" is almost a truism, but the welfare of the future will depend almost entirely on that one word, PREVENTION.

GENTLEMEN IN AUTHORITY, DO YOU STAND ON RECORD AS A FRIEND OF FILTH AND THE FLY, OR THE CITIZENS GENERALLY DO YOU ENJOY RAISING MAGGOTS IN THE BACK YARD OR HEALTHY CHILDREN IN THE NURSERY?

THE POINT OF VIEW

A WARNING TO SQUEEZERS.

Solomon, in Undertakers' Gazette

It is a strange fact that money gotten by fraud and crooked dealing never stays in the possession of those that make it. The other day we heard of a man, on his own confession, stole a fortune a few years ago, and who was until recently apparently enjoying the fruits of his dishonesty without prospect of molestation. A strange thing with man's law is, that one can steal and escape jail, if he does it in the right way. This man, however, could not escape the divine law, that decrees that "Wealth gotten by dishonesty shall be diminished," and "He that by usury and unjust gain increaseth his substance, shall gather it for him that shall pity the poor." Only the other day he was left high and dry with his ill-gotten gains scattered to the winds. A man came in last week who is not noted for talking morality of any particular type, and who has had a fair chance to prove what there is in the doctrine, "Look out for number one, regardless of number two." He made this startling confession, in the course of a conversation in regard to shady business transactions: "I have touched dirt, and by —— it has stuck to me right through!" This is a stray shot from one who probably scoffs at Solomon's injunction: "Devise not evil against thy neighbor."

"It's about mah ole man. He's cahyin' on high wit' a lot no-count gals, he is, an' sumfin's got to be done!"

"Do you want a divorce?"

"Go 'long, man. Divorce nuffin. Think I'se gwine to gin him des what he wants, an' 'low him to go sky-shootin' round wif dem gals? Not on you' life, mister lawyer, I don't want no divorce; what I wants is a 'junction."

If Jupiter Were Inhabited.

Calculations as to the size required for human beings on the other planets vary widely, according to the basis of reckoning. According to those based upon the attraction of gravity, Jupiter should be peopled by pygmies of twenty-eight inches. Wolfius, on the other hand, argued that Goliath himself would be accounted decidedly undersized upon that planet. He worked from the feebleness of the sun's light there, which would demand that the pupil of the eye should be much more dilatable. Since the pupil stands in a constant proportion to the pall of the eye and that to the entire body, said Wolfius, a little calculation shows that an average Jovian must be nearly thirteen feet seven inches tall—not quite four inches shorter than Og, king of Bashan, according to the measure of his bedstead given in Deuteronomy.

A Bright Blacksmith.

The greatest improvement in vehicle construction was when some bright blacksmith thought of heating the tires and shrinking them on the wheel. While many claim the honor, it is not known to whom it rightly belongs. Previous to this event tires were made in short sections and held on the felloes with nails. When starting on a long haul the driver always laid in a good supply of nails to use on the trip.—Shop Notes Quarterly.

MOTOR MILLINERY.

Artistic Headgear Arrives In the New Automobile Bonnets.

PERFUME GARDEN REVIVED.

It's Lots of Fun—A Doll Dressing Contest For Men—A Way to Rejuvenate Artificial Roses—If You Like Cucumbers, Serve Them Simmered.

Dear Elsa—I told you that we had acquired a motorcar, didn't I? Well, if I didn't it was only because I am automobile crazy and at times am not responsible for my remarks. A man I know who utterly detests "cars" said recently that one of the reasons why women were so devoted to automobiling was because it gave them a chance of doing special stunts in dressing. There may be something in this cynic's remark, maybe not, but who cares when one really loves to skim over the ground in a "lightning conductor," gowned in smart and suitable toggery, minus the horrid goggles and other paraphernalia which nobody wears nowadays?

"Quaint," my dear. This is the latest word used in and out of season in society parlance. It best describes my newest motor bonnet. How do you like the stunning little motor creation a picture of which I am inclosing in this screed? One might almost imagine that it had been designed to illustrate the remark Miss May Morris, the daughter of the celebrated William Morris, made when she lectured here in New York last winter that we owe to the motorcar the only artistic headgear that has been seen in recent years. One of its attractions is that it is light and comfortable and can be reduced by folding to a compass that will permit of its being carried in the pocket.

The bonnet is developed in gray blue surah silk. And, apropos of motor headgear, there is a learned scientist who has discovered that it is causing baldness among women. I think he must have been inspired by an unkind desire to keep the fair sex from enjoying itself. It is generally understood that one must not so expose the hair to dust as to make frequent washing necessary, but just why a light protective wrapping of silk or straw should be injurious is not quite clear. Women of past generations incased their fair heads in huge bonnets, in sunbonnets and quilted hoods, in night caps and day caps of various kinds. So if covering the hair would produce baldness it is strange that the human race was not bald long ago.

There certainly are many women who have to do sweeping and must either wear caps or have their hair filled with dust. Possibly the learned scientists can tell us why sweeping is less injurious than motoring.

A Perfume Garden.

It's the latest in gardening. "And a very little space will suffice to raise the sweetest of the perfume plants, this term being understood to mean those plants which in their flower, root or branch furnish a permanent fragrance in a form immediately available for use," says a writer in the Woman's Home Companion. She says further: "Lavender comes to every one's mind in this connection, the sweet lavender of the old fashioned linen room and press being probably the most widely known of all these plants, familiar even to those who have little idea how it grows." The seed is listed, but it is better, says this authority, to buy the plant already started, for seedlings do not run true to the variety. The lavender vera is the real sweet lavender. Give it an open, light, rather dry soil and full sunlight and free air.

It is shrubby and grows from two to three feet high. Its blossoms come in July and August and are exquisitely fragrant. Cut the flower stalks with plenty of surrounding green—the fragrance is in the green corolla and even in the leaf and branch—in clear weather, in early flower, early in the morning before the dew is off the plant, and hang immediately to dry.

But, to talk of a rose discovery, here is a scheme for a frugal housewife and home milliner. At least one brand of gelatin comes with a separate package of coloring material. Now, have just for once as dessert plain lemon or orange jelly and save the colored liquid for restoring to beauty last year's faded white roses. If you do you may have a new hat trimmed with American Beauty blossoms for nothing at all, only it is not as simple as that.

In the first place, you make two shades of pink. For the ends of the petals you make a very deep shade of pink. The roses are then brushed and dusted and dipped into the lighter tone

Then dip just the edges into the darker shade. As the roses are still wet, the two colors will blend without leaving a harsh line.

Now hang the roses up to dry with the petals downward. At this stage they will look very discouraging, limp and wilted and the leaves stuck together. But when they are partly dry they must be taken down and each little petal pulled out with the fingers and the whole rose crushed gently with the hand to make the petals curly. If this is not done the petals will stick together in a very unrose-like manner. When they are dry the roses will be quite ready for your renovated hat, and they will look as if they had just come from the millinery shop.

A Doll Contest.

I seem to be unloading all my fads and fancies upon you today, but you're strong and can stand an awful amount of nerve strain. Besides, you have told me lots of times to transmit any stray ideas I might have about me concerning new features for fairs. I obey. Materialized, the idea is this: A contest of dolls dressed by men, which is sure to prove a popular novelty at a bazaar. The contributors may be sent their dolls to dress or donate their own. They must be put on their honor to do every stitch of the work, with not even a suggestion from women friends.

The dolls are displayed during the fair and may be awarded a prize for the best dressed, the most artistic, the most original, the neatest.

More money will be made if people are allowed to vote for the different prize winners. The dolls can be auctioned later. It will add to the amusement if each man writes a sketch or rhyme descriptive of his troubles as a dressmaker. These should be signed by initials and strung around the neck of the doll.

My farewell number will be a recipe for cooking cucumbers in their skins, which, I am sure, will be a new one to you. It makes, however, a dish very attractive to the eye as well as to the taste. Wash and simmer the vegetables without peeling until tender when tried with a fork and serve with a rather thick cream sauce. The combination of the white sauce with the pale green of the cucumber is very pretty. When you give a white and green luncheon try the cucumbers for an entree. Devotedly yours,

MABEL.

EMBROIDERY HOOP.

Outer Ring Released by Pressure on Spring at Side.

One of the minor inventions that help make the little things easier for women is the embroidery hoop shown in the illustration. The merit of this hoop is that the two rings are quickly and easily separated, and that without exerting any pressure on the fabric between them. The inner ring is solid, as is usual, but the outer one has a segment out and is joined by a strip of metal bowed outwardly so as to form a spring. By pressure of the thumb on this spring the outer ring is widened and removed without any strain on the cloth between the two. Often this cloth is of such fine texture that the rubbing of it between the hoops causes tears or at least spoils the weave. A woman who has put weeks or even months on a fine piece of embroidery will appreciate the advantage of having a pair of hoops that eliminate the danger of having her work damaged at the last moment.

HOOP READY TO USE.

Noisy Nuisances.

Ill fitting doors and windows represent a happy hunting ground for the disturbing winds. In fact, so annoying does the constant rattling of these openings become that many determined individuals who resolve to admit the fresh air choose the lesser of two evils and close the openings in preference to sleepless nights. This can be remedied if a small wedge of wood be driven in at the side of an open window. A door can be prevented from rattling if a pad or strip of thick felt be nailed on the edge of the door.

The annoyance of creaking drawers can be eliminated by rubbing common soap upon the top, sides and bottom of each.

Creaking hinges on anything should be well oiled, while the grating, irritating noise of a sewing machine can be overcome in a similar manner.

The little noises wear away the patience that is required for other things. It is foolish to dissipate energy through the channels of irritated nerves when a little time will obviate the nuisances.

Whistler Let Them Wait.

Whistler's laxity in the matter of engagements was notorious. No one ever knew if he were coming or not to affairs. But his point of view is explained in his answer to a friend of his who knew that he had an engagement to dine with some swells in a distant part of London and who felt that it was most impolitic for Whistler to offend them. It was growing late, and yet Whistler was painting away madly, intently.

"My dear fellow," he said to him at last, "it is frightfully late, and you have to dine with Lady Such-a-one. Don't you think you'd better stop?"

"Stop?" fairly shrieked Whistler. "Stop, when everything is going beautifully? Go and stuff myself with disgusting food when I can paint like this? Never! Never! Besides, they can't do anything until I get there! They never do!"

QUEEN SAAV'S READY WIT.

A Story Appropriated From the Annals of Irish Royalty.

The anger of King Colm was terrible. 'Twas a fortnight before he could address himself to his queen or look her in the face and speak to her—and what he come to say to her then was that she was a shame and a disgrace to him, but sure what could be expect anyhow when he was such a notorious fool as ever to marry a beggar of a race of beggars. "Get up," says he, "and dress yourself, and leave my sight and my castle for evermore."

"Very well and good, me lord," says Saav, says she. "I'm ready. I was prepared for this, as you'll remember, before ever I married you; but," says she, "you remember your agreement—three back burdens of the greatest valuables I choose to carry out of your castle at my lavin'?"

"Thirty-three," says he, "if you like. 'Twill be a cheap price to get rid of you."

"Thanky, me lord," says she. "I'll only ask three. And before I've got them out maybe you'll think it's enough."

"What is the first back burden you choose?" says he.

"A back burden," says she, "of gold, silver, diamonds and jewelry."

In a short time the king had a burden of them piled on her that near almost broke her back, and with it she went out over the drawbridge.

When she laid it down and come back in again says the king, says he, "What will your second back burden be?"

"For my second back burden," says she, "hoist up on me our baby boy."

The king gave a groan that'd rent rocks. But he wasn't the man to be daunted before any woman. He lifted with his own hands the boy in whom his heart was wrapped up and, settin' his teeth hard, put him on Saav's shoulders. She carried him out over the drawbridge.

When she come back again says Colm, says he, "Now then, name your third and last burden, and we're done with you forever, thank God!"

Says Saav, says she, "Get on me back yourself."

King Colm and his good Queen Saav lived ever after the happiest and most contented couple that Ireland ever knew, a parable for all kings and queens and married couples in the nation. Saav lived and died the wittiest, as her husband lived ever after and died the justest and most generous, most reasonable, sensible, affable and amiable king that Ireland ever knew.—Everybody's Magazine.

TERRIBLE OFFENCE!

Sudbury Star.

On advice received from Peterborough on Thursday, Ernest Hagg, the proprietor of the Mighty Hagg circus, which showed here on Friday, was arrested early Friday morning by Chief Thompson, the charge being he had brought an unmuzzled dog into Peterborough, a prohibited district, where dogs are not allowed the freedom of their face.

The offence was committed on June 28th last, which leads one to believe that the Peterborough authorities have been a long time in making up their mind what to do. Mr. Hagg also stated that he had been showing in the district around Peterborough for several days after that on which the offence is alleged to have been committed.

He was brought before Magistrate Brodie at once and allowed out on bail of $1,000, to appear for trial in Peterborough on July 23rd.

Mr. Hagg took the affair philosophically. He thought it an injustice he should be arrested. He was in possession of a plant worth $100,000, had a cash deposit of $500 with the Ontario Government for the good behaviour of his show while in the province, and a summons would have served the same purpose.

The charge against Mr. Hagg as explained in the above, is hardly correct. The actual complaint is that the defendant brought dogs from infected into a non-infected district.

The Peterborough Light and Power Co. have moved their office to the Lundy Block opposite the Opera House.

COMMITTEE WANTED $15000

C.P.R. WANTED LAND AS GIFT

Disposal of Waterfront Property Caused Much Discussion and Divisional Superintendent Wouldn't Consent to Buy it—Subway of Victoria Harbor Air Line Will be Built at Monaghan Boundry.

A temporary split in the negotiations between the city and C.P.R. representative took place at the meeting of the railway committee of the council last night.

The main business of the session was the discussion between the committee and three representatives of the C.P.R., Mr. James Oberne, divisional superintendent; Mr. E. L. Hertzberg, divisional engineer, and Mr. V. H. Harshaw, C.P.R. superintendent for this district, concerning the proposed building through the city of the Georgian Bay Air Line from Victoria Harbor.

Fifteen thousand dollars was the price asked for the land along the water front east of Water street and recently filled in. Mr. Oberne thought that the city should give this property to the company for nothing as a concession for the road being built through Peterborough. It was explained by the committee that the land would be disposed of very cheaply at the figure asked for it. But Mr. Oberne thought that in view of the good the C.P.R. had done for Peterborough in the past and on account of the fact that the passing through of the proposed line would be of very great benefit that the property should be given to the company without payment of any money. It would take several thousands to fill it in, he said.

It might be mentioned that the company's sidings for Peterborough would be built on the land land spoken of.

But the committee were firm and Mr. Oberne was sure his company wouldn't agree to paying the price asked for and he withdrew with the hope that an amicable arrangement could be reached later.

GOOD SUBWAY ENTRANCE.

The city obtained an important concession from the company when Mr. Oberne reported that it had been decided to build a subway at the Monaghan boundary and that the only street that would have to be closed up would be Chamber street. The original plans called for the closing of Stewart, Rink, Park and Chamberlain streets.

One hundred car trains, Mr. Oberne stated, would be hauled on the track.

Mayor Morrow presided at the meeting.

THE NEW HAT BAND

Is there a chicken roosting on your straw?

In other words, is your hat band a Chantecler rag?

If not, you can't lay claim to being up-to-date in the matter of headwear finish, for the Chantecler hat band is the latest and proper design for straw ribbons. It is the summer feature of Broadway and the Ontario cities are adopting the popular innovation all over the province.

A Problem for Immediate Solution

WHY DID THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE COUNCIL ADJOURN LAST NIGHT NOT TO MEET AGAIN TILL SEPTEMBER WITHOUT FIRST SOLVING THE GARBAGE PROBLEM?

IT IS NO EXAGGERATION TO SAY THAT THE QUESTION OF GARBAGE DISPOSAL IS OF MORE IMMEDIATE IMPORTANCE THAN THE PAVING OF GEORGE STREET OR GETTING THE VICTORIA HARBOR AIR LINE TO COME TO PETERBOROUGH. BOTH THESE MATTERS ARE OF GREAT CONCERN TO THE CITY, IT IS TRUE, AND IT WAS ONLY PROPER THAT THEY SHOULD HAVE BEEN EXHAUSTIVELY DEALT WITH AT LAST NIGHT'S MEETING.

BUT THE VITAL QUESTION OF THE THREE—THE GARBAGE QUESTION—WAS NOT EVEN CONSIDERED. ALDERMAN TURNER BROUGHT UP THE MATTER BEFORE THE COMMITTEE MET BUT IT WAS APPARENTLY ONLY REGARDED IN THE LIGHT OF A PASSING REFERENCE, AND WHEN THE COMMITTEE WAS IN SESSION NOTHING WAS DONE.

THE RATEPAYERS OF PETERBOROUGH WANT THE GARBAGE PLAGUE DEALT WITH AT ONCE. THE SAFEGUARDING OF THE HEALTH OF THE COMMUNITY DEMANDS IT.

THERE HAVE BEEN MANY METHODS OF DEALING WITH GARBAGE SUGGESTED, BUT IT WOULD, PERHAPS, BE PREMATURE TO SUGGEST ANY SPECIAL PLAN. IT IS FOR THE COUNCIL TO DECIDE AS TO THE BEST MEANS.

THE FACT THAT THE COUNCIL HAS ADJOURNED THEIR REGULAR MEETINGS TILL SEPTEMBER WILL NOT PREVENT THEM FROM CALLING A SPECIAL MEETING.

AND IN THE INTERESTS OF THE CITIZENS AND IN RESPONSE TO POPULAR WISH THIS MEETING SHOULD BE CALLED WITHOUT DELAY.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

The Review does not hold itself responsible for opinions expressed by its correspondents

To the Editor of the Review.

Sir,—One thing that strikes me forcibly in looking over the revised scale of barbers' prices is the apparent injustice in the hair cut figures, which is unwhich is uniform. How aboyt the balds heads, or partially so? With a great many of us unfortunates the barber has to mow a little over the top of the right and left ear respectively, then about an inch and a half from the back of the neck, then to our chin, cheerfully demands the same price as from one fortunate enough to retain his curls. We would be a little compensated were the tonsorial artists to let us off at the same old price, which woulds olace our failure to grow hair where it should with pomades, spices, extract of anything rotten, etc., etc.; every friend prescribes a different remedy.

OBJECTED TO STREET PAVING

Ald. Buller Also Thought City Engineer Should be Assistant on South End Sewage Work—Board of Works Report on Pavements—Ald. Turner Grows Reminiscent of Cold Feet

A voice of dissension to the plan to pave George street from McDonnel to the C.P.R. station, and Charlotte street from George street to the G.T.R. Station was raised last night in committee of the whole council by Ald. Buller.

The Board of Works had reported its approval of the scheme, and it seemed as though there would be nothing for the board to do but advertise regarding the pavement, as the Municipal Act calls for, when Ald. Buller lodged the protest. He thought the step would be premature, and said the taxes were too high now.

This evoked a response of considerable length from Chairman Hicks, of the Board of Works. He argued to the effect that if Peterborough was to be paved now was the time to do it, and held that it was in the interest of good roads and a better appearance of the city to have the paving done as much as possible this year.

Ald. Turner ventured the opinion that the work would't be completed this year anyway, as there would be so much double tracking and removing of the telephone poles to be done.

Ald. Hicks, however, said he was practically assured by Mr. J. H. Larmonth of the co-operation of the Peterborough Radial Railway and Light and Power Company, and would like to see the operations proceeded with as soon as possible.

BOARD WILL REPORT.

The question of the method of taxation is case the pavements were laid was thoroughly gone into. Ald. Morgan favored the taxation of the places of business benefitted, but a division of the tax with the business men more directly effected paying the heaviest end seemed to be most generally favored by the committee.

Further discussion on the pavement question resulted in a motion by Ald. Gillespie and Phelan being carried that the Board of Works bring in a report at the next regular meeting of the vouncil in September unless developments make it advisable to hold an earlier session.

The Mayor, Aldermen Phelan and the Industrial Commissioner were appointed a committee to try and induce the Canadian Northern Railway to enter Peterborough.

ANOTHER OBJECTION.

Ald. Buller thought it an extravagance to pay $200 a week for the services of Mr. Chipman, C.E., and his assistant in the construction of the south end sewage system. He remarked it was a shame the way the people's money was being wasted. Why couldn't City Engineer Hay act as assistant?

Ald. Hicks promptly explained that the city engineer was too busy with the Smith street bridge and other matters of city engineering to have the necessary time to look after such an important contract as the south end sewage system.

Ald. Buller's views weren't changed however, and he made a motion in line with his idea: That the original mation, which was carried at a recent Board of Works meeting, be rescinded.

The mover and Ald. Graham and Morgan were the only yeas, however, and Ald. Buller's motion was lost and the recommendation of the board re the sewage construction was adopted in toto.

REMINISCENT OF WINTER.

Although the weather has been warm enough to delight any lazy dweller from the tropics, Ald. Turner thought it was timely to introduce the question of snow ploughing. He wants to see the main thoroughfares from the stations cleaned off better next winter.

His suggestion was referred to the Board of Works.

'TIS GOOD TO BE REMEMBERED

CLASS' GIFT TO TEACHER

Miss Christman Given Urn and Address by Sunday School Pupils

As an evidence of the fact that, although young, they are thoughtful, was demonstrated by Miss Gertrude Christman's Sunday school class yesterday afternoon at Jackson Park.

Miss Christman has been a faithful and efficient teacher of her class of young girls at the Charlotte street Sunday school for some years, and now on the eve of her departure for the west to reside, her little scholars kindly remembered their departing teacher.

The class, with the teacher, held a little outing to Jackson Park yesterday, and before leaving for home one of the girls read an address, and Miss Christman was presented with a beautiful little urn.

The address, which was signed by the class, was as follows:—

Dear Miss Christman,—

On behalf of your Sunday school class, we take the pleasure of presenting you with this token as an evidence of our lasting esteem, friendship and love. We could not consent to part with you without leaving in your hand some memorial, however trifling, of deep and abiding gratitude for your unceasing efforts to benefit us. When in future days you look upon this memento let it be a pleasant token of the deepest love and reverence of our young hearts.

Miss Christman was deeply touched by the thoughtfulness of her little pupils, but made a brief reply, thanking them gratefully for their kindness to her during the time she spent with them as their Sunday school teacher.

She leaves shortly for the west.

PRESENTATION OF BRACELET MADE

By Pupils of S. S. No. 12 Cavan to Their Departing Teacher, Miss Might

Miss Might, the popular teacher of S.S. No. 12, Cavan, was presented with a bracelet and an address by her pupils Monday evening at her home.

The address is as follows:—

Dear Miss Might,—It is with feelings of deep regret that we, your pupils, have learned of your departure from our midst.

Oftentimes, no doubt, we tried your patience to the uttermost, yet you were ever kind and gentle, and have made every effort to guide us in the right path, which effort in years to come we will perhaps appreciate more fully.

Will you, therefore, accept this slight token of our appreciation of your services, and may it bear with it our every good wish that happiness and prosperity attend you as you speed along the pathway of life.

Signed on behalf of the school and section,

HAZEL BYERS.
FLOSSIE STEWART.

Miss Might, though taken by surprise, made a neat acknowledgement. Afterwards games were played and a dainty luncheon served.

The Peterborough Light and Power Co. have moved their office to the Lundy Block, opposite the Opera House.

The lily is extensively eaten in China. Among the edible flowers of the Occident are artichokes, cauliflower, cloves, capers and chrysanthemums.

SPORTING NEWS

"DIMES" ARE CHAMPIONS

Y.M.C.A. Camp, Sandy Point, July 18.—Last week the baseball championship for the camp was played off between the Dimes and the Flowerites. It was a most exciting game, and up to the last innings the score stood 12—1 in favor of the Dimes, when the Flowerites made a spurt and brought the score up to 11—12, then the Dimes put the lid on and the game finished with the Dimes as champions for the season of 1910.

The winning team hold the "Camp Mug" for one year.

Some of the boys left Saturday morning for home, their week being up.

Sunday we were honored by having with us Dr. Middleton, chairman of the Boys' Work Committee.

Mr. C. Sisson and Mr. Sandford Hall spent Sunday with the boys.

Mr. Geo. Martin was a visitor with us from Saturday night till Monday afternoon.

On Sunday Dr. Middleton gave the boys a fine talk, after which Mr. Thompson thanked Dr. Middleton for his address and also "Sandy" for his kind donation of fruit and candies. The boys appreciated them very much.

Mr. Downie, Jim, and the two Hamilton boys camped at the Point over Sunday, and on Saturday had supper with the boys.

Sunday night all the boys went down to the service, which is held down at the wharf.

The boys are all well, and their appetites are the same as usual.

Hogs.

Dealers quote hogs, fed and watered at the market, at $9.50, and $9.15 to drovers, f.o.b. cars, which means $9 to the farmers.

Montreal Live Stock.

MONTREAL, July 18.—(Special.)—At the Montreal Stock Yards, West End Market, receipts last week were 2300 cattle, 750 sheep and lambs, 1200 hogs and 800 calves, while offerings this morning were 1100 cattle, 400 sheep and lambs, 700 hogs and 300 calves. A weaker feeling developed for cattle and prices show a decline of 25c to 35c, as the supply was about 50 per cent. larger than this day week, and the average quality was only medium, as a large percentage of the stock consisted of old cows and half-finished grassers. There were also about ten carloads of northwest ranchers on the market, the first large shipment to arrive this season of the wild sort, and the prospects are that the receipts of such now on will increase. There was an improved demand from local butchers, but really choice steers were scarce. There was some enquiry for export account, but there was nothing available for this trade. A few choice steers sold at $6.75 to $6.90; good, at $6.25 to $6.50; fairly good, at $5.75 to $6; fair, at $5.25 to $5.50, and common, at $4.50 to $5 per cwt. Good to choice cows brought from $4.50 to $5, and common, $3.75 to $4.25, while bulls sold at from $4 to $6 per cwt. Hog prices scored a further advance of 20c to 25c, due to small supplies and keener demand from packers. An active trade was done and sales of selected lots were made at $10 to $10.20 per cwt., weighed off the cars, and a deck load of heavyweights, averaging 370 lbs. each, sold for $9 per cwt. The foreign markets for Canadian bacon continue strong and prices are steadily tending towards a higher level. The trade in small meats was quiet on account of the limited supplies, and the undertone firmer. Yearling sheep sold at 3½c to 3¾c per lb.; spring lambs, at $4 to $6 each, and calves at 5½c to 6c per lb. for choice, and at $3 to $6 each for common.

THE SAFETY OF "FRUIT-A-TIVES"

May Be Taken For Years

The Ideal Remedy For Young and Old

Nature's gifts do us good, if used judiciously. We eat bread from babyhood to old age without ever tiring of it. We drink water, year in and year out, with the greatest benefit to our health. So too, we eat fruit in season and are better for the change of diet. This is true, because such things are the natural foods and drink of mankind. It is for this reason that "Fruit-a-tives" may be used for years in correcting some ill of the body. As is well known, "Fruit-a-tives" is made of the juices of apples, oranges, figs and prunes.

Just as fresh fruit may be eaten at every meal, so "Fruit-a-tives" may be taken every night for 20 years or more with the greatest benefit.

The absolute safety of "Fruit-a-tives" has been a great factor in its success. Those who suffered with chronic troubles such as Constipation, Dyspepsia, Rheumatism, etc., naturally took a number of boxes of "Fruit-a-tives".

As they became better, they found that instead of being compelled to increase the dose as in most medicines, they were decreasing it, and gradually taking fewer doses.

50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, or trial box, 25c. At dealers, or sent on receipt of price by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

Home Course In Poultry Keeping

VII.—Egg Production.

By MILO M. HASTINGS,

Formerly Poultryman at Kansas Experiment Station, Commercial Poultry Expert of the United States Department of Agriculture. Author of "The Dollar Hen."

[Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.]

THE factors that must be considered in profitable egg production are stock, climate, housing and feeding. We have previously discussed the worth of the various breeds as egg producers, and, presuming that the reader has already made such selection, the next thing he should see to is that he is prepared to hatch and rear a goodly number of pullets which will reach the egg laying maturity about November. This will require Leghorns to be hatched from April 15 to June 1, and in the case of Plymouth Rocks and other fowls of this type hatches should come from the middle of March to the 1st of May.

If pullets begin laying in August and September they are very likely to molt in November, with the result that they are liable to stop and not begin again until the warm weather. On the other hand, the much more frequent mistake of the farmer is to hatch the pullets out so late that the cold weather catches them immature and they remain stunted and undeveloped and never begin laying until the season of high prices is past.

The early hatched pullets should be kept laying steadily from November until the following August. As to whether they are to be sold at this time or kept throughout the second year of laying there is considerable dispute among poultrymen. It has been very carefully figured out, however, that hens lay during the second year about two-thirds as many eggs as during their pullet year. It is worth at least 75 cents to $1 to bring a pullet to laying maturity. With a yield of 150 eggs during the pullet year we may expect 100 eggs from the hen during the second year. This loss of fifty eggs just about offsets the cost of raising an extra pullet to replace the one we would sell, so it is practically an even break as to whether pullets should be sold at the end of their first laying year or kept throughout the second season. The majority of poultrymen keep hens for laying the two years.

Climate.

Climate and soil are essential factors in egg production, but, of course, cannot be controlled by the poultryman who is once located. The chief expense in egg production is the extra care and food necessary in the winter months. Likewise, in spite of all efforts, the poorest results are obtained at this season of the year; hence the advantage of being in a climate and with soil where hens can run outdoors at all seasons of the year. Light sandy soils even with the same temperature are much better for poultry for the reason that snow does not last long upon them and grass and grain would keep growing, where in heavier soil they would have long since dwindled away.

The heavy egg production of the Australia egg laying contest, which has excited considerable comment in this country, has to be largely ascribed to the mild winter climate in the region where the contest was held.

Houses For Layers.

Those who live in milder climates along the Atlantic shore from Philadelphia south and, for that matter, even on the New England coast, where the breezes from the sea melt the snow quickly, will find that the most profitable egg farming methods consist in providing the hens with comfortable sleeping quarters and without going to any particular trouble to provide them with daytime occupation. Under such circumstances laying hens may be fed grain and beef scrap from hoppers, with perhaps one mash of bran, corn, milk, cooked vegetables, etc., once a day. This is the simplest form of egg farming and is practiced at the famous Little Compton district in Rhode Island. The results in egg yield are probably not as good as where more care is taken with the hens in winter, but as the expense is less the profits are probably just as great. The other plan of winter housing and care for egg production involves the use of the scratching shed, which is kept full of leaves, straw or other litter, into which the grain is frequently scattered so that the fowls are kept busy exercising.

The distinction should also be made here between the Leghorns and heavy breeds, enforced exercise being much more essential in the latter case. Hens that are kept shut indoors must be provided with something to occupy their attention, for if standing around in a restless fashion they will fall into the egg eating, feather pulling and other obnoxious habits. In addition to grain in the litter, cabbages or split mangles may be fastened to the walls of the henhouse for the hens to peck at. The whole attention and care of the successful poultryman should be directed toward seeing that the hens are busy, contented and happy. There is a knack about this that is very hard to describe in words.

Feeding.

The principle of feeding hens is not particularly different from that of feeding young and growing chicks. Water, grit, meat, grain and green food are the essentials, and if any one is neglected good results cannot be obtained. A great deal has been written and said in poultry papers and government bulletins about balanced rations. As a matter of fact, the effort to balance the poultry rations by chemical statistics is more or less a misapplication of scientific knowledge. The point is that hens have individual preferences and will not consume their food in the portions they are given and, what is more, will, if allowed to follow their own individual instincts, probably get the chemical elements they need better than if their owner attempt to force so much food down them in machine-like fashion.

The custom of feeding hens by exposing grain in hoppers has progressed rapidly within the last few years. This method simplifies the feeding problem very much and is applicable to all birds on range and Leghorns indoors. It will not do, however, for heavy shut-in fowls, as they will become lazy and overfed. The foods exposed in the hoppers should be whole grains, and it is best to have a separate division in hoppers for each kind of grain; otherwise the fowls in scratching for the grains they most like will waste the other kind of food. This is especially noticeable when the so called dry mash or mixture of dry grains is fed in the hopper. I do not recommend ground grains fed dry for laying hens.

The feeding of a wet mash is one of the simplest ways of giving vegetables or grain food to a large number of hens quickly. The warm mash may also have some stimulating effect upon egg production; at least it is used by a great many successful egg farmers. Such wet mash made of clover, alfalfa leaves or any cooked vegetables mixed up to a stiff mash with warm water, bran shorts and cornmeal is fed once a day. The hour of feeding is immaterial, provided the hens have before them at all times shelled corn and beef scrap in hoppers.

The provision of green food in egg farming is very important both because green food is necessary to get hens in good laying condition and because one can materially cut down the expense of the grain and meat food bill by growing abundant forage crops for poultry. If the colony plan of houses is followed grain food should be provided by sowing a series of crops which in your locality will keep something green on the ground at all times of the year and moving the house about so that the fowls may have fresh pasturage. If the fowls are kept yarded this green food may be grown along the side and cut, pulled and thrown over the fence. For summer and early fall use rape, which is an excellent food, and there is little labor attached to gathering a sufficient quantity for the hens' dinner. For winter and early spring pasturage rye is perhaps the best crop, though kale planted the previous spring and fed by gathering the lowest leaves off the stock is excellent for confined hens.

In the case of laying hens the fact must not be forgotten that laying is the vital or reproductive function of the hen and that as such is very closely related to the hen's nervous organism. With the finest of houses and the most perfectly balanced rations, if the hens are not happy and contented they will not lay. Dogs and strangers about the premises are known to have a detrimental effect upon the egg yield, and careful poultrymen will not permit their hens to be frightened or worried in any manner. It is in the observation of such points as these that distinguishes the true husbandman from those who fail as poultrymen.

It is said that under favorable conditions the olive tree lives to be 1,000 years old.

Pallagra and malaria, which are much alike, are being successfully combatted by the government of Italy.

"Well Satisfied; Not Grumbling."

Toronto, July 18.—Although a considerable deficit was recorded against the two aviation meets in Toronto and Montreal, which were run jointly, the promoters express themselves as "well satisfied; not grumbling." In fact they didn't look to make money out of the exhibitions. Their chief aim was to give the people of the two cities an opportunity of seeing the foremost demonstrators of the foremost international scientific sport, and to advertise Canada to the whole world.

Manager Wilcox said last night that he had received no end of thankful expressions and congratulations from Toronto's most prominent citizens concerning the success of the exhibition here. It is considered that the people of Toronto and Montreal were afforded the opportunity of witnessing the finest flights ever made in the world to date. Count de Lesseps' achievement in flying over both cities has never been equalled when the dangerous aspects of the adventure are considered.

The expense of the two meets was greater than had been anticipated, being about $75,000, but this is due to the insistence that the best known and most skillful aviators in the world be secured. The attendance in Toronto and Montreal combined was 60,000; Montreal drew three times as many as Toronto.

Count de Lesseps leaves this week for Paris to prepare for the big aeroplane race from London to Paris. Johnston and the Wright machines got away yesterday.

Bank Manager Perishes.

Langham, Sask., July 19.—A. J. Wells, manager of the Northern Crown Bank at Langham, was drowned while bathing in the Saskatchewan River. He got caught in a swift current.

Inland Revenue.

Ottawa, July 19.—The Inland Revenue returns for June this year reached a total of $1,317,836, as compared with $1,186,948 in the same month last year.

New Treaty With Japan.

London, July 19.—The Canadian Associated Press has heard from an influential source that negotiations of an important character affecting the commercial relations of Canada and Japan will be commenced immediately after the arrival of Earl Grey in Ottawa. Ambassador Bryce has been instructed to afford any assistance the Canadian Government may require.

Landslide Hit Train.

Hawesville, Ky., July 19.—A passenger train which left Louisville Sunday night for St. Louis was wrecked by a landslide two miles from this city early yesterday morning. The fireman was killed and several passengers bruised. The locomotive and baggage-car were swept from the track and carried 200 feet. Two passenger coaches were derailed.

Plunged 100 Feet.

New York, July 18.—Frightened by an automobile last night, a horse drawing a two-seated carriage in which John J. Vorhees, a leather manufacturer of Jersey City, was taking his wife and their two-year-old daughter out for an outing, dashed through a wooden railing on the outer edge of the Jersey City boulevard, and plunged to the tracks of the Pennsylvania Railroad 100 feet below.

Mrs. Vorhees was dashed head first against a telegraph pole and instantly killed. Father and daughter were buried beneath the wrecked carriage and lay unconscious while a Pennsylvania express thundered down on them. They were taken to a hospital where it was said their injuries were serious.

Wedding Gift Thanks.

A friendly informal note should be written for each wedding gift received, says a writer on etiquette. It need not be long, but mention by name the especial gift for which you are writing thanks.

Express your pleasure and appreciation and include your fiance's name in the thanks. Write the note as soon as possible after the gift has been received.

Freshmen.

Freshmen at school or college are green enough and fresh enough for the name, but another explanation is given of how the work has come to be applied to young students. In English schools it was the custom to make the newcomers supply entertainment for the upper class men. The youngster that made the most fun received a cup of punch, the next best got punch with salt in it, and the rest got only salt water, which they were compelled to drink. After he had been thus salted the boy was no longer a "freshman."

Etiquette of Present Giving.

Both girls and young men are often very much at a loss when their friendship reaches a stage when they wish to bestow gifts—quite an early stage in man, by the bye, the dawn of special interest in any particular girl being invariably accompanied in his mind by the desire to give her something.

While his generosity only shows itself in flowers and sweets, music and an occasional book, the youth is never wrong. To lavish more costly gifts before an engagement is, however, to show himself ignorant of the usages of society and place the lady in the disagreeable position of having to refuse them. As for the damsel herself, there is one simple rule—never give a man anything until he has asked many times, and not often then.

About Manners.

Here are a few don'ts written by an authority upon social usages and good form. They sound simple, but some people seem not to have learned them:

Don't deal in personalities, especially in the midst of the family.

Don't forget as hostess to be as cordial and natural as possible, but not affected.

Don't stare at people or laugh at any peculiarity of manner or dress.

Don't talk at the theater, opera or concert while the performance is going on.

IF YOU WANT TO FIGHT IT OUT

From the age of 45 years the eyes have undergone a natural change (which no eye escapes), so that they are either out of focus for distance or near vision, especially at night. You cannot see distinctly with the paper a foot from the eyes and you need strong light. Your real need is suitable glasses If you want to fight this difficulty out with nature you may do so, millions have done it before you and have been worsted in the fight. We are relieving the eyes of such cases every day. Perhaps you will be wise by taking the matter in time.

WOODSTOCK HAS TWO MINISTERIAL SCANDALS

Rev. Warren H. McLeod of First Baptist Church, is Given a Long Holiday From His Pastorate—Accused of Being Too Intimate With the Girls—Colored Minister Arrested.

Woodstock, July 20.—The pastor of the First Baptist Church given his holidays, with orders never to return because of the circulation of certain rumors as to his associations with two prepossessing young ladies of his church, and the allegation against a colored Methodist preacher, against whom the charge is laid of having illicit connection with a girl between 14 and 16 years of age, constitute the sensations in this city.

No specific charge has been laid against Rev. Warren H. McLeod of the Baptist Church, but to the deacons of the church his indiscretions, which he is said to have admitted to them, have been sufficient to warrant them asking for his resignation. This they expect to receive from Chicago, for which city Mr. McLeod and family left last Friday.

What the deacons of the church were unable to justify in the former pastor's conduct was his associations with at least two young ladies. Although quite ready to believe his story that he had no immoral relations with them, they took the view that kissing, hugging and fondling young ladies was not commendable in a minister of the gospel and especially one who is married.

It was at a meeting of the deacons last Thursday night that Rev. Mr. McLeod was confronted with the rumors, and that the deacons were pretty certain he had been indiscreet was evident from the fact that the father of one of the young ladies was present and had informed them that his daughter had acknowledge to him that Mr. McLeod had been guilty of grave indiscretions. The girl's father is a prominent member of the church.

The minister, when asked by the deacons as to his conduct, is said to have collapsed, and admitted that he had been foolish. He would not admit that he had been guilty of any wrong towards either of the young ladies.

Rev. Mr. McLeod came to Woodstock from Amherst, N.S., where he was raised, a year ago last April. He received his college education in Chicago. He is about 34 years of age, is married, and has two children, both girls. Previous to leaving here, his wife was ill in the hospital, having undergone an operation, but was fully recovered when they left. It is said that she was entirely innocent of the rumors about her husband and ignorant of the trouble he has had with the church deacons.

What action the church committee will take is yet to be decided. If they should deem fit they can refuse to give Mr. McLeod a letter of release, which constitutes his credentials to become the pastor of any other church. It is argued by some members, however, that if they accept his resignation, the letter must be delivered to him.

Colored Preacher Accused.

The colored pastor against whom the serious charge has been laid of seducing Martha Ann Selby, colored, under 16 years of age, is Rev. James Davis. Information was laid Monday by the girl's mother, Mrs. William Selby, who resides near the church at which Davis was pastor. Davis left here before the information was laid, having stated to his congregation that he was going to take charge of a church in Brantford. It is thought that he is in Toronto.

Rev. Mr. Davis some time ago raised a big kick because he was not admitted into the Ministerial Association, and only last week the association apologized to him through the press for their failure to invite him into the association.

Davis Arrested In Toronto.

Toronto, July 20.—Last night Detectives Archibald and Mitchell gathered in Rev. James A. Davis, now pastor of the British Methodist Episcopal Church at 97 Chestnut street, who came to this city two weeks ago from Woodstock. Davis was got at 135 Lindsay avenue, where he is boarding. He was delivering an address to a select supper party when taken. He is 52 years of age and has a wife and child in Woodstock. He is a regularly ordained minister, not very dark in color, and has been preaching for 18 years.

THE LE BLANC MONOPLANE
HUBERT LATHAM

Betheny Plain, Rheims, July 18.—Messrs. Leblanc, Latham and Labouchere, all monoplanists, qualified in the aviation speed contest to represent France in the contest in the United States next October for the Coupe Internationale d'Aviation.

The speed contests in the international aviation meet here were productive of very remarkable flying by the monoplanes. Leblanc, with a Bleriot machine, beat the world's record for 100 kilometeres (62 miles), covering the distance in 1h. 16m. 11s. He also established new records at 30.40 and 50 kilometres.

Morane, also using a Bleriot machine, beat the world's record for twenty kilometres (12.40 miles), his time being 13m. 8s.

Glenn H. Curtiss' time for 20 kilometres over the Phoenix course, when he won the International Cup last fall in a biplane, was 15m. 50 3-5s.

MINERS ARE HOMELESS

Forest Fires Around Nelson, B.C., Wipe Out Mine Houses.

Nelson, B.C., July 20.—Bush fires, which on Saturday night were believed to be under control, have been blazing with terrible ferocity, causing at least four deaths and enormous damage to property. The most serious loss is reported from Kaslo distdict. The Towns of Whitewater is blotted off the map. All the buildings at McGuigan have been destroyed. The Lucky Jim, Rambler and other mines have lost their buildings. Three hundred miners, with their families, have lost all their possessions. The Powers' Lumber Co. camp has been completely destroyed, with timber and cordwood, and several valuable teams that were literally roasted alive.

The Great Northern is a severe sufferer. At McGuigan ten freight cars were consumed, bridges have been burned, and at least $100,000 worth of timber belonging to the company, consumed. The Washington, Utica and Rico mines were reported safe. The dead were Charles Norman, S. Pierson of Sandon; George Chisly and David Patterson. Edward Lucas is missing. The dead men took refuge in the tunnel of the Lucky Jim mine, where they were overpowered by smoke.

In response to a hurried summons for aid, rescue trains were despatched from Kaslo. They were unable to pass Bear Lake, but returned crowded with panic-stricken men, women and children, who are now being cared for by the citizens of Kaslo. A number are suffering from the effects of smoke, and are in hospital.

BURNING VESSEL, DESERTED BY CREW

New York, July 20.—On fire and deserted by her crew, the tugboat C. F. Roe of Brooklyn, was picked up by the tugboat Regent on the Lower Bay, off Sewarn, N.J., yesterday. The captain and engineer of the Roe escaped from the burning vessel in a lifeboat, after they had tried in vain to extinguish the flames, while the two members of the crew jumped overboard in the first excitement and managed to swim ashore.

BEARS PLENTIFUL NEAR KINGSTON

Kingston Standard.

At this season of the year when farmers are busy as they can be with their crops, it is, of course, almost an impossibity for them to organize a hunting party of neighbors large enough to rid the neighborhood of these marauding animals, but if any city sports or tourists desire an outing and exciting chase after bears, Vennachar is the place for them to visit, for the game is there lively enough to satisfy the yearnings of the most bloodthirsty Nimrod.

BETTER FREIGHT FACILITIES

Ottawa, July 20.—In an effort to better their freight-handling facilities in Ottawa, the Canadian Pacific Railway yesterday accepted options on property valued approximately at $125,000 in the district bounded by Sussex and Dalhousie streets. Negotiations for the purchase of the different parcels of land have been going on for the past week, and yesterday morning the first of the options was accepted. The land-holders have all accepted the terms of the C.P.R., and the only thing that now remains to be done to complete the purchase is the signing of the deeds, which are now in the hands of the C.P.R. attorneys in this city.

PASSENGERS FIRST LIVE STOCK NEXT

THOUSANDS AFFECTED BY GREAT RAILROAD STRIKE

Neither Side Pays Attention to Offer of Hon. W. L. M. King to Arbitrate—The Men Are Jubilant and Claim That Things Are Going Their Way—Three Hundred and Fifty Wabash Men Reported Out.

Montreal, July 20.—It is somewhat early to make predictions as to the outcome, but several features of the Grand Trunk strike became prominent at the end of the first twenty-four hours.

In the first place, no attention has been paid on either side to an intimation from Ottawa that Hon. Mackenzie King would, if requested, be glad to offer his good offices.

Then it can be accepted as granted that the C.P.R. will not allow a strike to take place on their system, and it is generally understood that the G.T.R. conductors' and trainmen's executive did not show their hand before being quite well aware that they would not have to engineer a strike on the rival road. There will, therefore, be one great strike and nothing more, although friends of the Grand Trunk are already blaming the C.P.R. for what they call want of backbone.

Two short interviews took place between C.P.R. Vice-President McNichol and Messrs. Murdock and Berry, and although the former would not say anything, the men were sufficiently jubilant to leave the impression that things were going handsomely their way. In fact, the end of the negotiations appears to be in sight.

As to the passenger service on the Grand Trunk, all of the through passenger trains are running, although some of them are a little late, and it is generally understood that the men in charge are good hands and that they have been carefully selected. In fact, the statement is made that the G.T.R. had hundreds of men in hiding all over the system, waiting till the last word was said. This, however, is contradicted to a certain extent by the fact that the suburban trains are about at a standstill. The Toronto train, which leaves at 10.30 p.m., was 10 minutes late, but it appeared to be manned all over by experienced hands. There is very little excitement at Bonaventure Station over the strike.

Vice-President Fitzhugh said last evening that they were going to let the freights look after themselves till the passenger service was properly cared for, and to this latter end the best efforts of the company will be directed.

"This is not a strike of a day," he added, "but we are making preparations to fight the strikers all along the line, and we are not going to lose."

In a few days he expected to have the passenger trains running all right, and then the freight service would be attended to. They had not time to discuss details, but the public, he declared, might rest assured that everything possible would be done for the road's customers, passengers first and freight next.

As for the suburban service, that is pretty tightly tied up, and people are coming into the city and leaving either on the electrics or by the C.P.R., which, by the way, is reaping a rich harvest.

The mails, however, are suffering very considerable delay, and Deputy Postmaster Gaudry is complaining bitterly that his men have twice as much to do as on ordinary days.

A good many people have to do without their milk, and it will probably be worse before it is better.

The men announce that 350 men have gone out from the Wabash Railway, and this, of course, elates them very much.

It goes without saying that the ramifications of the Grand Trunk are so extended that the sympathy here is generally with the company, but from all that can be learned from along the Grand Trunk and Central Vermont systems, the feeling is sharply in favor of the strikers.

When your correspondent seen Vice-President Murdoch of the Trainmen, that gentleman appeared to be well satisfied. He said:

"We were somewhat dubious when going into this strike, but everything is working fine, and with the 350 men out on the Wabash, the total number of men our reaches 4,000. As a matter of fact, practically all the men employed in the train and yard service between Portland and Chicago are on strike."

Freight Is Stalled.

Toronto, July 20.—Freight traffic is utterly demoralized on the Grand Trunk System. Carloads upon carloads of fruit and other perishable stuff that was accepted before 9.30 Monday night are stalled along the line between Toronto and Sarnia. The great livestock export trade from Chicago which was shipped over the Grand Trunk has been diverted to other lines and it is said by a minor official that this traffic will be lost for years to the company. The C.P.R. will, it is said, get a considerable slice of this trade under a long contract and will transport the exporters to the port of Montreal.

But the passenger service seems to have recouped remarkably last night from the chill it took so suddenly night before last.

This is a fair size-up of the results of the first day of the strike of the Grand Trunk conductors, trainmen and yardmen. Locally the men are confident they'll win and claim that the strikers are sticking like glue. On the other hand, the company's officials say that several conductors who went out in the middle (Toronto) division have come back, that a number of conductors refused to go out, and that every train is now manned by a qualified conductor through either of these sources or through the re-engagement of men who had been previously dismissed from the service "ior reasons."

Shippers Stand to Lose.

With regard to the loss of perishable goods through delays in transportation, it is the shipper who must bear the burden, since the railways assume no responsibility at all in the matter. This makes the situation very serious for the shipper, especially for the fruit shippers. The Grand Trunk does the bulk of the transportation of fruit in the Niagara Peninsula, and the fruit-growers are wearing a worried look.

The strike could not have occurred at a worse time for them, since the season for fruit is at its height. Shippers of dairy products are also likely to lose sleep at nights if they have to depend upon the Grand Trunk.

OH! YOU SMOKERS

St. Catharines, July 20.—"I don't say that smoking is sinful, but I do say it is ill-mannered," said Rev. Dr. Manley Benson, addressing a park audience.

"Smoking may be all right in some places, but not on street cars, on streets, or any place where people may be offended by the smell. Some people, it seems, cannot live unless they smoke, and they smoke everywhere, but when it interferes with any one else personally, then I say smoking is very bad manners."

BIG BRITISH STRIKE NOW THREATENED

London, July 20.—A strike that threatens to reach serious dimensions has broken out among the employes of the Northeastern Railroad. Traffic is disorganized.

No notice of the intention to strike appears to have been given by the men, who declare that the strike is in "protest against the generally tyrannical methods of the officials."

The trouble started in the Newcastle district, where 3,000 employes of various grades went out at 10 o'clock Monday night. Yesterday morning the disaffection spread to Sunderland, Hartlepool, Blythe and other points, where many ceased work.

It was estimated last night that between 8,000 and 10,000 men had gone out.

PREMIER PASSES THROUGH SOUTHERN SASKATCHEWAN

Sir Wilfrid Visits Rapid City, Minnedosa, Birtle, Langenburg, Churchbridge and Saltcoat Where Crop is Good—Will be Better Able to Cope With Transportation Needs on His Return Says Sir Wilfrid.

Langenburg, Sask., July 20.—In the interval between meetings, Sir Wilfrid Laurier's party yesterday had an excellent opportunity to see a part of the country that had not been destroyed by the sun. The section of the province traversed out of Winnipeg included the districts to the south and southwest that have been most damaged, where the farmers are daily plowing the wheat under, and sowing other grains for a crop of green cattle food in the fall.

A different aspect was presented yesterday morning, when, after leaving Brandon, the party journeyed to Chater, where it left the main line for Rapid City and Minnedosa. At both of the latter places the Premier received a welcome, and in reply spoke a few words along the line of interests which exist between the east and west. From Minnedosa, the Premier's special went over the northwestern branch of the C. P. R. to Yorkton, passing for the most part through the hilly country forming the Valley of the Little Saskatchewan to Birtle. All over this section of the province the crops present a fine appearance.

The C.P.R. is now seeking aid from the Government for a short line between Brandon and Birtle, and Hon. Mr. Graham took advantage of the trip to look over a proposed crossing and the station location in the town. The intervening country traversed by the projected line is ample to support a railway, and much territory will be opened for settlement.

At Birtle, Sir Wilfrid said that adequate transportation facilities would be the only means of securing for the farmers a proper remuneration for his toil, and he hoped as a result of his trip that he would return east a better man and more able to deal with the great questions presenting themselves for settlement.

While here Sir Wilfrid met Oliver Nichol, an old schoolmate, whom he studied with in New Glasgow 57 years ago.

Other stops were made at Langenburg, Churchbridge and Saltcoats. At Churchbridge, there were some rowdy interruptions while Sir Wilfrid was speaking. Otherwise the trip was without incident. As head of the R.N.W. M.P., an escort paraded in the evening to receive Sir Wilfrid.

He May Come Back.

Ottawa, July 20.—There was a rumor around here yesterday that if the G.T.R. strike persists, Sir Wilfrid will be back in Ottawa within four or five days.

GAS WORKS BLOW UP

Friedrichshaven, Germany, July 20.—The gas works of the Zeppelin Airship Co. were demolished yesterday and several persons were injured.

The managers of the plant were not present at the time, and the cause of the accident has not been ascertained. Shortly before noon the gasometer burst and the surrounding walls were blown to a great distance. Several cottages in the vicinity fell in heaps of ruins, while other nearby buildings, which held to their foundations, lost their windows.

The detonation was heard for many miles around, causing a panic in the district, and even those residing on the opposite side of Lake Constance.

PUTS IT UP TO THE ALDERMEN

New York, July 20.—Mayor Gaynor put the question of the exhibition of the Jeffries-Johnson fight pictures squarely up to the aldermen yesterday. In a message to the aldermanic board, the mayor declares that there is no law at present to prevent the showing of the pictures here. He points out that the aldermen have the power under the charter, however, to make it a penal offence to exhibit such pictures.

The mayor's message was referred to a committee.

SOME CLASS TO THIS SUICIDE

Port Arthur, July 20.—Tying a shotgun to a tree, attaching a string to the trigger, blindfolding himself and then pulling the trigger, sending a charge of buckshot into his breast, is how Peter Kurts committed suicide last Wednesday in a garden at the rear of his shack on his homestead in Dorion Township.

The body was found four days later by neighbors, whose suspicions were aroused by his non-appearance. His age was 20. He was unmarried and came here from Duluth.

CANADIAN NAVY MEDICAL OFFICERS

Ottawa, July 20.—Medical officers for the Canadian naval service are to be selected by competitive examination among Canadian candidates. Service is to be for three years, with extension to five years. For the first three years the salary will be $4 per day, and $5 per day for the next two years. Officers are entitled to $1,000 gratuity at the end of three years, or $1,500 if they serve five years.

ADVERTISE IN THE REVIEW.

GUELPH ALSO INTERESTED

Guelph, July 20.—Guelph will be represented at the banquet which will be tendered Hon. William Pugsley, Minister of Public Works, at Goderich, on Aug. 8.

Mr. Pugsley's visit to Goderich is to investigate conditions with respect to the harbor and to look into the request from that town for the deepening of the harbor and the enlargement of the wharf. This is a matter in which Guelph is interested as much as Goderich, said Acting Mayor Rudd, who added :"We have it from the manager of the elevator company at Goderich that if the needed improvements to the harbor at Goderich were carried out, there would be a great deal of western wheat handled there. It would mean, he tells me, that at least nine big wheat trains a day would pass over the Guelph Junction Railway from Guelph to Goderich during the wheat season. The revenue to the City of Guelph from its junction line would then be very materially increased."

A VERY HUMAN PARSON

Woodstock, July 18.—About two years ago Rev. Warren H. McLeod came from Chicago to accept the pastorate of the First Baptist church here, which has the largest congregation in the city. Yesterday the reverend gentleman did not occupy the pulpit of the church; instead he has left Woodstock. His departure was a hasty one and came as a result of an interview the Church Committee had with him. He was charged with undue intimacy with some young ladies of the church. Mr. McLeod is a married man with one child. He was a clever pastor, drawing $1,800 salary.

And why should there be one set of morals for the minister and another for the pew?

Some of us pride ourselves on our morality. We do not indulge. No, you do not indulge, for, perhaps, you never had a chance. No bewitching eye has ever looked love at you, no pressure of the hand ever aroused the flame. Yet you condem the passionate, who loved and erred and fell. You forget you have never been sharply tempted, or if you were, some kindly lack of opportunity saved you from yielding. There are some of us who pride ourselves upon the fact that we are not the sons and daughters of a tinker, of a butcher or a baker, but boast that the blood of a noble ancestry courses our veins. Rot! your ancestors are feeding the worms, and if we only go back far enough, and examine close enough, we would find that they ate with their fingers and lived in a cabin, and stole a sheep occasionally from their neighbor. Don't boast about your great grand dad, it isn't safe. The world doesn't care a button about him; it's you they reckon with. Some of us are troubled with excessive piety, and the man who does not attend church is at once a sinner; but somehow or other he is somethimes straighter in business than many of us pious ones. Some of us turn up our noses when we read of the man who stole, who embezzled, who defrauded, who made false entries. We wouldn't do anything like that. Perhaps we are honest just because we have never had a good chance to rob; or, perhaps, we are crooked and have never yet been found out in our little game. We would hate to trust a lot of these pious ones, if there were a few hundred in it, and no one was looking, and no one would squeal. Some of us are proud in our boast, that we are no fools, we never get drunk, never knew the taste of liquor in our lives. Why, some people are too stingy to buy a drink, and liquor never was any temptation anyway; if it was, they would be in the gutter half the time. It's no credit to you to keep sober. It's the man who fights the appetite and wins that is worth the laurel and not you, sir. Some of us are always sure that we could preach better sermons than the men whose life job it is to do the work. We'd give the devil a taste of his own fire if we were only in the pulpit. But if we ever got on the platform we would get so rattled that we wouldn't know a Bible from a hymn book. Some are not satisfied; our town is too small, and the people too narrow, they are too slow and far behind the times. Perhaps so, but should you go to Toronto, New York or Hong Kong, you would find an environment, unpleasant in some particulars, the people narrow, in many ways, or stingy. The same sun would warm you as here, and the same sky drop the rain, and the same old devil would chase you. Some of us make mistakes, and will the man or woman who has not, please call at the Review office with their photograph that we may run it in the paper and put in the window for the wicked ones to see.

THE FINE FAT FLY

The Board of Health, the City Council cannot be charged with being in league with the doctor and the undertaker, but they are certainly a friend of the fine fat-fly. The garbage question speaks for itself, and also stinks for itself, but as Sir Wilfrid said when Doherty asked for an investigation: "To the pure all things are pure." But garbage, under any other name, will still smell like garbage.

ACTS OF HEROISM

"The Carnegie Hero Fund Commission," is the name of an 84 page green covered book on the table just now. Since this fund was established in 1904 to January 31st, of the present year, $382,868.60 has been paid either to heroes or their dependents, or granted to the relief of sufferers from disasters. Thirteen gold medals have been given, one hundred and forty-eight silver and one hundred and seventy-five bronze. Four thousand six hundred and twenty-one cases have been considered and only three hundred and thirty six granted medals or money. But there are 791 cases pending and of course not a fraction of the heroic actions in the world are recorded. The real hero is seldom proclaimed. He does the deed and disappears. But the synopsis of the 336 book made, money made, medal made heroes, shows that this present age is not lacking in that which our forefathers possessed. They fought the Indians, the wild beasts. We in this day fight the terrors of our civilization.

Act of heroism number eighty-five, for which a lad 18 received a bronze medal and $2,000 for educational purposes to describe, in seven lines.

Lyndon P. Phifer, aged thirteen, schoolboy, saved Paul I, Burrows, aged five, from being run over by a train, Rich Hill, Mo., October 14, 1905. Phifer ran out onto a trestle, released Burrows' foot from between two cross ties, dropped him over the side into a small stream thirteen feet below, and then hung to the end of a cross-tie until the train passed.

Act No. 132 from this green book reads:—

William Raymond, aged thirty-eight, teamster, saved Victor Henry, aged ten, from drowning, Lindsay, Ont., February 27th, 1906. Raymond, although just having recovered from a long siege of pleurisy, went out on weak ice on Scugog River to Henry's assistance, and, after breaking through, swam thirty-five feet to where Henry was in the water. Swimming back to the edge of the ice with him, they were assisted to firm ice by others, who extended a board to them.

For this Raymond got a bronze medal and $200.

And so through the book goes, in event after event of bravery and the power of the red corpuscle.

TROUBLE OVER BRIDGE

Troubles continue to accumulate about the Quebec bridge. Just as Sir Wilfrid Laurier is telling the people of the west that his transcontinental project is going beautifully, the Board Engineers which his Government appointed to design and construct the big bridge falls to pieces.

It consisted of three engineers, and two out of the trio have resigned.

First the Government thought it could allow its Quebec friends to have pickings out of the project. The result of this was that the bridge fell down, 80 men were killed, and nearly $7,000,000 totally lost. The only persons who profited were the Quebec middlemen, who were handsomely paid for the mismanagement which sent four score men to their deaths and put seven million dollars worth of work in the scrap-heap.

The the Government decided to build the bridge itself. It appointed Messrs. Modjeska, of Chicago; Fitzmaurice, of London, G.B., and Vautelet, of Montreal, to design the work, and after a good deal of disagreement and trouble generally, with the Canadian member of the commission, the other two have retired. All admit that Messrs. Fitzmaurice, Modjeska and Vauelet are men of high professional worth in their respective countries. The American and Englishman claimed that after coming to an understanding with the Canadian member of the Board as to the general principles upon which the structure was to be built, changes were suggested and no agreement could be reached between them. The Ottawa authorities called in Messrs. Holgate, Noble and Phelps Johnson to see if harmony could not be restored, and it is stated a compromise was reached and the designs started well on their way. In time, this extra commission having finished its work, retired from service and as far as the public knew about the progress of the plans everything was going along swimmingly. Such, however, was not the case, for upon consulting with their colleagues, Messrs. Fitzmaurice and Modjeska finally reached the conclusion that they could work no longer and consequently forwarded their resignations to the Government at Ottawa. Tenders have been called for at the moment when the Board is disrupted.

THE POINT OF VIEW

ELEGY WRITTEN IN COUNTRY ROAD.

The curfew tolls the knell of parting day,
The lowing herd wind slowly o'er the lea,
The ploughman homeward rides, and on the way
He gayly toots his auto horn at me.
—Chicago Record-Herald.

The boast of limousine and much horse power,
And all that engine and magneto spell
Await alike the inevitable hour—
The paths of speeding lead you to the cell.
—New York Mail.

Here lies his head upon the lap of earth,
A youth to fortune and to fame unknown;
The auto hit him for all it was worth
And then sped on and left him here alone.
—Houston Post.

Haply some hoary-headed swain may say:
"I seen him when he passed and noticed how
He seemed to want to hurry on his way,
I got his number, but fergit it now."
—S. E. Kiser.

Beneath those rugged elms, that yew tree's shade,
Where heaves the turf in many a mould'ring heap,
Each in his narrow cell forever laid,
The pigs and chickens of the hamlet sleep.
—Toronto Star.

Full many a gem of purest ray serene
'Twould take to pay the fines I've had to bear,
And like a rose my wife has blushed unseen
When farmers loosed their tongues on our chauffeur.
—Toronto Globe.

The guardian of the peace—majestic mien,
With thumb o'er shoulder, calm the way portrays,
'Tis to the beak, tribunal of our foes,
And forty dollars backed by thirty days.

LIBEL.
Province, Vancouver.

A novel libel case is now before the courts in Illinois. A pastor in his prayer mentioned the name of a member of his congregation and prayed that he would be made a better man, pay his debts and cease backbiting. The subject of petition demanded a retraction, which was refused and the action followed.

SHOT THE DOCTOR.
Ottawa Journal.

An American patient shot his doctor because he found he was not getting better as quickly as he should. Such Chinese methods, if generally adopted, might reduce a city's sickness even though its introduction lead to many sudden deaths among the medical profession.

ENGLISH BLOOD IN HER VEINS.
Exchange.

In a speech in the Senate on Hawaiian affairs, Senator Depew, of New York, told this story: When Queen Liliuokalani was in England during Queen Victoria's jubilee, she was received at Buckingham Palace. In the course of the remarks that passed between the queens, the one from the Sandwich Islands said that she had English blood in her veins. "How so?" asked Victoria. "My ancestors ate Captain Cook," was the reply.

WHERE SHE FOUND COMFORT.
Lippincott's.

At a prayer meeting held in the backwoods of Rhode Island, testimonies were requested, and a very old woman tottered to her feet.

"I want to tell this blessed company," her voice quavered, "that I have rheumatiz in my back, and rheumatiz in my legs, and rheumatiz in my arms, but I hev been upheld and comforted by the beautiful Bible verse, 'Grin and bear it.'"

The Scotchman could not find his ticket. On the conductor's second round it was still missing.

"What's that in your mouth?" he asked.

Sure enough, there was the missing ticket. The conductor punched it and went his way.

"Ah, weel," said Sandy, in reply to his fellow passengers' banter, "I'm nae sae absent minded as ye wad think. Yon was a very auld ticket, and I was jist sucken aff the date."

CHILD LABOR.
(Joseph Bondy.)

God counts the tears of women; but the tears
That fall from toiling childhood's tired eyes
Are garnered in the darkest deeps of hell
To nurse the roots of evil; from them spring
Vice, crime, contagion, sickness, sorrow, sin
And pestilence, that stalking through the world,
In fetid foulness levies toll on all;
For every tear, full many lives must pay,
For every wrong that childhood's shoulder bear
An hundred generations show the mark,
Ten thousand fold the debt must be repaid.

The Cotton Buyer

How He Traded In the South During the Civil War and Why He Quit.

By ALBERT CHITTENDEN

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

In 1862, when President Lincoln feared that the want of cotton by the English and other foreign manufacturers might lead to intervention, he issued an order to his generals to give every facility in their power to persons desiring to purchase the article and permit them to ship it on the army wagons going north empty for supplies for the troops. At the time cotton could be bought for a song in the south, and before the war closed it had risen to a dollar a pound in the northern states.

I was then young and eager to make money. Having some capital, I went down into Virginia and rode among the plantations in the neighborhood of the Union armies, buying cotton wherever I found an opportunity to get it within our lines and send it north. One day I had been out a few miles beyond the Union vedettes to a plantation where I had been told was stored a large stock of cotton. There was no enemy in that direction, and if there were I considered my vocation a shield against interference, for I was a citizen engaged in assisting the southern planters to turn their cotton into money. I bought fifty bales on condition that I could get transportation for them and rode back to the Union lines.

Something about the arrangement of the camps looked different from what I had left. Indeed, I found a great deal of difference. While I had been away the corps I had left had moved and another had taken its place. The officer of the picket post would not allow me to go where I liked, but took me to the provost marshal, Major Campbell.

I noticed that the moment the provost marshal looked at me he gave a faintly perceptible start. I told him who I was and the business I was engaged in. He listened to my story, then said he would report my case to the general commanding. He left me to do so and was going so long that, tired of waiting, I was about to mount my horse and ride away when a sentry stopped me. I asked him why he detained me, and he said that he had been ordered not to let me leave till the provost marshal returned.

Major Campbell rode up as I was talking with the sentry. He asked me to come into his tent and, getting out the army demijohn, invited me to have something. He chatted in a familiar way, seeming much interested in my cotton purchases and asking me a number of questions pertaining to the business. He told me that the general would like to see me, but was too busy to receive me till the next day.

I had left my belongings at a house a short distance in rear of the army, and when the conversation lagged I arose and said I would ride there, return in the morning and call on the general. Major Campbell said that there was no necessity for me to go away, since he would be happy to give me a cot in a tent with a subaltern officer and my meals at his mess. But I said I wished some clean linen and would prefer to go. At that he told me as politely as possible that the general had directed him to bring me to his headquarters the next day and he would not dare risk losing me.

This was equivalent to telling me that I was a temporary quasi prisoner. Nevertheless I did not think much of the matter, for if permitted to go I might find it inconvenient to return. In that event the major would be liable to censure for disobedience of orders. So I made a virtue of necessity, saying that I would be happy to accept his hospitality.

During the evening I played the army game with the major and several other officers in his tent, the army game being draw poker, with greenbacks in lieu of chips. Somehow it seemed to me that I was an object of interest. Every now and again an officer would come to the tent to look over the game. But, glancing up at these gentlemen, I invariably noticed their eyes fixed on me rather than on the cards. I was puzzled. What was there about a civilian engaged in cotton buying to interest officers of the army? However, the game interested me, and speculation of this kind did not take root in my mind. We played till midnight, when the party broke up, and I was conducted by my tent mate to my place of rest. I noticed that he kept an eye on me while I took off my outer clothing and did not take it away till I stood in my undergarments.

While going to sleep the circumstances of my detention, the interest I had excited, this watchfulness of my tent mate, altogether found a firmer lodgment in my brain. Yet as I pondered over the matter I could not think of one act sufficiently noticeable to signify anything in particular. As for my visit to the general the next day, it might be an advantage. I had expected to arrange for cotton transportation with the quartermaster. Possibly I might derive some advantages by interesting the general in what I was doing.

The next morning I waited till 11 o'clock for Major Campbell to take me to the general, when, becoming impatient, I asked him the cause of the delay. He told me that the general was busy. I inwardly cursed these military nabobs who made every one await their pleasure and were treated by their subordinates as princes of the blood, if not sovereigns. It was not till 3 in the afternoon that the major told me to mount my horse and go with him.

We found the general about to ride out on a tour of inspection, and I was invited to join him. I did so, and for awhile he kept me beside him, asking me what seemed to me a lot of stupid questions. I tried to tell him about my cotton buying, but he wouldn't listen to it. He seemed more interested in learning where I had been during the day I had come into his lines and the day before that and as far back as I could remember. Then suddenly he ceased to take any further interest in me or my whereabouts and, calling his chief of staff, waved me back with the others.

Major Campbell rode with us—why I didn't know, for he was not of the general's personal staff. Judging from his interest in me, I fancied that he might have been brought along for the purpose of entertaining me. He kept calling my attention to this feature of the position and telling me things about the number and disposition of the troops. They would not have interested me in the slightest had not his statement of the different divisions and brigades he declared were on the ground appeared much overdrawn. But why should he bother me at all with these matters, and why should he desire to make it appear to me that the army was stronger than it really was? I was a citizen with no military knowledge whatever and was content that these fiery soldiers should slaughter one another ad lib. provided I could make a fortune.

The general called Major Campbell to him and said something in an undertone. Then the major dropped back beside me. As he left the general the latter said loud enough to be heard:

"That plan would never do in the world. He who has eyes to see can see for himself. I'll issue the order as soon as I get back to headquarters."

I had no idea what this meant, nor did I take any interest in it. I was getting disgusted at being kept idle all this while by these autocratic military men. I wanted to get at the quartermaster, since the general took no interest in my business affairs, and secure transportation for the last lot of cotton I had bought.

But a terrible surprise was in store for me. We had no sooner got back to camp than I was placed under arrest, with two soldiers standing over me, ready to shoot me at the slightest provocation. I was not only indignant—I was frightened. No officer came near me, so that I was unable to ask any one what it all meant, except my guards, who told me that all they knew about it was that they had orders to shoot me if I made the slightest move to escape.

The first information as to my real position I received was when an officer approached me and began to read from a paper he held in his hands. I was too agitated at first to listen to or understand it, but presently I gathered from it that I was charged with being a spy and was to be tried for that offense by drumhead court martial that very evening.

Everything now gradually became plain to me. On the supposition that I had come into their lines for the purpose of gaining information the provost marshal had reported the fact to the general, leaving word that I should not be permitted to go away. The matter of my identity being suppostitious, I was not to know that I was suspected until they were sure of their case. This accounted for the interest I had excited and for my tent mate watching me while I took off my clothes. He wished to know if I was armed. Then while on the tour of inspection they had thought of permitting me to go back to where I came from to report a greater force than they mustered. But the general had quashed this plan, saying, "He who has eyes to see can see for himself." The order he said he would issue was for my trial, which also meant execution.

In the evening I was taken into a large tent where a number of officers sat around a pine table lighted with candles. One of them stated that I had been lurking about their camps and had been arrested. But before being placed in proper confinement I had taken to my heels, tearing up a paper as I ran. I had escaped, but the bits of paper collected had contained drawings of their position and memoranda of the number of their troops.

An officer acted as my counsel, but as he knew no more about me than the others his defense was worthless. Unfortunately I had recently sent a lot of business papers north that would have proved my identity. As it was I was mistaken for some one they had their grip on before and who they supposed was still plying his vocation as spy under the guise of a cotton buyer.

I was condemned to be shot in an hour. Ten minutes before the time appointed for my execution an officer rode up and called out:

"We've retaken that fellow who got away last week. He's been concealed by a southerner."

The moment he looked at me he started back in astonishment.

"I'd have sworn," he said, "that I left you only a few minutes ago. You must be his twin brother."

I was not "his twin brother," but when I saw him the next morning just before he was shot I saw that his resemblance to me was remarkable.

I had had enough of cotton buying. I concluded to go north and recover from the shock I had received.

A BRAVE GIRL.

Her Terrible Experience While on a Smuggling Expedition.

This tale of heroism displayed by a young woman engaged in smuggling contraband goods over the Swiss-Italian border comes from Geneva: "Mlle. Poretti, aged eighteen, and her brother, aged twenty-three, left Swiss territory to cross the Baldisco pass carrying contraband goods into Italy. On the summit they were overtaken by a violent snowstorm and were soon in deep snow. The Porettis roped themselves, the young man leading. They lost their way, and while attempting to find the path Poretti fell through the snow into a crevasse into which he nearly dragged his sister. The girl, however, planted her ice ax in the snow and withstood the shock.

"Early the next morning several smugglers crossing the pass from Swiss territory into Italian found the young girl near the ordinary route taken by smugglers and recognized her at once, as she belonged to a smuggler's family and lived at Chiavenna. The smugglers at once drew up the brother, but found that he had died during the thirteen hours his sister had held him by the rope. He had received severe injuries in the head, and his body was frozen.

"The smugglers carried down the brave girl, who was almost unconscious, as well as the dead body of her brother, and notified the Poretti family at Chiavenna. On reaching the valley the girl had recovered sufficiently from her terrible experience to explain that she and her brother had spoken for several hours after the accident and at last he had said that he felt nothing and wanted to sleep.

"A warm night followed the snowstorm, or two dead bodies would have been found. Under the great strain the rope had cut through the girl's clothes and her waist was bleeding when she was rescued."—Chicago News.

A Descendant of "Jack Horner."

Mrs. Herbert Gladstone, the wife of the newly appointed Governor-General of the South African Union, is in many respects one of the most remarkable women of the highest official circle in England. In the eyes of the English-speaking youth of South Africa, not the least of this brilliant lady's claims to distinction lies in the fact, that through her father, the late Right Hon. Sir Richard Horner Paget, she is actually a descendant of "Little Jack Horner," of Christmas pie notoriety. This hero of the popular nursery rhyme was a steward of Glastonbury Abbey in 1553, and all visitors to the celebrated fane are shown Jack Horner's tomb, etc., etc. Sir Richard Horner Paget, Mrs. Gladstone's father, who in his younger days was for some years in Canada on service with his regiment, H. M. 66th Foot, was one of the great country squires of England, representing various divisions of his native county, Somersetshire, in the House of Commons from 1865 to 1895. He served for a time in the Salisbury Cabinet and was created a baronet in Patents.

The Patent Office issued 6,395 patents in the fiscal year 1909. Of this number 903 were granted to Canadian citizens, and 72 per cent. of the whole issue to citizens of the United States. Besides those pictured, other provinces of the Dominion obtained the following patents: Saskatchewan 32, Alberta 28, Nova Scotia 24, New Brunswick 18, Yukon 4, and Prince Edward Island 3. The principal foreign countries to whose citizens patents were granted were: United States 4,602, Great Britain 346, Germany 215, France 59, Australia 58, Sweden 40, New Zealand 36, Austria 33, Transvaal 12. The ratio of population to each patent granted shows that Ontario secured one patent to every 4,769 residents; Quebec, one to every 8,575; British Columbia, one to every 5,095; Manitoba, one to every 5,535; while in New Brunswick the ratio was one to 18,746; Nova Scotia, one to 19,391, and Prince Edward Island, one to every 33,668. The total revenue of the Patent Office for the fiscal year was $176,692.05.

Strong on Conversation.

The Winnipeg city fathers followed with the closest interest Jim Conmee's legislation at Ottawa and even had representatives at Parliament Hill to see that the city's power privileges on the Winnipeg River were not interfered with. When word came that the bill was killed, one of the City Council framed a telegram to be sent to Hon. Clifford Sifton, congratulating him on his stand. This particular member, while a good councillor, like a good many Western oldtimers did not have educational opportunities in his youth. He had the telegram addressed, "Hon. Clifford Sifton, chairman of the conversation committee, Ottawa." A newspaperman, however, pointed out that there was a slight difference between "conversation" and "conservation," and the telegram was changed in time.

THE MASONIC GRAND LODGE

Opened at Belleville This Morning —Peterborough Represented

The fifty-fifth annual communication of the Grand Lodge of Canada, A.F. & A.M., was opened at Belleville this morning. The attendance is not expected to be as large as usual this year. It is stated that the hotel accommodation is not adequate enough for a large gathering, and the G.T.R. strike deters some from attending. There will be no elections this year for the principal offices. M. W. Bro. D. T. MacWatt, of Sarnia, will be re-elected to the position of Grand Master, and Rt. W. Bro. Aubrey White, of Toronto, will retain the office of Deputy Grand Master. The Grand Treasurer and Grand Secretary's offices will again be filled by Mt. W. Bro. E. T. Malone and Rt. W. Bro. R. L. Gunn, who are regarded as fixtures in their respective offices.

The position of Senior Warden will likely go to Belleville, although there are six contestants in the field.

The position of Grand Junior Warden is of interest to local Masons, as it is hoped that W. Bro. H. R. H. Kenner, of this city, will grace that chair.

There will likely be a contest for the position of D.D.G.M. of this district, but the office will likely go a member of one of the lodges at the front.

Rt. Wor. Bro. W. H. Walkey and Wor. Bro. A. P. McLean, of this city, are in attendance at the Grand Lodge.

It is altogether likely that Toronto will be selected as the place of meeting of the next Grand Lodge.

The Peterborough Light and Power Co. have moved their office to the Lundy Block, opposite the Opera House.

THE QUESTION OF THE HOUR

Most of them accepted the inevitable without complaint. Some of them gave the boss barber a serious piece of their minds, while others jokingly remonstrated over the five cent raise.

The man from the rurals, who is not blessed with a daily paper clutched his quarter like a drowning man holds on to his straw before the smooth tonsorial artist could persuade him that the price has been put up all over the town by general agreement. Even then he had to be shown the printed card before he was convinced.

The commercial man complain of high living and small business and the man with the razor hadn't a single story in which he was interested.

And what does it amount to after all? Five cents a month at the most, or sixty cents a year.

Sixty cents—why some men have been known to put more on a collection plate than that.

The Steamer Otonabee will leave Wolfe St. Wharf to-morrow, Thursday, July 21st on the arrival of the 11.28 C. P. R. train from Toronto, calling at all points on Stoney Lake, Burleigh Falls, Bobcaygeon, Buckhorn and Fenelon Falls Refreshment booth and dining-room accomodation on board the steamer.

BRIDE OF FEW MONTHS ASSAULTED BY HUSBAND

Two young people who were, some months ago, united in marriage, were present at the police court this morning.

The young wife had charged her husband with assaulting her, but as she was called to the witness box, Chief Thompson explained to his Worship Magistrate Dumble, that she wished to withdraw the charge.

The Magistrate, without enquiring into the particulars of the trouble, consented to this being done, but took advantage of the occasion by handing out some good advice to the erring husband.

"If the charge had been proved against you," said his Worship to the young man, "I would send you to jail, but as your wife is willing to forgive you, it is not my wish to stand between you and her."

The Garbage Question Still

AN ARTICLE OF INTEREST

The Trent Valley Waterway Written up in July Number of Rod and Gun

The July number of Rod and Gun contains an article by Rupert S. Donell, on the Trent Valley Waterway. It is both interesting and instructive, and is illustrated by reproductions from photos, of scenes in which local people may be seen. The photos were taken by Mr. R. M. Roy.

THOSE WEEDS

Chief of Police Thompson wishes to inform citizens in general that they must conform with the statutes regarding weeds on their property. In certain parts of the city vacant properties have heavy crops of weeds. These must be cut down. The weeds are also conspicuous on tenanted properties. These must be done away with.

The Peterborough Light and Power Co. have moved their office to the Lundy Block, opposite the Opera House.

TRAINS ARE RUNNING YET

Inconvenience Rather Than Serious Trouble is all That is Experienced so far--How Local Conditions are Affected

While the condition of affairs naturally cripples things on the G.T.R. the service is much better than, for instance, the local papers were at the time of the printers' strike.

The passenger trains all made connections in a fairly satisfactory way although they did not run on the time card schedule.

Station Agent Frank Sandy acted as conductor on the Lakefield train last night and this morning. Conductor Adams was on the Belleville run and Trainmaster Dan McMillan was on the Toronto train.

Conductor Adams is the only union man in this district, it is stated, who did not go out with the other strikers.

WHAT THE MERCHANTS SAY.

At the present time the local merchants are not experiencing any great trouble as a result of the strike on the Grand Trunk Railway. "We are being held back by the non-arrival of goods which come by freight," said one merchant to the Review to-day, "but the express goods are being handled fairly well."

ANOTHER ROUTE.

While some of the tourists for the lakes are coming in this way, the majority are going around by Bobcaygeon via Lindsay and making boat connections.

MAIL MATTER.

The mail continues to come in satisfactorily as only from a few points is it kept back.

EXCURSIONS CANCELLED.

An excursion from Oshawa, under the auspices of the Methodist church, which was to have come here this week has been cancelled and the West Ends will not go to Lindsay on Saturday. It was expected that the Oshawa excursion would bring about six hundred to the city.

BOATS CARRY FREIGHT.

More freight is being carried by the boats, which call at the Wolfe street wharf and the service has been changed somewhat to meet the demands.

THE LATEST THIS AFTERNOON

July 20 Special to Review

TORONTO.

Special to the Review.

Toronto, July 20.—There is little change in the situation in connection with the Grand Trunk trainmen strike to-day. Passenger trains are still running practically on time. Only a few being late. None have been cancelled. No attempt, however, is being made to handle freight. Milk trains which yesterday did not get in until 12 o'clock, were only 20 minutes late arriving this morning. Several carloads of fruit and vegetables also arrived this morning in good time. No disturbance of any kind has taken place as yet.

MONTREAL.

Special to the Review.

Montreal, July 20.—Locally there is no change in the Grand Trunk strike situation. The company claims to be well satisfied with the progress of events all along the line and so do the men. The company reports the only acts of violence against the company were at Island Pond, Vt., and Niagara Falls. Passenger trains are for the most part running as usual, and the company states that its local suburban service will be resumed this afternoon. One of the chief troubles is with perishable freight, which was in transit when the strike was called. A good deal of this will be spoiled.

KINGSTON.

Special to the Review.

Kingston, July 20.—All is quiet at this point in G.T.R. circles, few men are affected by the strike. The suburban is running as usual and the passenger trains are being operated in fair time. No freight trains are running and no freight is being accepted at the sheds here.

WAS MAKE A SUB DEACON OF THE CATHOLIC CHURCH

An interesting ceremony was performed at St. Peter's Cathedral this morning at 7 o'clock Mass, the occasion being the ordination of Rev. Fergus O'Brien, of Downeyville, into the office of sub-deacon.

His Lordship Bishop O'Connor conducted the ceremonies.

Rev. O'Brien is a student of St. Michael's College, Toronto, and also of the Grand Seminary, Montreal.

To-morrow morning at the same hour he will be ordained a deacon.

To the City Sewers Polluting the River—Hint That They Will Take Proceedings to Have Practice Stopped by by Following Suit of Stony Lake People.

The farmers along the Otonabee river have a grievance.

They claim that the water is being polluted by the city sewage. They have been agitated over the matter for some time and claim that they will take action to have what they term the nuisance, abated.

To the Review to-day Ald. Gillespie stated that while no formal protest had been lodged with the City Council, he had heard those affected had intimated their intention to complain.

THE FARMERS' COMPLAINT.

"Stony Lake people are complaining that the hotels are polluting those waters, and I think we have a right to the same protection that will be accorded them by the Provincial Board of Health, which will take steps to have the practice stopped at the lakes. Our cattle have to drink out of the river and we don't want the milk and butter contaminated," said a farmer to the Review to-day.

Mr. Willis Chipman, C.E., the city's consulting engineer for the new sewage system, in the south end, states that the inauguration of another system for the disposal by other means would entail considerable expense to the city.

The Peterborough Light and Power Co. have moved their office to the Lundy Block, opposite the Opera House.

$2,500 SALARY

As Provincial Manager now, two-and-a-half years ago hardware clerk at $8 per week, and who was a farmer's son, 23 years of age and without pull. Six month's training in one of our branches and two year's faithful services to his company made the difference.

The difference between the big big men and the little men, the successful and the unsuccessful—is only a difference of training. We have transformed thousands of little men into big men.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

The Review does not hold itself responsible for opinions expressed by its correspondents

To the Editor of the Review.

Sir,—Permit me to make a few remarks in your valuable paper as a property owner on George street. I have all my property connected with sewer, water and gas. But at the time I think we are making a mistake. We are not ready for permanent street making, yet our taxes are too high now. The streets will have to be broken up yet for different purposes.

Yours truly,
J. P. METHERAL.

To the Editor of the Review.

Sir,—I attended the splendid concert given by the Salvation Army Band last evening at Victoria Park, but there was something that did not go very well together with the beautiful night and music. There was a very disagreeable odor as I walked along Water street, between Brock and Murray streets, and it had the tell-tale odor of tin cans and other garbage. Why should this be?

Yours truly,

HAPPENINGS IN HAVELOCK

Cheese Market—Baseball Match—Injured—Personals

Special to the Review.

Havelock, July 20.—Tuesday was cheese day for the factories surrounding here, and the usual large amount was shipped. Besides this, on account of no shipment from Campbellford, owing to the railway strike, all the cheese that is generally shipped from there was brought here. Over two cars were loaded by Tuesday night, and many more loads were on the way. Many loads were received from cheese factories, twenty-five miles one great inconvenience of the strike.

C.P.R. BEING USED

All the passenger trains through here were very heavily loaded on Tuesday, a large number of G.T.R. passengers travelling over this line.

ENTRANCE SUCCESS.

Mr. D. L. Somerville, a former principal of the Havelock school, now of the Bethany school, was successful in passing all the pupils of his entrance class, ten in number, notwithstanding the large percentage of failures throughout the province. Three of his entrance pupils were successful in taking honors.

OFF THE TRACK.

While a freight train was entering the yards from the east on Sunday night the tender of the engine left the track. It took some time to get it back on the rails again.

Mr. and Mrs. H. T. Andrews spent last week at their cottage at Round Lake.

Mr. Wm. Backus has gone into camp at Round Lake.

Mr. John Beaver is having an addition put to his barber shop on Oak street, and when completed will move his pool tables from the Jeff's Block to the new building.

A number from town took in the excursion to St. Anne's on Tuesday.

BASEBALL MATCH.

Havelock and Trent Bridge met on Friday night last in a very interesting baseball match at the Havelock Park, the result being a victory for the local team by a score of 16—3. The visitors were somewhat handicapped by a lack of practice and other things but succeeded in putting up a better game than the score would indicate. The battery for the summer resort people was Hornicbrooke and Christie of the Queen City Sluggers. The line-up of the local team was: C. Robson, c; T. Wilson, p; Jas. Black, 1b; Simpson, 2b; L. Bennet, 3b; Stewart, ss; P. Innis, lf; Geo. Black, rf; Wm. Falkner, cf. Umpire—Mr. Ernest Bennet.

SPORTING NEWS

OLD CY. YOUNG THE WINNER OF 500 GAMES

Washington, July 19.—The veteran pitcher, Cy Young, won the 500th game of his long career to-day, when Cleveland defeated Washington in the second game of a double-header, 5 to 2. The contest went eleven innings, Young allowing but one hit in eight. In addition to pitching brilliantly, Young made Milan chase almost to the centre field fence for his long hit in the eighth, the catch killing off a sure triple. Young has worked in something like 800 games. His victory to-day made his 500th, and he appears capable of going through the season in winning form. In the first game to-day Gray allowed but four scattered hits, and Washington blanked Cleveland, 7 to 0.

THE RACES AT LINDSAY

SPORTING COMMENT

Rev. G. L. Morrill, pastor of the People's church of Minneapolis, electrified his congregation Sunday morning by preaching upon the sermon topic "Why Jeffries Lost," treating his novel theme from the standpoint of the sporting writer. "There are five reasons why Jim Jeffries lost the fight to Johnson," said the pastor "He is too old, and he has been out of the game too long. He lived a life of luxury during his period of non-fighting, and that did not help him Then again he was surrounded by a bunch of fool trainers who did not give him the right kind of training for a fight. Another reason is Jeffries' race hatred. He was so anxious to win from the black man, hated him so vigorously that he couldn't do himself justice for fear that he would lose." Mr. Morrill declared flatly that he was in favor of pugilism. He said he believed in it as a manly sport, tending to bring out many of the best things in human beings. "I wish that I could see the fight pictures," he said. "I couldn't see the fight, but I donot think it is right for any governor or any mayor to stop the presentation of the pictures."

It happens in other places besides this city. The Lindsay Warder, in foretelling the probable line-up of the home team which will play the West Ends next Saturday, says:—A new player in town, a Mr. Day, who hails from New Brunswick, will in all likelihood be in uniform. He is a catcher, but has held down other positions, and is stated to be a good one."

Mr. Day may be a good one, and then again he may not. Give the town boys a chance.

Otto Moore, the second baseman of the Montesano team, Washington State League, has been unconscious for twenty-four hours and will probably die as the result of being struck by a pitched ball during the Aberdeen-Montesano game at Montesano Sunday. Moore, who was at bat, attempted to dodge a curved ball which he thought about to hit him. Instead, however, he jumped directly into the course of the ball.

The City League might make a similar step as has been taken in the Western Canada Baseball League. Out in the wheat country, when the leading club was away ahead, the schedule was dropped and another one commenced. Should another club win this schedule the championship of the league will be decided by one game or a series between the two clubs.

Now that Peterborough has secured the Penman meet for Labor Day, those who will be in charge should get together and get thoroughly organized. The co-operation of the athletes in the city is necessary, for while there will be performances by some of the gems in the athletic world, the grandstand will want to see local talent in action, and to make an impression there must be some good work done.

Dan Patch has been permanently retired from the racing and speed exhibition stage. M. W. Savage, his owner, is authority for the statement that Dan Patch will never again be asked to start in attempts to lower world's records. He says the great horse has done his share of work and that his life from this time on will be spent in enjoying a well-earned rest in watching other harness horses struggle to lower his records.

They were seated in the parlor and the lights were burning dim;
He was a diamond hero—she was a fan quite fair and trim,
But they knew not as he opened up
the game by murmuring "Love,"
That father was the umpire, on the stairway just above.

"I like your form"—he led off first—with me you've made a hit—
You've got the curves, you've got the speed and you are looking fit—
Now, if with you, my turtle dove, I make a hit likewise,
Won't you improve my single state,
and make a sacrifice?

"I'll never play too far off base," he whispered in her ear—
"My salary whip has got the stuff to put 'em over, dear,
Just give the signal for a steal and
I'll no longer roam,
And when I slide into the plate, please call me safe at home.

"I've got to have the dope, complete,"
the maiden softly sighed;
"Show me your batting average in Mr.
Bradstreet's Guide.
It takes a lot of speed these days with cunning and intrigue,
To win a battle now and then within the Grocers' League.

"But give me errorless support"—his heart here took a bound—
"And let me live in big league style and I may come around;
Unwarp the tangle from the dope and you can cop the bet,
We'll play a double-header, pal, on any date you set."

He started warming up at once, and with a happy sigh
He whipped a fast one round her neck
—the other was waist high;
But here the umpire butted in—the said "Oh father, please Don't call him out, he's showing me
the way they work the squeeze."

The old man gave an irate snort and said: "I'll help the fun,
By showing him another play that's called the hit and run."
He swung like Wagner at his best—a soul-inspiring clout—
The Son of Swat slid down the steps—
the umpire called "You're out!"

Madrid, July 20.—Troops, backed by rapid fire guns, yesterday were ordered on guard at the coal mine quit by workers on general strike late on Monday in the Bilboa region.

Killed In Drunken Row.

Chatham, July 20.—As a result of a drunken row in the east end of the city among the colored people, Jacob Enos, colored, lies dead at the morgue with a bullet wound through his eye, and Guy Needham, also colored, is in a dangerous condition at his home on West King street, with a razor slash extending all the way across his stomach.

The participants in the row are for the most part released penitentiary men.

Accounts In Bad Shape.

New Westminster, B.C., July 20.—According to the report of Auditor M. B. Cotsworth, who has been investigating the finances of the city, a state of affairs of a most unsavory character has been disclosed.

"Most of the account books," said the auditor, "evidenced the lack of both system and thoroughness. Errors were frequent, but could have been avoided.

"I regret to find that the allowances of unauthorized rebates have prevailed to a very serious extent during the past six years, thus losing the city such large amounts as may be estimated in the respective departments from the following basis:

"From city taxes, $14,327; lighting, $16,115; water, $24,815; total, $55,257, after allowing for special rebates duly authorized by council.

"Part of these rebates have apparently been allowed to some ordinary taxpayers, along with the more regular schemers, through the laxity with which the city authorities and officials unwarrantably extended the dates for discounts or rebates beyond those definitely fixed by the respective bylaws which only the ratepayers by collective vote had power to alter."

THE QUALITY OF MILK IS OF HIGH STANDARD THIS YEAR

Said Inspector Warde in Remarks to Cheese Board—10 15-16 Cents Was the Best Price—3763 Boxes Boarded

The buyers present at the Cheese Board meeting this morning were: Messrs. James Cook, G. A. Gillespie, Watkins, Fitzgerald, Kerr, Weir and Morton. 3,763 boxes were boarded, but three factories refused to sell, on account of the inconvenience in shipping, owing to the strike on the G.T.R. Lakefield, Pine Grove and Young's Point preferred to keep them rather than have to bring them so far. They were offered by one buyer, 10 7-8 cents, irrespective of where shipped, but they refused and they went unsold.

Mr. R. W. Warde, Inspector of the cheese factories, was present at the meeting this morning, and made a few remarks previous to the buying. So far, he said, the season had been a very successful one. While the prices may not be just what the farmers expected, the quality of the milk this year was much better than the last two years. If the milk produced was good the cheese would be.

For further selections Mr. Gillespie bid 10 7-8 cents, and Mr Fitzgerald raised to 10 15-16 cents. He called Warminster, Selwyn, Warsaw, Myrtle, East Emily, Cedardale and Fleetwood.

Mr. Fitzgerald bid 10 7-8 for further choice, and Mr. Kerr bid the same for the balance of the board, taking Oakdale, Daisy D., King Edward, Maple Leaf, Ormonde, Lang, Fraserville, Indian River, North Dummer, Cavanville, Norwood and Killarney. Lakefield, Pine Grove and Young's Point refused to sell.

WHAT THE NEWSPAPERS ARE SAYING ABOUT STRIKE

WHEN WILL IT END?

Lindsay Post.

When will it end? is the query that is heard on all sides. Local citizens are already beginning to grumble about the non-arrival of their mail matter, and there was considerable disappointment expressed when the Toronto papers failed to arrive. A bundle of Toronto Worlds came in by C.P.R., but they were gobbled up as if by magic.

—o—

THE ACT THAT FAILED.

Toronto Star.

There will doubtless be Conservative papers unreasoning enough to claim that the Grand Trunk strike proves the Lemieux Act a failure. On the same principle they would call no physician in case of sickness, because the doctor's visits do not always result in a cure.

—o—

STRIKE ON IN DEAD EARNEST.

Lindsay Warder.

The strike is on—and on in dead earnest.

Every Grand Trunk conductor, brakeman and yardman, with one single exception, in Lindsay, went out on strike last evening at 9.30 o'clock in compliance with the strike order issued by the men's representatives in Montreal.

The strike caused quite a stir in Lindsay, which is considered to be one of the strong railroad towns in the province. This morning the citizens could be seen gathered on the streets in small groups discussing the situation. It is many years since the citizens of Lindsay displayed such a keen interest in a strike. This strike of the G.T.R. men will hit home. It becomes of vital interest to the merchants and the townspeople in general of Lindsay, and the result is awaited with deep interest.

The Warder was informed by Mr. Price, of the roundhouse, this afternoon that by the closing of the roundhouse at Lindsay some thirty-five men will be out of employment. The shop employees feel the matter especially keenly, as they are deprived of work at a busy time through no fault of their own. It is stated that the shops on the system have been closed because the Grand Trunk feel that they have a tremendous industrial dispute to fight, and it will take all the available funds, and they will have to concentrate their energies on this end of the matter, leaving the work of the shops as a secondary consideration.

—o—

FROM MONTREAL.

The Witness, Montreal.

To an observer with no other object or interest than impartiality, the strike on the Grand Trunk Railway system seems nothing short of reckless and callous. Mr. Hays, the president of the company, agreed to some very substantial increases of wages, and to give the very utmost the company could afford, if it was to keep solvent; but because some lines with better earning powers, and possibly, as a result, more intense work for their trainmen, are paying a higher rate of wages than the Grand Trunk system, the men insisted on their extreme demands. One consequence of their act is to put thousands of men in the Grand Trunk shops out of employment, and to cause loss to them and their families through no fault of their own. Another most serious consequence will be more or less disorganization of the freight traffic at a most critical time. But the strikers appear not to mind how much blood is lost to the company, so long as they may hope to cut off their pound of flesh. They are said to have plenty of money and to be determined, and as the company appears to be determined too, the fight threatens to be a prolonged one. It is to be hoped that it will be marked by no such lawlessness as strikes so often engender.

—o—

EXCURSIONS CANCELLED

Port Hope Guide.

The strike on the G.T.R. caused the cancellation of three excursions from Port Hope to-day, one to St. Annes, another to the Thousand Islands, and a third to Marsassauga Park by the employees of the Standard Ideal factory. More than a thousand persons had prepared to take in the latter excursion, and the announcement that the train had been cancelled came as a bitter disappointment to the waiting crowd.

BAD FOR FARMERS.

Mail—This agricultural province, which is the field of the Grand Trunk's heaviest, densest and most profitable traffic, is at the beginning of one of the best harvests it has reaped for years. A considerable part of the grain now being taken off will be offered as freight within the next few weeks, for the market holds out tempting prices and the farmers can make use of the money. It is usually desirable that the output of butter and cheese go forward from primary hands nearly as soon as it is ready for consumption. Cheese factories and creameries have, of course, their own facilities for keeping stock in store, but it is of great advantage to them to be able to ship stuff at a moment's notice, and certainly it means much to one or other of the parties to a transaction that delivery be made at the time specified in the contract. A considerable volume of small fruits is likewise coming to maturity every day, and the movement of these may be interfered with as a consequence of the strike. At this time of year, too, the passenger traffic on the Grand Trunk is large. The strike will tend to diminish this traffic, for unless people are assured that the conductors, brakemen and yardmen are competent and trustworthy there will be reluctance to take chances on the lines. A road that is either short of men in these departments of its service or is dependent upon raw hands is at a disadvantage for doing a passenger business.

INCONVENIENCE COMMUNITY.

Globe.—It is impossible to stop or even measurably paralyze a great transportation system without causing an enormous amount of inconvenience to the community at large.

While the disruption of passanger traffic is the first to be felt, because it interferes with the habit of moving freely about the country, the disruption of freight traffic is really the more disturbing of the two. The strike stays milk trains, cattle trains and food cars in transit, and no one can estimate the amount of misery that will be inflicted on those who can least endure the consequent deprivation; children and invalids. Business will be thrown into a state of confusion over the whole country. Orders will be countermanded, goods will fail of delivery, delayed payments will derange settlements and impair the circulation of money. A great responsibility rests on the parties to this calamitous deadlock, which everyone outside of the disputing bodies will regard as entirely unnecessary. When the strike occurred all the means of finding a solution had not been exhausted.

TOO BAD.

Stratford Herald.

We cannot but regret that our laws fail to provide some court of arbitration to which both parties in such cases must refer their differences, abiding by the result. Where one of the parties is a common carrier and interferences with its services means suspension of means of transportation, the public at large is made an interested party to an extent which would justify preventive measures, at the same time ensuring fair play and justice to both sides.

AN OPINION.

Hamilton Herald.

Its' an unconditional surrender that the G.T.R. trainmen require of President Hays. If he declines to grant all that the trainmen demand, they will strike. We think the men are badly advised. Public opinion cannot and will not approve of this uncompromising attitude. If the strike is called, and if it causes much public inconvenience, the blame will have to be borne by the strikers. One result of the trouble may be a general demand for compulsory arbitration of labor disputes in connection with railways with compulsory acceptance of the award of the arbitration board.

—o—

Toronto World.

A serious feature of the railway strike is the possibility of an ice famine in Toronto, and, of course, in other places which are dependent on outside sources for a supply.

Freight traffic is utterly demoralized on the Grand Trunk System. Carloads upon carloads of fruit and other perishable stuff that was accepted before 9.30 Monday night are stalled along the line between Toronto and Sarnia. The great livestock export trade from Chicago which was shipped over the Grand Trunk has been diverted to other lines, and it is said by a minor official that this traffic will be lost for years to the company. The C.P.R. will, it is said, get a considerable slice of this trade under a long contract and will transport the exporters to the port at Montreal.

But the passenger service seems to have recouped remarkably last night, from the chill it took so suddenly night before last.

The mails ought to go through in spite of any strike.

Has the postmaster-general done anything to this end? Has he power to do anything?

The president of the United States ran national mail trains in spite of any strike. But the Canadian prime minister is in the west.

The minister of railways is in the west.

And the mails may be stalled.

Deprecated the Preference.

London, July 20.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—Hon. Mr. Haldane, speaking at the inauguration of the branch Free Trade Union, deprecated the tariff reform preference as perilous to the unity of the Empire. He believed that we are only at the beginning of the unity of the Empire in such things as the Imperial general staff had now accomplished on Imperial navy, Imperial conferences, and all the things that brought the overseas dominions together, each preserving its complete freedom. We have a material medium within which the real unity of the Empire would be achieved.

To Protect Consul.

Bluefields, Nearagua, July 20.—According to advices received at the insurgent headquarters here, conditions at Cape Gracias are unsatisfactory to foreign interests. The representative of the Nicaraguan Government in charge there is said to be anti-foreign character.

The U. S. cruiser Tacoma will sail immediately for the Cape and will leave forty marines there, if such a course proves necessary to protect Edwin W. Trimmock of New York, the United States consul.

A Youthful Anarchist.

Naples, July 20.—A boy of 13, declared to be a full-fledged and fanatical anarchist, hurled a bottle bomb at the Duke of Aosta yesterday while the prince was leisurely proceeding through the streets in his automobile. The bottle just missed the royal head, glancing along the side of the furnishings of the car, which prevented its smashing when it touched the pavement.

Elopers Deported.

Detroit, Mich., July 20.—After being held at Cleveland for two months, Mrs. Elizabeth Darton, 22 years old, of Palmyra, Ont., and Joseph Stanley, 30 years old, of Toronto, were brought to Detroit by Cameron Miller, United States immigration inspector, and deported to Windsor Monday night, where they were arrested on a charge by the woman's husband.

Earl Grey on the Irish Question.

London, July 20.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—It is stated that Earl Grey, before his departure, urged on the Unionists the desirability of settling the Irish question on federal lines. He was questioned before leaving as to whether the public house trust movement had yet spread to Canada, and he said not

DANCE AT CHEMONG PARK

Chemong Park was the scene of a pretty dance last night, given by Mr. and Mrs. Roy, of Peterborough. The pavilion was decorated with jack-o-lanterns, and a very pretty and animated scene resulted, the lights and summer dresses of white showing up prettily against the darker background.

Dancing started about nine o'clock, and continued until one, there being an intermission for refreshments.

A large crowd went to the lakes from Peterborough in a 'bus; there were several rigs in use, and autos were numerous.

Music for the occasion was furnished at different times by Mrs. Roy, Miss Geraldine King, Scott Payton and Thomas Lake.

BASS ARE SMALL

It's only small fry that the bass fishermen in the Otonabee are getting now.

Most of the fish caught are so small that the conscientious angler feels duty bound to return them to the river, and besides, they are hardly worth cleaning. An optimistic fisherman stated this morning that larger ones would be available in a week or two, when the weather got cooler.

AT LAST

The city dads have called a halt;
To take a two months' rest,
And also try to find a way
To fight the house fly pest.

'Tis also said His Nibs, the Mayor,
Will lead his twelve each day,
Around the town, to get some tips
About the garbage fray.

All clad in disinfectant duds,
For fear of taking ill,
Each one will boldly enter yards,
And poke each little hill.

One trip, however, will suffice,
To put the whole crew out,
And then we'll get the garbage law,
And put the flies to route.

PROPERTY REPAINTED

A noticeable change for the better has been made to the property of the Dickson Co., which comprises the offices of the Peterborough Lumber Company, Lewis' barber shop and the Oriental Hotel, on Hunter street.

The whole exterior of the property has been repainted and the lower woodwork grained in a manner that is highly creditable to the company, and Mr. W. H. Bailey, who has been in charge of the work.

VERY STRANGE EVENT

Brandon, July 19.—Hugh Ainsbury, of Rapid City, was brought to the hospital here on Sunday, a victim of a peculiar accident, from which he may lose the sight of an eye. On Saturday Mr. Ainsbury flushed a bittern. The bird flew up, and coming in contact with the telephone wire, dropped to the ground. Mr. Ainsbury advanced to pick up the bird, thinking it dead. He no sooner had it in his hand than it ran its bill right through the ball of his left eye. The shock was so great that Ainsbury collapsed, and when found later by neighbors he was in a critical condition. He was at once removed to the hospital here. It is not known yet whether the eye can be saved.

The Peterborough Light and Power Co. have moved their office to the Lundy Block opposite the Opera House.

Surviving are three sons and two daughters, namely, Harry, of Florida; John and Hugh, of this city, and Mrs. George Prentiss, of Tweed, and Mary, at home.

The funeral will take place on Tuesday afternoon to Little Lake cemetery, and the Rev. Dr. Langfeldt will conduct the funeral service.

POLICE COURT

It was two years since Denis Daly had appeared before and the fall down that he had last night when he imbibed, was excusable.

Denis has been out at Chemong for the past two months, but yesterday he decided on a visit to the city.

He was taken in by P. C. McGinty last night at a time when all good people should be under the quilts.

Two dollars was paid over to the Chief, by a bicyclist, who forgot to remain on the road, and took to the sidewalk.

A Visitor at the Shelter

Mr. Wm. Henry has a visitor at the Children's Shelter this week, in Walter McKenzie, a ward of the society, two years ago. The lad, who is but eleven years of age, has been making his home with Mr. Northey, of Buckhorn, and is getting along nicely. It is worthy of note that he is a visitor at the Shelter at his own request, and is enjoying himself immensely.

While the scout Forward was coaling at Portland she took on board 130 tons in thirty-four minutes, creating a new record.

WHATS ON IN CHEMONG

A WEDDING—REGATTA—PERSONALS

R. J. Dunsmore, of Ottawa, is registered at the lakeside inn.

Bruce Rickey and J. Farrish, of the hotel, report excellent fishing. They caught a 16 1-2 lb. 'lunge opposite the hotel yesterday morning.

A wedding occurred at Chemong yesterday, the uniting parties being Mr. R. Condon, of Edmonton, Alta., and Miss M. Sullivan, of Douro. Mr. W. J. Condon, of Douro, acted as best man. Rev. Cruickshanks officiated.

Miss Marion Grant, of Ottawa, is visiting Miss Isabel Morphet.

Miss Helen Stapleton is staying with Miss Rubina Cumming for a few days.

Roy Dixon, of Peterborough, is spending the month at the lake.

The regatta is already a subject of discussion and there will undoubtedly be a large crowd for the races and the regatta dance.

Mr. Bruce Rickey, proprietor of the hotel at Chemong, is doing everything he can to provide entertainment for his guests at the lake and also for those who are out for the day. The pavilion in front of the hotel is a scene of a pretty little dance at least three times a week.

A garage could do a good business at the lake, there being no less than eight autos out last night. Mr. Denham was out with his new car, F. and H. Cressman, E. Warne, W. B. Patterson, Jack Eastwood and many others.

Aurora, Indiana, is represented at Chemong this summer by a party consisting of Mr. and Mrs. W. T. Howe and Miss Harriet Howe and maid.

Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Root, of Buffalo, New York, and son Harry T. Root and wife, of Richmond, Virginia, are spending two weeks with mine host Rickey. Mr. H. W. Root is cashier of the Manufacturers and Traders National Bank in Buffalo.

A BLAZE OF LIGHT AHEAD DOWN THE RIVER THEY WENT

No more enjoyable evening could have been spent anywhere than on the Otonabee river last evening, and those who embraced the opportunity of attending the moonlight excursion of the Y.W.C.A. enjoyed an evening replete with pleasure.

The ample accommodation on the steamer "Otonabee," the lively numbers rendered by the George street church orchestra, and the cool evening air combined to place all on board in a pleasant physical and mental condition.

The steamer left the Wolfe street wharf at 8 o'clock with about three hundred on board.

The trip down occupied about one hour, the steamer commencing a return trip at 9 o'clock.

During the passage down and back the powerful and penetrating search-light on the boat caused considerable embarrassment and hasty concealment of faces on the part of those on either side of the river, who were enjoying pleasant tete-a-tetes.

The camps of many people on the banks of the river were also illuminated, and many expressions of delight at the pretty scenes presented were made by the passengers.

The only rather annoying feature was the presence of the innumerable little flies, which were attracted by the lights.

Ice cream and other refreshments were liberally patronized.

The steamer reached the wharf at 10.30.

Miss McCalla, the energetic secretary, and the committee in charge are deserving of great praise for making the affair such a great success in all ways.

IF YOU WANT TO FIGHT IT OUT

From the age of 45 years the eyes have undergone a natural change (which no eye escapes), so that they are either out of focus for distance or near vision, especially at night. You cannot see distinctly with the paper a foot from the eyes and you need strong light. Your real need is suitable glasses. If you want to fight this difficulty out with nature you may do so, millions have done it before you and have been worsted in the fight. We are relieving the eyes of such cases every day. Perhaps you will be wise by taking the matter in time.

Ottawa Exhibition

The Central Canada Exhibition has again been brought to public notice by broad posters and gaily colored hangers distributed through the country. Illustrations on these sheets, and the brief story printed there, suggest a magnificent Show for Ottawa. And better still: The visit of a curious newspaperman to the Exhibition Grounds and inquiry among the Fair directors give assurance that the Capital is going to have the biggest one-week attraction in its history. These directors have been working at it ever since the last Fair. Backed up by enterprise, originality and resources, they have completed plans for putting the 1910 Exhibition on a higher plane than any of its predecessors. The dates are Sept. 9 to 17.
